NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLI | EVANSTON, ILL., JANUARY 1, 1915 | No. 1

1915: You have done some mighty fine work on the map of the world, Old Year. I like amazingly the way you painted white all Russia and five states of the United States; but just watch me—if the good people will help, I propose whitening a big section of the map of the Old and the New World.

VOTE ON HOBSON RESOLUTION IN HOUSE RESULTS IN 197 YEAS AND 189 NAYS —CONGRESSMAN HOBSON RECEIVES OVATION—ELOQUENT SPEECHES ON NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION BY CONGRESSMEN HOBSON OF ALABAMA, WEBB OF NORTH CAROLINA, CONNELLY OF KANSAS, LINDQUIST OF MICHIGAN, AND OTHERS—SCROLL OF 5,000,000 SIGNATURES TO RESOLUTIONS EXHIBITED

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D.C.

The great day in Congress has come and gone!

December 22, 1914, will stand out in history. The dawn of a new era for our loved land has been ushered in. The daily press in staring headlines declared, "A big defeat for the dry amendment," but with songs in our hearts we could truthfully respond, "Not a defeat, thank God, but a glorious victory." And why do we say this? It is the first time in the history of our republic that the question of National Prohibition has been discussed upon the floor of either branch of Congress.

In view of the fact that the first effort showed a clean majority of eight, exclusive of pairs, with the President and the Secretary of State against us, with Mr. Underwood, the leader of the Democratic side of the House, Mr. Mann, the leader of the Republican side, and Mr. Henry, chairman of the Rules Committee, all against us and the further fact that no member of the present Congress was elected on this issue, surely this was no defeat. The friends of the measure will no longer be fighting in the dark; for the first time the battle line is fairly drawn.

Crowd Awaits Opening of House

The House convened at 10 a. m. as four hours for discussion had been allowed to each side. At 9:15 a crowd had collected awaiting the opening of the gallery doors, and when at 9:30 we were allowed to enter, in a twinkling every seat was filled. Miss Anna A. Gordon, President of the National W. C. T. U., surrounded by two other National General Officers, a number of state presidents, and a large company of white ribboners of the District of Columbia, with numbers from other states, through the entire day and evening were interested spectators of that truly memorable occasion.

Scroll of 5,000,000 Signatures to Petition

The scroll representing over five million signatures to the resolutions sent to Congress, and which was exhibited at the Atlanta National W. C. T. U. Convention, was festooned above the Speaker's desk, and across the front gallery in full view of the members. In front of the Speaker's rostrum, and facing the seats of members, was a large screen covered with charts showing the effects of the use of alcohol.

Later, in calling attention to the scroll, Mr. Hobson said, "That scroll is simply a record of resolutions adopted at great public meetings. If the petitions themselves sent in were here, they would cover miles in length. Over 5,000,000 American citizens have petitioned on this subject, ten times as many petitioners as ever petitioned any government in the history of the world. Twelve thousand organizations have passed official resolutions."

No Applause Allowed In Gallery

Promptly on the stroke of ten the Speaker's gavel fell; the chaplain offered a fervent prayer, "Let Thy favor be with us in every high resolve, noble impulse, and worthy endeavor, give us the courage of our convictions, assured that Thou wilt deal justly with all who strive to serve Thee and their fellow-man." The Speaker then made the following statement: "The Chair wants to suggest both to the House and to the people in the galleries that there are going to be ten mortal hours of speech-making here today and maybe more, and the Speaker asks the members and visitors to help keep order. No applause is allowed in the gallery." There were times, however, when the enthusiasm of the people got the better of their judgment, but each time the Speaker's gavel came down with a resounding whack, and for a time his orders were heeded only to be again broken and again the reminder was given: "Applause in the galleries is not allowed."

> I know there is danger in confronting this great and powerful enemy, but in time of war the good soldier does not stop because of danger. It may be I am politically dead, my political life destroyed by the liquor interests, but I would rather hold my head up and fight like a man, though I had to die a hundred political deaths. I would rather today do a man's part in the struggle to cut the millstone of degeneracy from the neck of humanity, I would rather do that than to be United States Senator from Alabama, and if I know my own mind, I would rather do that than be President of the United States. I call on you, my colleagues, to hold your heads up in the face of this enemy and be men. In the name of your manhood, in the name of your patriotism, in the name of all that is held dear by good men, in the name of your fireside, in the name of our institutions, in the name of our country, and in the name of humanity and humanity's God, I call on you to join hands with me and each one to do his full duty.

Captain Hobson Receives Ovation

The proceedings were opened by the offering of a rule by Mr. Henry of Texas, for the guidance of the discussion to follow, two hours being allowed for debate on the rule. Mr. Philip Campbell of Kansas was the first speaker in support of the Hobson resolution, and at the end of the two hours, when the resolution came fairly before the House, and Captain Hobson rose, he was greeted with applause from the floor. Sitting just behind him in the gallery was his charming wife with their two older children, Richmond, aged seven, and Lucia, five years, and Mrs. Hobson's father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Hull of Tuxedo, N. Y.

The speeches pro and con continued all day and part of the evening and all members were granted permission to print their remarks in the Congressional Record.

Striking Scene Holds People Spellbound

Sixty addresses, long and short, had been made, until at 10:10 p. m. Captain Hobson again rose to conclude the debate. It was a scene such as has rarely been witnessed even in that historic chamber. The seats on the floor were mostly filled; in the galleries every spot had been filled for hours, the doorways were crowded, people standing on chairs looking over the heads of those in front. The House had then been in session thirteen hours, but if people were tired, they showed no sign of fatigue, and to those of us who had labored, and hoped, and prayed for this day, weariness was not thought of.

Before the vote was finally ordered, Mr. Hobson made the point that under the rules, no member personally or financially interested in the subject before the House, should be entitled to vote. There is one member who is known to own a saloon. Mr. Hobson further said members ought not to vote if they held bonds or stocks in any distillery, or brewery, or if they owned a saloon or property that was used for that purpose. Speaker Clark quoted a ruling by Speaker Blaine in which it was held that every member must decide for himself whether or not he was disqualified from voting. "When it affects an individual," Speaker Blaine had said, "a member might be affected, but where it affects a class a member would not be disqualified."

Captain Hobson concluded by saying, "I know there is danger in confronting this great and powerful enemy, but in time of war the good soldier does not stop because of danger. It may be I am politically dead, my political life destroyed by the liquor interests, but I would rather hold my head up and fight like a man, though I had to die a hundred political deaths. I would rather today do a man's part in the struggle to cut the millstone of degeneracy from the neck of humanity, I would rather do that than to be United States Senator from Alabama, and if I know my own mind, I would rather do that than be President of the United States. I call on you, my colleagues, to hold your heads up in the face of this enemy and be men. In the name of your manhood, in the name of your patriotism, in the name of all that is held dear by good men, in the name of your fireside, in the name of our institutions, in the name of our country, and in the name of humanity, and humanity's God I call on you to join hands with me and each one to do his full duty."

The Final Vote

After a few amendments had been presented and voted down, the final vote was taken, each man answering to his name when the roll was called, the vote resulting 197 in favor of the Hobson resolution, and 189 against; 41 not voting; 10 that were paired would have voted favorably.

As we went out under the stars our hearts rejoiced for the two hundred men who had stood for the right, and most of all for the brave champion who, in the face of such opposition as few men have encountered, stands with head erect facing the foe. His is a determination such as Paul, the Apostle, had when he cried, "Having done all, stand."

We shall probably go right on with the amendment in the Senate.

PROMINENT CONGRESSMEN PLEAD FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

(Excerpts from Addresses in House on Hobson Resolution.)

CONGRESSMAN FRANCIS O. LINDQUIST OF MICHIGAN

The destructive wars of all Europe could never wreck the future progress of a nation as can the curse which we are fighting here today. Never has there been such a call to serve humanity. Never has there been an issue before this House that demanded a truer expression of the highest type of patriotism. Can we, as men who have the honor of representing the greatest Nation in the world, openly deny our people the right of wiping out a curse that not a man in this House can conscientiously claim has a right to exist? And I defy any man with a spark of patriotism to deny our people the privilege of expressing their opinion on this matter, which so greatly concerns the moral welfare of our Nation. Where is there a greater opportunity for the man who believes in conservation? Do not tell me that it is patriotic for any man to stand in this Chamber and preach conservation of our natural resources and then fail to herald with enthusiasm this opportunity to aid in the conservation of humanity.

JOINT RESOLUTION

Introduced in the House of Representatives, December 10, 1913, June 9, 1914, and as Amended December 22, 1914.
By Congressman Richmond P. Hobson.
On December 10, 1913, the Resolution was also Introduced in the Senate by Senator Morris Sheppard.
Proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be and hereby is, proposed to the states, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several states as provided by the Constitution.

Section 1. The sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and exportation for sale thereof, are forever prohibited.

Section 2. The Congress, or the states within their respective jurisdictions, shall have power to enforce this article by all needful legislation.

CONGRESSMAN E. Y. WEBB OF NORTH CAROLINA

National Prohibition would be a destruction to revenue, and big revenues, too, but that is a question that comes up in every prohibition fight. When you want to close the great running sores of society—the barrooms, as any mercenary man will tell you—you lose your revenue and cannot educate your boys unless you get revenue from the barroom. I believe in education, but long ago I came to the conclusion that rather than let my children be educated on barroom money I would let them grow up in ignorance! That leads me to say that as sure as I stand before my friends here today the barroom as a public institution in this country is doomed. The time is coming when the people are not going to permit these open barrooms where boys are lured to their death, where drinking is made attractive, and where they come in contact with the worst element of society. They are going to stop it; many men who drink whisky are going to help stop it, and my belief is that before I reach the age of threescore years and ten, if I live that long, there will not be a legalized barroom in this broad land.

CONGRESSMAN JOHN R. CONNELLY OF KANSAS

Today we issue a challenge and feel free in so doing: We dare you to find a community in the state of Kansas where the abolishing of the sale and manufacture of liquor has permanently increased the taxes raised in other ways, where it has increased the crime in the community or contention among its citizens, where it has increased want and misery among her people or has made it more difficult for men to reap a recompense for their honest endeavor. I know little about the workings of prohibition elsewhere, but when those who are opposed to the principle desire to point out a place where prohibition has been a failure they must leave Kansas out of their calculations.

I am glad to speak today for the splendid commonwealth of prohibition Kansas. A half million boys and girls tread her highways who never saw a place where liquor was legally sold and a hundred thousand of them never saw a drunken man nor do they know the taste of liquor. The older generations are not entirely free from the baneful effects of the liquor habit; but from the loins of that mighty people there is coming into maturity a new generation free from the tyranny of its hurtful reign. May it please God that with the coming of another generation we may not only appreciate the benign influence of statewide prohibition, but may we hope there will soon be no place where a licensed grogshop may find lodgment under the protecting folds of the national flag. For this we dare to hope, for this we dare to pray, for this we dare to vote.

Strike for the green grave of your sires
God and your native land."

"WHY WE EXPECT TO SUCCEED"

FROM MRS. STEVENS' LAST PUBLIC ADDRESS

Some glad day the states in which today is entrenched the liquor system will rejoice that it has been abolished. Science, philanthropy, reform, religion, and the business world are testifying against the liquor traffic. In the light of all this we can see prohibition looming up all the way from Mt. Kineo in the East to Mt. Shasta in the West, from the pine forests in the North to the palmetto groves in the South. We verily believe that the amendment for National Constitutional Prohibition is destined to prevail and that by 1920 the United States flag will float over a nation redeemed from the home-destroying, heart-breaking curse of the liquor traffic.

THOSE EMPTY BUILDINGS IN PROHIBITION TERRITORY

A favorite theme of writers for the liquor journals is the devastating effects on business of prohibition, the large number of men that will be thrown out of employment, and the empty buildings and warehouses. There is, of course, very little basis in fact for these dismal forebodings, which are intended merely to alarm the over-timid voter.

In West Virginia saloon properties and breweries have been transformed into stores, restaurants and other kinds of business places, which furnish employment for a large number of men. Wheeling, which is the largest and was the wettest town in the state, has turned its brewery into a packing house, and it will employ three times as many men as the brewery did. In Charleston, the capital city, the brewery has become an ice plant, and cheaper ice will be furnished, so that the poor of the city can afford it. In Wheeling, where there were fourteen saloons in one block, every place has been rented to another form of industry.

The Commissioner of Labor for North Carolina, Mr. M. L. Shipman, recently made the statement that "whisky distilleries have been displaced by industrial plants and over the remains of saloons have been erected splendid school buildings and magnificent church buildings. In Gaston county alone twenty-six distilleries were in operation under former conditions, and it now boasts forty-seven textile plants, employing more than 7,000 people."

NO DULL TIMES ANTICIPATED

That the "disturbed conditions" predicted by the wets if the liquor traffic were eliminated from the state exist only in their own prejudiced minds is the opinion of the Portland (Ore.) Journal.

"It is scarcely reasonable that there will be any change of conditions," remarks that paper in answer to forebodings on the part of some that the city will sustain great financial loss in rental or in the loss of use of plants.

"In the very nature of things under the changed order, the money that is now spent for two dollars' worth of booze will, instead, be spent for a two dollar pair of shoes. The Saturday night wage that now goes over the bar will be expended for groceries or clothing.

"Economically, about so much wealth is created in Portland and about so much is expended in Portland, and if it is not spent for one thing it will be spent for another. Therefore, aside from such interests as are actually engaged in the manufacture of intoxicants there should be no sound reason for anticipation of evil times to come to Portland from a dry Oregon."

"DID BOOZE EVER DO YOU ANY GOOD?"

M. DISQUE

"Did Booze Ever Do You Any Good?" is the question put in the form of a blazing electric sign which meets the night shift "checking in" at the Illinois Steel Company's plant in South Chicago. Under this leading question over the huge door or gate appear two others, equally significant: "Did Booze Ever Help You Get a Better Job?" and "Did Booze Ever Contribute Anything to the Happiness of Your Family?"

Perhaps purists may consider the question, "Did Booze Ever Do You Any Good?" inelegant English, but it strikes home with irresistible force and has the desired effect on the vast majority of that class of working men called "regular drinkers"—the class which looks forward to the end of the day's or night's work as a time for recreation at a nearby saloon. For those prophetic words over the gate suggesting that the man who drinks may be poorer for it as a worker, a job-getter, a family shield and comfort, set these men to thinking. When they leave the factory sweating and grimy, with parched throats and inflamed eyeballs, longing for some so-called "cooling refreshments," those significant questions face them, and may send them homeward instead of saloonward. Who can estimate the real good that could be done by this quiet challenge if it were extended to all our industrial plants?

SECRETARY BRYAN'S "DRY" DINNERS POPULAR WITH FOREIGN ENVOYS

Has anyone heard of a foreign diplomat refusing an invitation to one of Secretary Bryan's "dry" dinners, as prophesied at the time of the first anti-liquor social function? The special Washington correspondent to the Chicago Evening Post thinks not, and in a recent article intimates that there is a growing tendency on the part of the envoys of foreign countries to become total abstainers on their own account. The writer in the Post says,

"Mr. Bryan, and Mr. Daniels, too, it is believed, continue to serve grape juice or mineral water or both at their dinners, and no one has been able to discover that any of the diplomats has seen fit to decline invitations because of advance knowledge that no liquor was to be served. When Mr. Bryan gave his big dinner to the members of the foreign corps they were at their posts early the next morning and no one looked either 'headachey' or unhappy. It may be that with remembrance keen of some other occasions the guests were glad that nothing but grape juice gave color in the cups of the night before.

"Russia, Germany, France and England are insisting today that there shall be virtually total abstinence in the camps of the soldiers, and, so far as Russia is concerned, the prohibition edict affects the whole population of the empire. In all of these countries it is said that the officials are abstaining largely as an example of self-denial to the men who are on the firing line. The power of example is being felt in Washington, so society people say, and while none of the diplomats was otherwise than temperate in his habits, it is now generally understood that a good many of them have become total abstainers, a condition of abstinence which probably will last as long as the war lasts, and perhaps longer, for the water habit may become deep-seated.

"Whenever total abstinence is mentioned in Washington there is a lifting of hands to express commiseration with the fearful plight of the foreigners accredited to this government when they are compelled to go up against the cocktailless, sauterneless and champagneless dinner. The diplomats are putting their feet under a good many 'dry' boards in these days, and one has yet to learn that they have entered any warlike protest."

SCOTLAND FALLING INTO LINE

According to the press, the thoughtful people of Scotland are eagerly attending meetings held simultaneously in large centers of population "to urge upon the government the desirability of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors during the war, or for an experimental period of six months, and of appointing a commission to watch the results and to make recommendations regarding the equitable treatment of license holders and their employes." It looks as if the land of the thistle might smite its own blow at the liquor traffic.

ALCOHOL SURGERY'S FOE

Of one thousand five hundred cases among French soldiers operated on during the last three months the eight or nine per cent who found difficulty in receiving anesthetics were addicted to the use of liquor. The statement is made by a medical correspondent for a Parisian paper in describing conditions at one of the largest military hospitals in the country. The liquor ban put by the French government upon the use of alcohol in the army has worked marvelously well if the recuperative powers of the soldiers indicate anything.

RAILROAD EMPLOYES FOR PROHIBITION

The Independent Order of Railroad Employes, at a recent convention at Reading, Pa., passed a resolution favoring all legislation, state or national, which has a tendency to prohibit the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors.

RUSSIA TRANSFORMED

PASSING OF VODKA BRINGS PROSPERITY

In an article by George Kennan appearing in The Outlook under the caption, "Prohibition in Russia," fresh light is thrown upon the improved conditions prevailing in the country since vodka was driven out. Quoting from Russian periodicals, he says:

"Mr. Ivan Zhilkin, writing in the leading Russian review, Vestnik Evropa, of Petrograd, says: 'All Russia is filled with enthusiasm and gratitude. As if by the waving of a magic wand, drunkenness, debauchery, wild cries, disputing, and fighting have ceased in the streets of both villages and towns. Factories and workshops are filling their orders with promptness and accuracy. In households long accustomed to poverty, strife, drunken quarrels, and blows there are now peace and quiet. The peasant families are even making pecuniary savings, which, although small, are as welcome as they are unexpected. The very face of Russia, long disfigured by alcoholic excess, seems to have been transformed and ennobled.'

"I have room for only a few illustrations of the social and economic changes that prohibition in Russia has brought about. They are mostly taken from the monthly reviews, Vestnik Evropa and Russkoe Slovo, and from the daily Petrograd newspaper, the Reitch. These periodicals, of course, are not prohibition organs, and they treat the results of prohibition just as they would treat any other phenomena of social life.

Decrease in Robbery

"A correspondent of the Russkoe Slovo, telegraphing from Viatka, says: 'The closing of the government dispensaries in this city has been followed by a marked decrease in the number of robberies. Hooliganism has almost disappeared, and the police lockups, always filled on bazaar days with drunken men, are now empty. According to a member of the provincial zemstvo, the peasant villages are completely transformed. Drunkenness, fighting, and disorder, so noticeable on holidays and fair days, have ceased.'

"A correspondent of the same review in Simbirsk says: 'The suspension of the vodka traffic has diminished crime in this city by fifty per cent, and hooliganism by ninety per cent. The same results are reported from a whole series of peasant villages in this province.'

"From Orel the report is: 'Prohibition has reduced crime here, as compared with previous months, by eighty per cent. The court-rooms and police stations are empty.'

"In Voronezh the police state that 'in the first half of July, when the vodka dispensaries were open, there were in this city twenty-seven murders or other serious crimes. In the first half of August, when the vodka shops were closed, there were only eight.'

"The detective police of Ekaterinoslav report that 'crimes attributable to drunkenness have wholly ceased. Since the beginning of the mobilization there has not been a single case of murder, robbery, assault, or hooliganism, although prior to that time there were more than a hundred every month.'

"In Ekaterinodar, according to the police, 'crime has decreased by ninety per cent, hooliganism has disappeared, and the town is absolutely quiet.'

"In Saratof 'the monthly average of crimes has fallen from one hundred and thirty to sixty. The asylum for alcoholics is empty. The river stevedores have put on new clothes and are sending money home. Attempts at suicide have ceased.'

"In Yaroslav 'the registers of the justices of the peace show that between the thirty-first of July and the twenty-eighth of August there was brought before the magistrates only one case. In the same length of time before the suspension of the sale of vodka the number of cases often exceeded two hundred.'

"A correspondent in Kostroma writes: 'The number of crimes and offenses in this city in the fortnight prior to the suspension of the vodka traffic was about three hundred. In the first half of August there were only eight.'

"Writing from Tambof, at a much later date (October 28), a correspondent of the Reitch says: 'Three months have passed since the sale of vodka ceased, and it is now possible to estimate the extent of the beneficent results that have followed prohibition. The villages of this province, according to the reports of the peasants, have become so changed as to be unrecognizable. Fights, robberies, and fires, they say, have almost ceased. But, without placing too much reliance upon these statements, we may show the results of prohibition by objective facts. According to the records of the procurator's office of the Tambof district, the average number of criminal cases in the month of August for the years 1911-12-13 was 515. In August, 1914 [after the closing of the vodka shops], the number was only 324. This is the lowest criminal rate on record. Information collected and compiled by the Fire Insurance Board of the same district shows that the average number of accidental or incendiary fires in August and September for the five years immediately preceding 1914 was 960. The number in the same months of this year was only 630, which is also the lowest ever recorded. The chief of the Fire Insurance Board adds that this decrease in the number of fires represents a saving of 500,000 rubles in sixty days, or at the rate of 3,000,000 rubles a year. In the Moshansk and Tambof districts, where the number of fires has always been great, the results are still more surprising. During the months of the autumnal holidays last year the number of fires in the peasant villages of these districts was 148. In the same months this year it fell to 65. The police of the 'bazaar precinct' in Tambof report that the monthly average of arrests has fallen from 300 in previous years to 70 in 1914. The police inspector of another Tambof precinct says that his station-house contains so few prisoners that he is thinking of offering it to the sanitary authorities for a hospital. The president of the Tambof Zemstvo Board, who has just returned from an extensive trip through the rural districts, says that, strange as it may seem, the peasant villages in this time of war show unmistakable evidences of prosperity. The muzhiks are better dressed, their taxes are paid more promptly, and trade in the village fairs has become more active.' [Petrograd Reitch, Oct. 30, 1914.]"

IN THE NICK OF TIME

GRACE BOTELER SANDERS, Jamestown, Ohio

Wolfe thrust his hands into his pockets and exploded: "You're just like all the rest, you promise to help a down-and-outer and forget all about it! That poor fellow over there in the jail's eating his heart out," he fumed. "He's doing penance for a sin which the liquor crowd forced him to commit. He's literally dying for fresh air and a chance to run through the woods and fields where he was raised. He's been in jail so long that his friends, if he has any, have forgotten all about him. You say you'll pardon him if we get a certain number of names to the petition. I don't suppose we could find seventeen men to sign that paper if we'd try."

"I'm worried over other things just now," remarked the governor, tentatively. "I'm tremendously interested in our statewide campaign. The drys need hundreds of speakers to go out and assist in waging the battle. Say, Clint—" the governor paused—"Why wouldn't some down-and-outer, who's been through the perdition that a reformed drunkard suffers, do ten times more good, perhaps, than the regular speakers. How would—"

Wolfe interrupted him. "Say," he cried, "let Henry go. If his story wouldn't make an ostrich cry, I'll give up. He's a careful man and a trusty one. I wouldn't be afraid to send him to the end of the road. He'd come back all right."

The governor smiled at his friend's enthusiasm, and picked up his pen. "I'll look the thing up!" he promised. "Even if the poor fellow gets away, he's suffered enough, but I'll probably send you his permit and pardon tomorrow morning. I'm busy as can be, Clint. I'll see you tomorrow."

Wolfe went home satisfied. "I'll not tell Henry until I'm sure. He's been disappointed so many times," Wolfe told his wife. "I'll wait until I hear from the governor."

John Henry's eyes shone as his escape became more certain. He labored unceasingly. One night he noticed that the bar was almost worn through. Another night at most would set him free. Joy transfigured his face and he began to sing. He fancied himself once more wandering among the scenes of his childhood. Just then Wolfe entered the cell.

"That's right, old fellow. Cheer up. Don't lose your nerve. I was talking to the governor yesterday, and he said—"

"I've lost all hope of release by way of the law!" John Henry interrupted. "'The mills of God grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly small.' I shall receive my liberty. I may die ten minutes afterward, but it will be worth the price. I shall enjoy liberty all the more because of my years of imprisonment."

"I believe you will!" declared the warden, but he pondered afterward upon John Henry's curious sentences. He was almost sorry that he had not told the man that his pardon was coming tomorrow. Henry did his best work that day. "I'll give them something to remember me by!" he thought, with a smile. "I can hardly wait until night!"

When the prisoners were asleep, John Henry gathered up his few belongings, set his slouch hat over his eyes, climbed to the window and listened. He heard no one, and so pushed gently upon the broken bar. Last night the touch of a hand made it quiver. Now it did not even give. What could it mean?

He passed his hand quickly over the window. A long, rough slat had been riveted to the broken bar. They had found the weakness and corrected it. His labor had been in vain. Groaning, John Henry fell back upon his cot. He had believed liberty so near. For hours he lay mourning over his unhappy fate. Imprisonment was doubly bitter now. He did not heed the rising bell, the call to breakfast or the patter of feet in the corridor. Half unconsciously he heard the guard finally call the warden. Wolfe came in looking not a little worried. He was astonished when he saw John Henry lying upon his bed. "What's the matter?" he queried kindly.

"I'm sick unto death!" declared the prisoner, in a muffled voice. "Call the preacher. It's my last sickness."

"This is a bad time to get sick!" blustered the warden, "just when I've good news for you. Look up, old fellow! I've something better than a parson for you just now? How would you like to go out into the country tomorrow to a temperance meeting and tell how well you like the saloon-keepers and brewers?"

An expression of surprise crossed John Henry's face. Would he be glad to wipe the liquor traffic off the earth? Would he help his weak brothers, the young men and old who were out in that beautiful world which was being contaminated by its influence? "I hope you'll get better in a hurry!" continued Wolfe hopefully. "We need men just like you to enlighten ignorant voters of the awfulness of the drink evil. The governor will have your pardon ready about this time next week, but I told him you could do a lot of good before that time, so he said, all right, go ahead!"

John Henry suddenly sat up. The warden was speaking the truth. "A party of us are going out in an auto tomorrow morning, and the governor's planned for you to board at the hotel and go out from there to the points all around."

"And the guard!" breathed hopeful John Henry.

"Do you think we'd insult you by sending a guard!'" fumed Wolfe. "I'm not afraid to trust you, John Henry. "We'll go down town this morning and get you some new clothes. They'll be my treat. Then you'll want to study your speech a little. The brewers are spending lots of money. We've got to beat them with facts, if we make this state dry. The governor wants you as a living example of what the traffic does."

Happy John Henry got to his trembling feet. "Thank you, sir—" he began, but he could go no farther. He sank back and burst into a flood of tears so tempestuous that the young warden was almost frightened. "What made you do it, sir? What made you do it?" he sobbed.

Clinton Wolfe smiled. "For a number of reasons. Your punishment never was just. You had suffered enough."

"But the chance to do this work!" persisted poor, broken John Henry. "I'd planned to get out, Mr. Wolfe. I'd filed the window and would have been gone if the repair man hadn't been before me."

Wolfe nodded. "I knew it."

"You knew it! Then what made you give me a chance to be a man?" wailed Henry wildly. "I do want to try to atone for the past if I can. I want to tell the boys—bright, happy young boys who think it's smart and manly to drink—of the awful things it leads to. I want to tell the girls to shun boys who drink. I want to give my life to helping other folks, but I never dreamed of having a chance like this. Last night when I planned to break out I was going to join a bunch of criminals—there's always a chance to do evil and I intended to make the world pay for my wrongs. Today, thanks to you, I'm to go out into the country to save men."

The man fell upon his knees and kissed the warden's trembling hand. "You have a reason, sir, I know it!" he persisted. "Oh, tell me why, for the first time in all these years, I have found a man who really tries to help the other fellow?"

The warden brushed away a tear, then raised the suppliant to his feet. "'Twas my mother," he said simply. "She was a white ribboner. She spent her life helping drunkards and lost women and suffering children. If you want to give any one the credit, thank that angel presence who hovers over us."

John Henry dropped his gray, shamed head. "If you'll be so kind, sir, will you pray with me—that I may be faithful?"

They knelt together in the narrow cell and alternately poured out their petitions to the Lord in whose name is being waged all over the word the battle of righteousness.

John Henry went into the campaign with all his long suppressed energy and won many votes. The state went dry by a large majority and for aught I know John Henry may yet be preaching the gospel of temperance and uplifting the fallen and some bright day—I know not when or where—when John Henry and Clinton Wolfe leave this world to enter the heavenly gates beyond, I feel sure that Wolfe will receive his reward for saving one criminal who was redeemed because of his guidance and who was washed and made white because of one white ribbon mother. I am sure there will be a goodly company of those who threw off the rum curse and embraced Christianity, because help came to John Henry in the nick of time.

THE NEW YEAR

A miracle touched me at twelve, for behold, I saw
The New Year rise as a young god rises in might.
No child was he with hesitant, timid feet,
But a grown joy, wrapped in the raiment of pure delight.

And his eyes, most gracious and tender, were bent on mine;
In his hands he caught my hands, while clarion clear
His golden, rapturous, confident tones rang forth:
"Comrade, hail! For I am the New, New Year.

"Comrade, hail! The pulse of the world's astir
Under the snow, and the ancient doubts are dead,
Freedom, achievement, wait for us. Come, be glad!"
I listened, I looked, and faith to my hope was wed.

His kingly courage told me the beautiful truth;
He is mine, and his strength infuses my rescued will.
Up, faint heart! We will conquer together, my Year;
Life and love shall their old, sweet promise fulfill.
—Clinton Dangerfield, in the Century

Happy New Year To Everybody!

THE TWELVE MERCHANTS

Twelve merchants with their camels came Across the deserts vast;
They knocked upon the gates of Time,
And through life's city passed;
And they were laden with the wealth
Of countries far away;
With silks and myrrh of nobler worth
Than those of far Cathay.

Twelve merchants with their camels brought
Such gifts to you and me
Of joy and kindness, till it seemed Life could no richer be;
And shall we let them go away,
Those merchants old and wise,
All empty-handed and forlorn,
With sadness in their eyes?

The merchants with their camels are
The months that make the year—
Oh, for the blessings that they bring,
The hope, and love, and cheer,
Let us give gladly in return
The best of all we are,
That when these merchants go their ways
They go in peace afar.

THE SACRED GIFT CUP

SARAH N. McCREERY, Burlington, Iowa

Edward Haines walked the length of the Pullman car and stopped at the water cooler. He took a drinking-cup from his pocket, and when he had filled it, he drank the sparkling water eagerly.

"That's an odd receptacle, Haines," said Lee Gerald, a man older than himself whom Haines had met on the road and for whom he had a distinct liking.

"It is rather odd," he returned. "It was made somewhere abroad, I think. It is unusual to find a folding cup of silver; they are usually of nickle or aluminum. I prize this cup highly because it was a gift, and it has a special significance."

"Tell me about it," urged Mr. Gerald.

"That will suit me," agreed the younger man, "but let's find seats before I tell my story." The two men were soon comfortably settled and Haines proceeded with his narrative. "My mother gave me that cup," he began, "when I left home on my first trip as a traveling salesman.

"Then you have not owned it long," interrupted Mr. Gerald, looking up into the boyish face of his companion.

"Three years," was the reply. "I left home when I was only nineteen. You see, father died when the youngest child was only two. There were seven children, all boys. That was quite a responsibility for my mother, and there was not much money, so some of us fellows had to begin work young. Two boys are at home yet, one has another year in high school, and another, although he is fourteen years old, is still 'the baby,' but that is apart from my story. When each son was ready to go out into the world to make his own way, mother gave him a drinking-cup. It may seem a strange gift, but back of it was a purpose, and mother always gave us the present with a little ceremony that a fellow could never forget. Filling the cup with water, she would say, 'The name of Haines has never been disgraced by having a drunkard bear it. I would not want a son of mine to be the first to drag it down to the saloon and the gutter. I want you to drink this water, and as you drink it, remember your mother gave you the cup and that it is not to be used by lips that touch wine. If you should ever become addicted to drink, the cup is to be put aside because you are unworthy to use it. Please carry it in your pocket so you can secure that to whose use the cup is dedicated—cold water.' Mr. Graham, you know as well as I do that with the remembrance of that simple act of mother's and those words of hers, I could never drink liquor. You see, mother threw a safeguard around us boys when we left her personal care. I have been tempted to drink many times in the past three years, and but for this cup I might today have been a drunkard. I have won a number of young fellows over to the cause of temperance by telling my story and giving them a drink from my gift cup. They were all young men who had not taken their first drink but who were tempted to begin."

"Are all of your brothers temperance men—I mean all who are at work?" asked Lee Gerald quietly.

"All of them. My oldest brother, at the continued urging of some so-called friends, started into a saloon one night to have a drink. His cup, which was in his pocket, struck against the half-open door, and he said he felt as if something had gone straight through his heart. 'I cannot go in here,' he said to his friends and left them abruptly. That was the last time he ever yielded to the temptation to touch liquor."

Lee Gerald's face was very sober as Edward Haines finished his tale of a mother's forethought. "I wish some mother had given me a gift cup," he said in a low voice. "My life today might have been a different one. My mother died when I was a child."

Edward Haines showed his surprise. "But you don't drink, Mr. Gerald. At least I have never seen you."

The elder man smiled grimly. "No, but you meet me just occasionally when I am on my best behaviour. Once or twice a year I go on a drunk. Those are plain words, but it is what I do, and for three weeks or a month I don't do a day's work. The firm I travel for is very kind and lenient and keeps me because they regard me as a good salesman the remainder of the time. I haven't taken a drink for six months this time, and your story has helped me. I am not worthy to drink from this cup." He passed the gift back to its owner. "But I am going to make one last strong effort to master my appetite and overcome the habit. If I keep my resolve for a year and a half more, Haines, will your mother think I am worthy to use the cup?" he asked almost wistfully.

"She surely will," was the reply. "It will be a happy day for me when I can give you a drink of pure water from it as your pledge that you are a temperance man."

"Tell your mother, when you see her, that her gift will be the means not only of keeping her son in the right path, but of helping to reform a drunkard. Tell her, too, that the cup and an owner with courage enough to tell its story are sending her influence out over the world to help men."

From west to east, from south to north,
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!

Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.

NATIONAL PRESIDENT RETURNS TO EVANSTON

On December 24 Miss Anna A. Gordon, President of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, returned to Evanston from Washington, D. C., where she has been for the past few weeks, in attendance at National Constitutional Prohibition meetings and the debate on the Hobson bill in the House of Representatives.

GOOD PROGRAM MATERIAL

Local unions in every community are planning for special services to be held on January 14, National Constitutional Prohibition Day. The poem, "The Present Crisis," on pages nine and eleven, and "Why We Expect to Succeed," on page four, are material suggested for the occasion.

HAVE YOU SENT YOUR CONGRESSMAN A MESSAGE?

Have you sent a message of congratulation and approval to the Congressman from your district who voted "Aye" on the Hobson-Sheppard Bill on December 22? The list of "Yeas" and "Nays" is given on page three of this issue. It should be carefully studied and preserved for future reference.

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

RETROSPECT AND PROSPECT

1914-1915

Looking backward over the year 1914 and forward to the year 1915, one might epitomize the temperance movement in retrospect and prospect as "a movement of victorious yesterdays and confident tomorrows." The history of the past twelve months chronicles an unprecedented number of victories for prohibition. The transformation of Russia, the anti-liquor measures in effect in German, French and English military circles; the abolition of alcohol in the United States Navy, and in the Panama Canal Zone; the outlawing of the liquor traffic from Virginia, Colorado, Oregon, Washington and Arizona; the triumph of the enemies of the saloon in a large number of counties and cities; the upholding by the United States Supreme Court of the constitutionality of the prohibition provision of the Indian treaties, making a large part of Minnesota dry; the prohibition rules enforced by many industrial enterprises and railroads; the enactment in prohibition states of stricter enforcement laws, and the successful working out of prohibition in West Virginia—these with the endorsement of National Constitutional Prohibition by hundreds of influential organizations and the outspoken declarations of men prominent in the official and political life of the United States and other nations in favor of prohibition have given a marvelous impetus to the movement for the abolition of John Barleycorn from the business, social and political life of the civilized world.

The last incident of the year—the vote on the Sheppard-Hobson bill in the House of Representatives on December 22, even though it fell short of a decisive victory, was no less a triumph for nationwide prohibition.

The fact that the measure received on the first vote a majority is an indication that public sentiment is demanding of its representatives in Congress serious consideration and favorable action on this question.

The first definite united effort of the new year for National Constitutional Prohibition will be on January 14, when in every state in the Union meetings will be held, under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, participated in by the churches and other temperance organizations. This month's issue of the state W. C. T. U. papers will contain material for the program for these services.

PLANS FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

Suggestions for January

That the January issue of all state W. C. T. U. papers be made a campaign edition for National Constitutional Prohibition.

That the second Thursday in January (January 14) be designated as a Day of Prayer, programs to be furnished from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters.

In all of these plans it is expected that the Young People's Branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will heartily co-operate.

THE "STATE OF PUBLIC OPINION"

"While the loss of four states, Arizona, Colorado, Washington and Oregon, is deeply to be regretted," philosophically remarks Mida's Criterion, "still, considering the state of public opinion, inflamed by the fanaticism of paid agitators, the results on the whole are really more encouraging than was generally anticipated."

The "state of public opinion" may well alarm the men of the trade, for the more frantic and violent the attempts of the liquor interests to change it, the more futile seem their efforts.

It should never be forgotten, however, that from this time on they will devote themselves, regardless of expense, to carrying on what they are pleased to term "a strong educational campaign" for the purpose not of enlightening, but of confusing and misleading all who will listen to them.

A writer in a Los Angeles German paper, after election, referring to the strong dry sentiment prevailing among the Germans, advises the friends of personal liberty to fortify themselves for the future by inaugurating an educational campaign for the purpose of enlightening the voters upon the failure of prohibition, believing that such a campaign will do a great deal toward convincing the voters that the regulated license system is the best for all concerned. "The German idea that beverages are consumed as food and not as intoxicants should be encouraged," says this writer, "and if the American people can be educated to look at the question from that side, prohibition campaigns will lose their force and their strongest arguments."

Such utterances as these are a challenge to all Christian patriots to urge in every community campaigns for the dissemination of information concerning the liquor evil along scientific, economic and political lines. Let us do this by poster, press and messages from the pulpit; through the teaching of the children in the public schools and the Sunday schools, and by the distribution in every corner of the nation of leaflets and papers which deal in a virile fashion with the question of total abstinence and prohibition.

THE PRESENT CRISIS

Adapted from James Russell Lowell

To be used in programs for National Constitutional Prohibition Day (January 14) meetings

When a deed is done for Freedom, through the broad earth's aching breast
Runs a thrill of joy prophetic, trembling on from east to west,
And the slave, where'er he cowers, feels the soul within him climb
To the awful verge of manhood, as the energy sublime
Of a century bursts full-blossomed on the thorny stem of Time.

Through the walls of hut and palace shoots the instantaneous throe,
When the travail of the Ages wrings earth's systems to and fro;
At the birth of each new Era, with a recognizing start,
Nation wildly looks at nation, standing with mute lips apart,
And glad Truth's yet mightier man-child leaps beneath the Future's heart.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

Hast thou chosen, O my people, where in justice thou shalt stand,
Ere the Doom from its worn sandals shakes the dust against our land?
Though the cause of Evil prosper, yet 'tis Truth alone is strong,
And, albeit she wander outcast now, I see around her throng
Troops of beautiful, tall angels, to enshield her from all wrong.

Backward look across the ages and the beacon-moments see,
That, like peaks of some sunk continent, jut through Oblivion's sea;
Not an ear in court or market for the low foreboding cry
Of those Crises, God's stern winnowers, from whose feet earth's chaff must fly;
Never shows the choice momentous till the judgment hath passed by.

Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record
One death grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the Word;
Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne,—
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above his own.

We see dimly in the Present what is small and what is great,
Slow of faith how weak an arm may turn the iron helm of fate,
But the soul is still oracular; amid the market's din,
List the ominous stern whisper from the Delphic cave within,— "They enslave their children's children who make compromise with sin."

Alcohol, the earth-born Cyclops, fellest of the giant brood,
Sons of brutish Force and Darkness who have drenched the earth with blood,
Famished in his self-made desert, blinded by our purer day,
Gropes in yet unblasted regions for his miserable prey;—
Shall we guide his gory fingers where our helpless children play?

Then to side with Truth is noble when we share her wretched crust,
Ere her cause bring fame and profit, and 'tis prosperous to be just;
Then it is the brave man chooses, while the coward stands aside,
Doubting in his abject spirit, till his Lord is crucified,
And the multitude make virtue of the faith they had denied.

Count me o'er earth's chosen heroes—they were souls that stood alone,
While the men they agonized for hurled the contumelious stone,
Stood serene, and down the future saw the golden beam incline
To the side of perfect justice, mastered by their faith divine,
By one man's plain truth to manhood and to God's supreme design.

By the light of burning heretics Christ's bleeding feet I track,
Toiling up new Calvaries ever with the cross that turns not back,
And these mounts of anguish number how each generation learned
One new word of that grand Credo which in prophet-hearts hath burned
Since the first man stood God-conquered with his face to heaven upturned.

For Humanity sweeps onward: where to-day the martyr stands,
On the morrow crouches Judas with the silver in his hands;
Far in front the cross stands ready and the crackling fagots burn,
While the hooting mob of yesterday in silent awe return
To glean up the scattered ashes into History's golden urn.

'Tis as easy to be heroes as to sit the idle slaves
Of a legendary virtue carved upon our father's graves,
Worshippers of light ancestral make the present light a crime;
Was the Mayflower launched by cowards, steered by men behind their time?
Turn those tracks toward Past or Future, that make Plymouth Rock sublime?

They were men of present valor, stalwart old iconoclasts,
Unconvinced by axe or gibbet that all virtue was the Past's;
But we make their truth our falsehood, thinking that hath made us free.
Hoarding it in mouldy parchments, while our tender spirits flee
The rude grasp of that great Impulse which drove them across the sea.

They have rights who dare maintain them; we are traitors to our sires,
Smothering in their holy ashes Prohibition's altar fires;
Shall we make their creed our jailer? Shall we, in our haste to slay,
From the tombs of the old prophets steal the funeral lamps away
To light up the martyr-fagots round the prophets of to-day?

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

THE NEW YEAR

The corridors of Time
Are full of doors—the portals of closed years.
We enter them no more, though bitter tears
Beat hard against them, and we hear the chime
Of lost dreams, dirge-like in behind them ring,
At memory's opening.

But one door stands ajar—
The New Year's; while a golden chain of days
Holds it half shut. The eager foot delays
That presses to its threshold's mighty bar;
And fears that shrink, and hopes that shout aloud,
Around it wait and crowd.

It shuts back the unknown.
And dare we truly welcome one more year,
Who down the past a mocking laughter hear
From idle aims like wandering breezes blown?
We, whose large aspirations dimmed and shrank
Till the year's scroll was blank!

We pause beside the door.
Thy year, O God, how shall we enter in?
How shall we thence thy hidden treasures win?
Shall we return in beggary, as before,
When thou art near at hand, with infinite wealth,
Wisdom and heavenly health?

—Lucy Larcom

PRAYER OF GRATITUDE

O God! whose awful hand has ruled the stars,
Whose breath has formed the myriad worlds that swarm
About the sun—Thine own bright handiwork—
We thank Thee for the fullness of Thy power,
Which grants Thee as a Father to mankind:
That He who holds the sea within His hand,
Shouldst send the dew to wearied fields; and He
Who from the cracking cloud the lightning pours,
The faintest cry from out the heart will hear,
And with His love enwrapt, will call him child.

RED LETTER DAYS

JANUARY 3—Mother's Day (the birthday of Madam Willard)
FEBRUARY 10-17—Membership week
FEBRUARY 17—Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day

SOCIAL MEETINGS AND RED LETTER DAYS

My plan of work will be ready for circulation early in January.

I have prepared, at the request of many superintendents, a program for Frances E. Willard Memorial Day, February 17. There are selections by the Lady Henry Somerset; by Miss Anna A. Gordon "In Memory of a Great Life"; quotations from the last address given by Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens at the National W. C. T. U. Convention in Asbury Park, New Jersey, in November, 1913; a recitation, "How Still She Stands," written by Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson; "A Quiz"; and quotations from Miss Willard that may be given at roll call. Price, 15 cents.

A leaflet, "Evening Pastimes," has been prepared for the Young Peoples' Branch. Price, 2 cents each; 50 cents per 100.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

A by-law adopted by the Missouri W. C. T. U. at its recent state convention provides that no white ribboner who is not a subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL shall be eligible to the offices of state superintendent, district president, local president, nor can she be elected a delegate to a National Convention.

During the closing days of the campaign in Ohio for prohibition and suffrage, Miss Lillian Phelps of Niagara Falls did valiant service in Trumbull county, writes the county W. C. T. U. president, and adds, "Although we failed to win statewide our county gave a large majority for prohibition and suffrage and against the home rule amendment, and much credit should be given Miss Phelps for her efficient work."

The W. C. T. U. of Queensland has adopted the motto, "Prohibition in 1926, and is working hard to bring about this desired result. Posters are being sent out for use in public buildings and public right-of-ways. Business, private and commercial envelopes bear such sentiments as "Vote for Prohibition," "Down With the Drink," and others of similar nature. Greater work is being done to this end since the establishment of dry canteens in military camps. The young people, who will be the voters in 1926, are being carefully trained. "May the prayers of our sisters across the sea be uttered in our behalf as we press on to fight the demon that is causing such havoc in sunny Australia," is the appeal of the Queensland correspondent.

Miss Christine Tinling, National organizer, did most acceptable work in the schools of Indianapolis, Ind., where for one week she spoke on Scientific Temperance. She lectured in fifteen of the schools and gave a special address to 600 boys of Shortridge high school. In every instance the pupils and teachers expressed their hearty appreciation, and officers of school boards declared their satisfaction that the children could have the benefit of Miss Tinling's course of instruction.

In a great temperance sermon preached by Billy Sunday to more than 6,000 women recently in Des Moines, Ia., he made a strong appeal for members for the W. C. T. U. Of those who heard the sermon many are coming into the organization. The general officers of the Iowa W. C. T. U. had seats on the platform, the president, Mrs. Ida Wise Smith, leading in the opening prayer.

An honorary member of the Wheeler (Mich.) W. C. T. U, Dr. E. L. Street, prepared the program for the evening meeting of the local union, which was held in one of the churches of Wheeler. Dr. Street brought clearly before his audience the havoc wrought by alcohol on the individual, society and the nation, and illustrated his words by an object lesson, showing the effect of alcohol on food, and the tissues of the body. Music was furnished by choruses of children and young ladies and a young men's glee club. To illustrate the progress of prohibition, the fourteen white states, cut from white paper, were displayed from a line at the back of the platform.

The Palmyra (Wis.) W. C. T. U. conducted a silver medal contest at Hebron recently. Miss Ruby Westphal was the winner.

The mothers' meeting of the Vernon (Mo.) W. C. T. U., held recently, was a most inspiring occasion and the presence of many children and babies, as well as a good attendance of mothers, cheered the workers to renewed efforts. The program included papers on "The Religious Training of the Child," by Mrs. W. J. Ham; "The Punishment of the Child," by Mrs. Barris; "The Indoor Plagues," by Mrs. Richardson, followed by discussion of each of these important subjects.

Important work in making Washington dry on November 3 was done by the W. C. T. U. of East Washington through rest rooms and restaurants in connection with the county fairs in Spokane and North Yakima. Rooms and tents were lined with posters, and literature was distributed in great quantities. Some of the best workers in Spokane spent every day during the fair in spreading temperance truths among the throngs who were in attendance. In the temperance parade in Spokane the Young Campaigners for Prohibition with their songs and rally cries were an important feature. Among the floats of the various organizations represented were those of the W. C. T. U., that of Union Park being one which had previously taken first prize at the state fair. On the day of election white ribboners with other temperance workers were at their posts, each doing the duty assigned her, many of them working all day and until nine at night with only time for a light lunch at noon. Yakima county, the home of the state president, Mrs. Carrie M. Barr, and the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Myrtie D. Johnston, was the banner county, giving a dry majority of 5,106. Only one county in East Washington voted wet, and that one gave a majority of only 46. East Washington's vote was 22,379 majority for a dry state.

A WORD OF APPRECIATION

From C. Lewis Fowler, President of Cox College, Atlanta, Ga., comes this word to the editor of THE UNION SIGNAL.

"I would be glad to be allowed space in your valuable paper to express to the members of the W. C. T. U. of America the profound appreciation of both the faculty and student body of Cox College for the gift of the pictures used at your National W. C. T. U. Convention in Atlanta recently. The picture of Frances E Willard, that immortal wizard whose spirit yet broods over America for righteousness and temperance, was brought into my office last night and will be publicly given today to the young ladies' organization in the college to be kept by them in their hall.

"Personally, I know of nothing which could have given me more pleasure than the thoughtfulness of the convention in donating these pictures to this institution of learning for young women.

"May the blessings of the Highest be upon the W. C. T. U. of America."

THE PRESENT CRISIS

New occasions teach new duties; Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must upward still, and onward, who would keep abreast of Truth;
Lo, before us gleam her camp-fires! we ourselves must Pilgrims be,
Launch our Mayflower, and steer boldly through the desperate winter sea,
Nor attempt the Future's portal with the Past's blood-rusted key.

WORLD NOTES

L. C. P.

"Not ready for it" has long been the cry of the enemies of prohibition.

The decree of the Russian government is the final answer to the above and similar objections. To cut out with the stroke of a pen from a population of 170,000,000 the "alcohol devil" and a revenue of $500,000,000 is to change the face of one-seventh of the habitable globe. "Wonderful" is the only word to describe it, and a great spiritual awakening follows. More wonderful is it in a government of autocracy that a peasant and a house-painter should have been the initiator. Michael D. Tchelisheff "convinced Czar Nicholas of the necessity and feasibility of the most noteworthy act in the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the history of the world."

But this is, except for its suddenness, hardly an achievement beyond that of China and of Korea in suppressing the opium trade.

The advance of China is well known, in Korea not so well; only this month is the announcement made, "The government has suppressed the opium monopoly and put a ban on the smoking of opium. The American missionaries advocated these steps."

Shall the Oriental and the Slav lead England and America?

Dr. Cuthbert Hall calls the Anglo Saxon "The twentieth century pharisee—'not as other men am I.'"

Soma Chikosi of Chiyuka is "an immense asset" in west central Africa. He is a Christian chief of commanding presence and splendid type of face, an elder of the church and a fine preacher. He says, "We are now the people of Jesus Christ. Chief Kanjundu did not permit the brewing of beer and other things; I have no other word than that of Kanjundu. Everybody knows that beer makes people err and swerve from the 'white' path, the path of righteousness. No, I will not permit beer drinks in my district."

In India, "everything is going on prosperously," but the native Christians are wondering if these can be "Christian kings who are fighting each other."

The French government puts up posters warning against tippling that falls short of drunkenness.

England was alarmed when eighty per cent of the candidates for the Boer war failed to pass the examination because of national sins, and yet in this greater war in the year of our Lord 1914, it is reported that England has decided to keep open houses with license and banqueting in the holiday season.

"Beware of this enemy of the race," said Queen Victoria's physician, Sir Andrew Clark.

"That nation which is first to free itself from the injurious effects of alcohol will attain a marked advantage over other nations in the intensive struggle for existence."—Crown Prince of Sweden.

"The nations which take the smallest quantity of alcohol will win the battles of the future."—German Emperor.

WHAT ARE THE FACTS?

"There are some people who would like very much to have it appear that Kansas is going back on its record as a prohibition state," writes G. S. Ricker in the Congregationalist. "What are the facts? The three great parties—Republican, Democratic and Progressive—each put prohibition—state and national—in its platform, and they polled 455,299 votes as against 47,201 for the 'wet,' or resubmission candidate—nearly ten to one. I have lived in Kansas fifteen years and in the last thirteen years have traveled more than 150,000 miles in the state, going from east to west and north to south, and it is my conviction, founded on personal contact with thousands of the people all over the state, that the proportion of the 'drys' to the 'wets' is just about ten to one!"

PROHIBITION EMPTIES JAIL

A Minnesota county whose saloons were closed by the enforcing of the Indian treaty of 1855 reports that its jail is without occupants for the first time since the present sheriff went into office in 1907. As an evidence that the government means to carry out the provisions of this treaty Henry A. Larson, chief special agent of the Indian Department, and Deputies Brandt, Carson, Belland and LeMars, on an unexpected visit to Detroit, where they found the saloons still open in violation of the closing order which was to have gone into effect November 30, destroyed between three and four thousand dollars' worth of liquor which the saloons were trying to dispose of before complying with the closing order.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE "LEGAL CRAZY QUILT"

The liquor interests have much to say concerning the "legal crazy quilt" relating to the liquor question, which envelopes this nation. "In one place the law calls for screens; in another screens must be removed," commented a speaker at the recent brewers convention. "In one town drink is served at night; in another it is cut out at eight p. m."

Nothing would give greater pleasure to the advocates of prohibition than to transform this "crazy quilt" into a "National Constitutional Prohibition" coverlid, that once for all would relieve our personal liberty friends from the necessity of looking up the varied and multitudinous statutes and ordinances regulating and restricting the "trade."

MRS. BOOLE RETIRES FROM FLYING SQUADRON

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Vice-President-at-Large of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, has felt compelled to sever her personal connection with the Flying Squadron because of her official duties in connection with the National and state Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She writes, "The Flying Squadron is presenting National Prohibition to large audiences in most places where it holds meetings, and during the time I was with them I was impressed with the large attendance of men. In some places the audience was three-fourths men, and they listened with the closest attention to the presentation of arguments for prohibition of the liquor traffic." Mrs. Boole expresses the belief that through these meetings many are reached who would not be sufficiently interested to read leaflets or other literature on the subject.

Mrs. Boole is to be at National Headquarters for conference with the other General Officers early in January.

RECEIVER FOR BIG BREWERY

Decreased Demand for Beer and Adverse Legislation Force Ohio Brewery Out of Business

The Hoster-Columbus Breweries company, a $12,000,000 corporation, has gone into the hands of a receiver on order of the United States District court.

"Decreased demand for beer, adverse legislation, and the voting dry of many states and counties in the last eight years" was given as the cause. A statement issued by the company says:

"In 1914 the crowning blow came in the loss of West Virginia, where we did a business of nearly $500,000 a year, to say nothing of old Virginia's voting dry, to go into effect in 1916."

GOVERNOR'S EYES OPENED

One of the reasons Montana's patriotic citizens believe the time auspicious for inaugurating a statewide prohibition campaign is the satisfaction expressed by many at the results of closing the saloons during the recent strike in the vicinity of Butte.

In a letter addressed, at that time, by Governor Stewart to Mrs. Alderson, president of the Montana W. C. T. U., he admitted:

"Many things that have developed have been surprising to me and none more so than the effect that the closing of the saloons in Butte had on the public in general. One of the managers of the big mining companies told me the other day that during the days the saloons were closed there was not a single accident, whereas for years back there has been an average of ten accidents a day, the serious and trivial combined."

NEW ZEALAND'S ELECTION

Election returns as yet incomplete indicate that the status quo of the liquor traffic is unchanged in New Zealand, and that national prohibition has been defeated. The returns give the government thirty-eight members of Parliament, the opposition thirty, and the Socialists eight, the latter favoring the opposition. A two-thirds vote is required to carry the proposition in New Zealand. Prohibition was defeated by 246,000 votes.

Former Lieut.-Governor John Strange of Wisconsin is reported to have offered to bear the expense of erecting a new $10,000 concrete bridge to span the Cook canal at Menasha provided the city at the next election votes dry.

IOWA AWAKE

LORA S. LA MANCE

Iowa is in good shape for a battle and she is quite inclined to go into it. She is tired of the mulct law; tired of having twenty-five wet counties; tired of being pointed out as the "model" wet state; tired of being run by an out-of-the-state liquor trust that owns more than eighty per cent of all the saloons within the borders of the state; tired of Milwaukee and St. Louis brewers going to the legislature and dictating what laws shall be passed.

The W. C. T. U. rolled up a fine increase this year. Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, the state president, is a real general. She means to push the suffrage battle and win it, in November, 1915. She intends to stir up the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the churches, the clubs and everybody else and to rain petitions down upon the incoming legislature for the repeal of the mulct law, which would leave Iowa under statewide prohibition. However, that would be only statutory prohibition, and constitutional prohibition looks even better to the white ribboners. Accordingly petitions will be circulated and sent to the legislature for three measures, namely, a special election in November, 1915, on woman suffrage, a repeal of the mulct law in 1915, and the granting of a vote on constitutional prohibition in 1916.

As Iowa is the only state in the union having a mulct law, it is rather difficult for outsiders to understand her peculiar conditions. Thirty-four years ago the citizens of Iowa voted on statewide prohibition, and voted it in as honestly as did Kansas or Maine, whereupon her astute politicians stole it from her in a disgraceful way, the legislature allowing counties and towns to have saloons if a certain majority of the voters petitioned for them but the saloons have to pay a "mulct" or tax for not obeying the prohibition law.

The brewery trust is thoroughly alarmed. They have ordered saloon petitions renewed everywhere, even when the saloons have many months to run. They are establishing new ones in new places. The idea is to go up to the legislature and use this as a club, claiming more saloon licenses were granted in the month of December, 1915, than in any previous month of Iowa's history, so that it will appear that the state wants more saloons and more wide-open laws, and by the same token does not want suffrage.

To carry this out the liquor advocates are resorting to all sorts of tricks. One petition showed the names of men who had been dead for five years, and another one the names of ministers of the gospel. It is said that the new petitions are the worst "stuffed" documents ever seen in Iowa. When here, there and yonder petitions began to loom up, appeals were made everywhere to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith stood one whole forenoon at the long distance phone and in four hours' time had dispatched two of Iowa's own workers to danger points, had kidnapped the writer, on her way to meet an engagement, and sent her into a third danger center. Automobiles were pressed into service. All over the state the unions were instructed and aroused. At this writing it looks favorable for the drys. The wets have apparently overshot the mark. Iowa's prohibitionists are ready and anxious to fight them.

December has been a month of institutes in Iowa. The state officers and the regular Iowa organizers have put in a busy month, not stopping for the holidays. The writer was brought in as a National worker and was kept busy straight up to the Monday before Christmas. The meetings, which were first class everywhere, were particularly enthusiastic in the fifth district, of which Mrs. Dora Farrows is president. Seventeen new members were gained in one day in Ft. Dodge. Iowa is likely to see every saloon closed before snow flies in the fall of 1915. Let it come!

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Because of the interest aroused by thirteen contests held under the direction of Miss Clara Friton the Dows (Ia.) W. C. T. U. has doubled its membership. Mrs. Irene H. Bartlett, known as the "bird warbling elocutionist," will train contest classes in Iowa and do recital work. Miss Cecil B. Richmond of Gilson, Ill., who gave excellent satisfaction as a contest trainer when in the state last year, will return in January to answer the demand for her services. Mrs. Mary Isabella Smith, the efficient editor of the Iowa W. C. T. U. Champion, organized four unions in the Twenty-first district recently, which are now aggressively pitted against the saloon.

The W. C. T. U. of New York state was the recipient of one of the handsome bronze medals awarded to the organizations and companies which furnished exhibits in the Safety and Sanitation Exposition held under the auspices of the American Museum of Safety. In all there were one hundred and thirty-eight exhibits showing devices of various kinds for conserving the safety of the public and increasing efficiency. Next to the W. C. T. U. booth was an invention for safely lowering life boats from an ocean liner, while the next neighbors were the Southern Pacific Railway and a concern showing a device by which firemen or others could safely enter a building filled with smoke and noxious gases. From the W. C. T. U. booth literature was placed in the hands of hundreds of persons, and charts and posters were explained to audiences of the sort that would never be in attendance at a temperance meeting. That the directors considered the W. C. T. U. had a logical place in an exposition of this kind was evidenced by the awarding of the medal.

In writing of the recent statewide prohibition campaign in California, a white-ribboner from the northern section of the state has this to say: "I wish every one might know how valiantly and consistently all the pastors of our churches stood by, not waiting to see what would happen, but plunging into the fray, on election day staying all day and some of them all night at the polling places to watch the count. Now we are taking stock of our resources and preparing for a more vigorous effort in 1916. The liquorites, supported by the great dailies that were the real factor in our overthrow, are shouting for reform in their own ranks." The writer asks that white ribboners will pray earnestly that at least one of the great newspapers of California may come out for prohibition.

Eight sermons on National Prohibition were preached in the churches of Benton county, Tennessee, on December 13, at the request of the county W. C. T. U. president, Mrs. Olivia Robins, and on December 20 a white ribbon program arranged by the county president and vice-president was presented. The Loyal Temperance Legion social, planned by the secretaries, Annie Craney and Alice Smith, on November 13, netted about $4 and paid for a memorial column placed by the L. T. L. in the new high school building. At the W. C. T. U. social at the home of the president of Big Sandy union, Mrs. Della Cantrell, children of the L. T. L. took part in the program. The first entertainment in the new high school building at Big Sandy will be given by the Big Sandy L. T. L., and the proceeds will go to the school. A photograph of Miss Willard will be presented by the Legioners.

The temperance forces of Pasadena and the Ninth Congressional District of California are rejoicing in the election to the United States House of Representatives of Mr. Charles H. Randall by the combined prohibition vote. Mr. Randall will use his influence in his new position to the end that "Congress may amend its liquor laws by declaring that in accordance with the edicts of the great scientists of the world, alcohol is a poison; furthermore, that its use for other than scientific, mechanical and medicinal purposes is a menace to the public, therefore its manufacture, sale and transportation, except for such purposes is absolutely forbidden throughout the United States." Mr. Randall was one of the foremost leaders in the statewide prohibition fight just closed and was influential, through his position in the state legislature, in securing the present local option law of the state. A well attended reception and banquet were tendered him by the various temperance organizations of Pasadena and vicinity.

Mrs. Thomas A. Edison, wife of the great inventor, is reported by the New York Herald to be leading the women of the West Orange (N. J.) Association in a movement against the saloons of that city

PENNSYLVANIA'S PLAN FOR INCREASING THE MEMBERSHIP OF THE WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

ELLA M. GEORGE, President Pennsylvania W. C. T. U.

Pennsylvania has been making a steady gain in membership, but last year it reached the "high water mark"—a gain of 7,057. Two counties more than trebled their membership, while three doubled theirs. Of the sixty-seven counties in the state, all but seven were able to show some gain.

We always set a goal for the state, which we constantly keep before the women. At the beginning of the year the state president sends to each county president a letter containing this statement:

Our goal this year is ———.
Your membership is ———.
Your county should gain ———.
Your membership should reach ———.

We endeavor to familiarize ourselves with conditions in the various county and local unions, that we may give to each suitable help. With this thought in view, we put into the field our own state organizers, the state president designating where each is to work. We prefer to use home talent because our own women understand conditions better than would those who might come to us from other states. Moreover, if information as to the needs of a county is desired, the worker can readily be reached. The organizer sends to the state president a general outline of work done. The president of each new union receives an Annual Report, a Handy Guide, helpful literature, the state paper, and a letter from the state president, in which the assurance is given that her ear is always open to a cry for help. The new union is then placed under the care of the state corresponding secretary, whose duty it is to mother it—answering all difficult questions that may arise, giving it encouragement and guidance as to right methods of work.

The state gives financial help to all counties whose membership is less than 300. At our last convention it was obvious that so many counties of that class had been promoted that, if this rule were adhered to by the state, there would be a very limited field in which to extend her beneficence, so it was decided to give help this year to all counties whose membership did not exceed 400. Some time before the state treasurer's books close, she sends to the treasurer of each local union a letter urging the collection and forwarding of dues to the county treasurer. We also offer the following prizes:

Five dollars in gold to a county doubling its membership.

National and State Papers

Counties sending dues by June 1 for a number equal to last year's membership are to receive a certain number of subscriptions to the state paper.

Counties sending dues by August 1 for a certain gain per cent are to receive a number of subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, the number of subscriptions in both cases varying in proportion to the membership of a county.

The names with addresses for subscriptions are furnished by the presidents of the counties meeting the requirement.

The offering of the last two prizes serves a double purpose—it incites treasurers to an early collection of dues, thus leaving the last months of the year open to the work of adding to the last year's membership. It also affords the county president an opportunity to put our National and state organs into the hands of women who would not or could not subscribe for them.

It would not be fair to close this article without referring to the excellent help given by the many faithful evangelists who have labored in our state. Much fruit has been garnered through their bold and fearless denunciations of the liquor traffic and its allies. To God alone be the glory and the praise. He blessed the means used.

UNCLE SAM'S FLOWER GARDEN

A charming playlet, written by Mrs. W. H. Preston, of which but a summary can be given here, was presented as the welcome of the local Loyal Temperance Legion to the Atlanta convention: Uncle Sam is shown seated in a garden, a place "fragrant with the breath of flowers." He soliloquizes as follows: "Our world is full of loveliness, but the more I think of her beauty, her wealth and power, the more I am convinced that much yet remains to be done to make our country what she is only in name—'free.' The evils of drink are everywhere and the real flowers of this fair land are being destroyed by the thousands year by year. Men, women and children are sacrificed on the altar of the demon, 'alcohol.'" Presently girls' voices are heard outside singing, "The Star Spangled Banner." Uncle Sam, surprised, exclaims. "'O'er the land of the free?' Would that my country were free from the shackles of rum." He ponders awhile, then falls asleep. While he slumbers nine girls dressed in white, red or blue costumes. and representing Truth, Honesty, Courage, Purity, Temperance, Humility, Love, Kindness and Mercy, circle about him and each, in turn, tells of the part she is taking in the struggle to relieve Uncle Sam of his great burden—the liquor traffic. They sing "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," and turn to greet "Prohibition" and the Goddess of Liberty who have come to "set the flowers free." Uncle Sam escorts them to a throne, from which exalted place "Prohibition" addresses the company: "Uncle Sam, Liberty and I have had a long, hard and tiresome journey. We have crossed desert places. We have encountered wild beasts and reptiles. We have seen homes where little children are ragged and hungry. We have seen wives and mothers weeping over loved ones who have fallen because of drink. We have visited homes made wretched by the drink habit and know of hearts and lives saddened by the demon of drink and good men brought to sin and disgrace by it, but thanks be to you and to Truth, Honesty, Courage, Purity, Temperance, Humility, Love, Kindness and Mercy we are now ready to proclaim freedom from all that intoxicates and to crown our Goddess of Liberty." Uncle Sam descends from his throne and as he places the crown upon Liberty's head says, "This is the dawn of a new day. May you never cease to wear this crown. It stands for love to God, love to home, and love to all mankind." After a speech in which Liberty pledges her loyalty, she recites "The Battle Is On," and "Temperance" follows with "The Bonny Flag." The finishing touch is given in a grand march in which all participate waving flags and banners and singing "The Star Spangled Banner."

AFTER STATEWIDE PROHIBITION—WHAT?

MRS. MARY HARRIS ARMOR

"After Statewide Prohibition—What?" If I had to say it in one word I would say —annihilation. When the Canaanites went into the promised land, they found it was possessed by enemies. You have got to stand up and fight for the land you possess. We cannot please the brewers and distillers better than by talking about the failure of prohibition to prohibit. It is impossible in two or three years to undo what the liquor gang has been doing for two hundred years.

MRS. FLORENCE ATKINS

After statewide is won there comes the difficult thing to enforce the prohibitory law. We are dealing with a business that lives in the appetite of its victims. I know whereof I speak when I say liquordom concentrates in the larger cities to elect business men who are favorable to the liquor traffic because when they have their friends in the seats of the mighty, it is an easy thing to have laws violated. It is the purpose of the liquor traffic to so discredit the law that men and women shall say that conditions are as bad or worse than they were under license, and that if they are going to be like this the better way will be to regulate the traffic and receive the revenue. Everybody who spreads the cry, "Prohibition does not prohibit," is making it easier for prohibition laws to be repealed.

MISS CHRISTINE I. TINLING

After statewide prohibition, after national prohibition, after world prohibition there must be education until the end of time. This has been a short year for me for I went home to England after the National Convention at Asbury Park and did not get back to work until the beginning of February. I have worked down in Texas and Oklahoma and up in New York and Delaware. I had a couple of months in Indiana and a short trip in Alabama. Part of the summer I worked in my own state of Virginia where we are so happy we feel like singing hallelujahs forever. As usual I have spent nearly all my time in work for the Scientific Temperance Instruction department. Since February I have given two hundred and forty-six talks in the public schools and addressed seventy-two gatherings of teachers and normal and college students. One hundred and three public meetings, two state conventions and thirteen county conventions have helped to fill up the balance of the time. In Indiana alone I talked to more than 20,000 boys and girls. Two or three special encouragements this year I think worthy of mention. In New York state the educational authorities co-operated with the W. C. T. U. and the state commissioner of education opened the way for me into all the state normals. If the work is introduced in this way by the educational authorities it comes with a force and efficiency it could not otherwise have.

Another kind of encouragement came from a West Virginia Normal president. He has come to think that scientific temperance instruction ought to form a regular part of the course, and he does not expect the state W. C. T. U., which introduced the work, to longer furnish it free. The Normal school itself will meet all expense in the future.

MRS. AMY C. WEECH

The measure of a man is determined by the way his face is turned. Empires and kingdoms are wading through seas of human blood because in spite of civilization men have turned their faces toward the lust of power. After years of seed-sowing and months of strenuous campaigns the stars of statewide prohibition are flaming in our political sky. The problem that faces us today is the problem all ages have wrestled with, and the pen of history has yet to record its perfect solution, that of causing the individual to accept in his life the ideas and the ideals that mark the trail of an advanced civilization.

When prohibition or anything else fails to prohibit, it fails not because of the law but because we find in the heart of the individual back of the law the spirit of lawlessness. So it seems to me in order to follow up our statewide victories so that we may move on to the goal of all our efforts, National Constitutional Prohibition, we must, if I may use the expression, train our guns on the individual, go back to the very first principles of our organization, pledging men, women and children to lives of total abstinence. Many a man for various reasons will vote the dry ticket yet the wet ticket is the measure of his life, so our work of education and agitation is not complete until we turn the very lives of men toward the stars of state and national prohibition, until their desires lead them to follow the gleam.

MISS ANNIE A. ROBBINS

"After Prohibition—What?" Those interested in the liquor business say there come the blind pigs and whisky drummer. Many do not know these are everywhere the legalized saloon exists. This has proved true in several cities and towns I have visited this past year. In one town having five saloons over twenty-five blind pigs were found. One with eighteen saloons had over fifty, while still another with one hundred and forty saloons had one hundred and fifty places where liquor was sold without license.

After prohibition is secured the women should work earnestly to help elect officers to enforce the law. Resolutions and petitions should be presented to the city councils of prohibition towns, asking that ordinances be passed that will forbid the shipping of liquor into the town. Lawbreakers should be pursued until they are driven from our midst. One of the encouraging things of the year has been a visit to unions in Iowa that I organized seven years ago. It was very gratifying to find them still active.

Some Experiences and Some Conclusions

MRS. EMMA GRAVES DIETRICK

It was a tiny village miles away from a railroad. We had come back on the train from such a small meeting. The president said mournfully, "There isn't any use; I'm going to give it up." In reply I began, "Cheer up, sister," but she broke in with, "I can't cheer up." Suddenly from the other side of the room came with a rush a little seven-year-old boy. Grasping the hand of his mother he said, "You don't have to cheer up, mother. Don't you know you said when father went away that you and I would do everything together? You work and I'll cheer." With shining face he gave an L. T. L. rally cry, his clapping hands and stamping feet emphasizing that "Saloons Must Go." "Whenever you want a cheer," he added, "you just let me know." That mother did not give up.

MRS. M. E. PATTERSON

"Co-operation With Other Societies," has been the subject assigned me. We have found co-operation especially helpful in our work in the campaign states during the past year. The W. C. T. U. has the plans, literature, and forces that have been tried and found effective and it is these we can use when co-operating with other societies. The many requests we receive for helps and suggestions make us realize our responsibility toward others. The great weapon of the hour is the ballot in the hands of women and in all the states where campaigns for prohibition have been on the past year our W. C. T. U. speakers have been called upon to emphasize the fact that this right on the part of woman to express her opinion in the most direct way is the shortest cut to the goal for which we are working—National Constitutional Prohibition.

MRS. RHENA MOSHER HOLYOKE

While in the field only for short trips this year, my experience has been greatly broadened by work in a local union of some three hundred members. We have endeavored to emphasize more than ever before, the spirit of co-operation with other organizations. This has been done in several ways. The petition for Constitutional Prohibition was sent for endorsement to the twenty-six Woman's Clubs, many of which signed it. The Y. W. C. A., Y. M. C. A. and Anti-Tuberculosis Society were also glad to sign the petition. We have had addresses on the subject before many of the young people's church societies, resulting in new members for our Y. P. B. In our program for the new year we are to have addresses by the president of the woman suffrage society, and by a prominent club woman on the reform work of the clubs, for many of our own members do not know that the Biennial of Clubs endorsed both woman suffrage and prohibition.

MRS. M W. NEWTON

My entire time during the past year has been given to campaign work in my own state, Virginia. I visited over fifty different places, have given over eighty addresses, organized six unions, received three hundred and seventy-five signatures to the pledge and added many new members to organized unions, traveling over two hundred miles in buggies in counties where there were no railroads and 2,000 miles by rail. I have had the blessed privilege of knowing that the counties where the seed-sowing had been done, gave large majorities for statewide prohibition. Wherever there is a W. C. T. U. organization it should not die for want of exercise. Every department of work that will be helpful to the community should be taken up and the meetings made so interesting that the members will make sacrifices to attend. A strange hostess one who would invite friends to a feast and then give them nothing but stale bread and water!

THE CHALLENGE OF TODAY

LOUISE E. HOLLISTER

Two facts have been demonstrated since the bill giving the franchise to women became a law in Illinois—first, that more women desire the ballot that they may protect their homes and the homes of other women from the liquor traffic than for all other reasons, hence that the W. C. T. U. has a greater hold upon them than any purely suffrage organization. The second fact relates to the effect upon the men of the state. I have had more men in my audiences and have secured more honorary members this year than ever before in Illinois. That men are on their mettle to see that women citizens do not outdo them in their one-time exclusive field, shows the value of the enfranchised woman in community and state. Helplessness certainly makes a strong appeal to manly men, but the ability to turn the tide of political affairs commands a genuine respect.

ROSE A. DAVISON

William Allen White of Kansas tells us that the only hope of ultimate prohibition is in "woman suffrage and the new religion with a social message." Among the forces that I found at work in Colorado these two were conspicuous. Without the power of citizenship the women could not have circulated petitions and been the force they were. The new religion with a social message was most strenuously preached in Denver and some of the larger towns by Billy Sunday and other good evangelists.

Every force that is used to win prohibition must be utilized to hold and enforce it, for no law is stronger than the sentiment that demanded it. We know there is no organized body in the world so well prepared to mould public sentiment as is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. To us is given the sacred commission to keep the altar fires burning for prohibition and educate the public conscience for law enforcement. We are told that we cannot make men moral by law but we know that the law sets the standard high and helps to educate public sentiment. It thus "makes it easier to do right and harder to do wrong."

ROENA E. SHANER

I did not believe in equal suffrage when I first joined the W. C. T. U. I had not then been in no-license campaigns, where on the city streets I saw educated, refined, cultured, motherly, godly women pleading with the voters with all their souls to vote for home protection, and where they were frequently brushed aside by illiterate white men or ignorant negroes bought with brewers' money, who, with heads up, sneers on their faces and curses ofttimes on their lips, went into the booth boasting that they would vote against those "meddlesome women." I hadn't gazed often upon such scenes until I looked up into the face of my God and said, "O Lord, help me to do everything I can to help bring the day when the mother-hearted women of this country can go to the ballot box and register their sentiments against this iniquitous thing."

Recent elections have forcibly demonstrated the fact that the majority of women line up for home protection. Four of the five states which voted for prohibition have equal suffrage. A long time ago I learned that it is an excellent thing to find out what satan's crowd doesn't want and then devote every God-given energy toward securing that thing.

MRS. HARRIETT DARLING HALL

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is the pioneer, the John the Baptist, of the suffrage movement in most of the states, and our challenge has not been alone to the liquor traffic, but a strong challenge to the movement has been the indifference of women. Mothers, homemakers, society women have all looked askance at suffrage, but when the movement grew in popularity many of them joined the procession and loudly affirmed that they had always been suffragists. But we rejoiced with thanksgiving to see the procession increase in volume and force as it approached the goal of state suffrage.

MRS. LORA S. LA MANCE

We rejoice over the victory in Virginia, Arizona, Colorado, Oregon and Washington. There will be as great joy in November, 1915, when we shall greet the new prohibition states of Kentucky, Idaho, Utah and three or four others. There will be wild joy, such an ecstasy of happiness as has never come to us before, when in November, 1916, state after state shall wheel into the prohibition column. There will be California, throttled and overpowered in 1914, at last freed from liquor bondage. Ohio thrice beaten on suffrage and prohibition will come up wearing at her war belt the scalps of Cincinnati, Cleveland and Columbus. Missouri, the brewer's own state, gagged and bound, and whipped again and again, mocked and jeered and flouted, will come into her estate in 1916. A little longer, and from Alaska to Hawaii, from Florida to California, absolute prohibition shall reign.

When the foes of the home are once defeated universal suffrage will come. Women will have the ballot everywhere. The W. C. T. U. and the women's clubs will take up civic problems and study them. More than that, they will bring a mighty force to bear to help to solve them. Within five years after we have National Constitutional Prohibition, that hideous nightmare, white slavery, will be dead and buried. Within ten years after nationwide, continentwide, interoceanwide prohibition comes in, we shall have secured all over the nation cigaret laws with teeth in them; shall have abolished slavish child labor and the sweat shop; and the old regime of the slum and tenement house will have passed away forever. There is a glorious day coming.

MRS. ADA WALLACE UNRUH

I have been asked to tell how Oregon won the ballot for women. I can only tell the closing chapter as the campaign covered a period of over thirty-five years. The campaign was waged on the old lines of abstract justice and especially to secure the ballot as the tax payer's weapon. The majority against suffrage increased with the recurring years and the various elections until 1910 gave a majority of over 20,000 against the franchise amendment. At this time I came into the presidency of the Oregon W. C. T. U. and began an analysis of the suffrage situation, giving the results of the study to the women of our organization, and the convention decided to enter the proposed campaign of 1912 as a real and active force, and in the fall of that year Oregon women were given the ballot. Beginning in the autumn of 1909 we entered the campaign for statewide prohibition which continued without interruption till November 3, when we had our glorious victory.

I think there can be little doubt in any one's mind but that to the W. C. T. U. the large credit is due for the suffrage victory of 1912. The first legislature sitting after we secured the ballot and not elected by us but judiciously looking to future preferment somewhat more than unwillingly gave to us eighteen strong, drastic moral measures, thus furnishing arithmetical proof that woman's ballot is seventy-two times as strong as her influence. All this and then the last glorious victory when the women marched to the polls and wiped the saloon and brewery off the Oregon map with a majority of nearly 37,000. Governor Oswald West campaigned the state in the interest of the prohibition amendment and Portland men and women elected to office a full corps of real men.

WIN ONE CIRCLE

Every subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL desires to honor the memory of our promoted leader, Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens. She can do this most effectively by securing one new subscription to the official paper as a memorial to the one who did so much for, and was so greatly interested in it. Send in the name of the new subscriber as soon as possible. You will then be enrolled in the "Win One Circle" and receive your membership card, the badge, and the little white enamel stick pin. In this way you can definitely help to make sentiment for National Constitutional Prohibition.

LEILA OWEN STRATTON

In the broad, boundless field of service opened to workers in the W. C. T. U., experiences are rich and varied—all of them helpful, some of them hard, were it not that "the joy of the Lord is our strength." Personally the work in educational institutions has been the most far-reaching experience coming to me during this year of continuous service for "God and Home and Every Land." I have reached more than 13,000 students in the six states in which I have worked as National organizer and lecturer for the W. C. T. U. I have organized a number of unions, gaining nearly four hundred new members. I love this great cause as I love God and truth. The battle is not yet done but National Constitutional Prohibition shall be a living verity for this nation of ours.

"And in conclusion let me say
Financially it may not pay
To tramp around from state to state,
Catching your trains early and late;
But if humanity we save,
One soul redeemed from drunkard's grave
Is worth far more to you and me
Than ease and earthly joy could be.
We'll feel that life has just begun
When we can hear Him say, 'Well done.'"

OREGON NEWS NOTES

An interesting decision has recently been handed down by the supreme court of Oregon touching the statutory offense of selling liquor to a minor. The gist of the decision is that the proprietor of a saloon is responsible for such sale even though it was made by his bartender in his absence and contrary to his instructions, the court laying down the premises that there is risk of criminality in the liquor business, and the responsible party can be only the man who owns and conducts the business, and that the risk of the business goes with the profit.

Miss Fern Hobbs, private secretary to Governor Oswald West of Oregon, has been appointed by the governor a member of the State Industrial Accident Commission. Miss Hobbs' spectacular cleaning up of Copperfield and closing out its saloons some months ago will be remembered by our readers.

The liquor houses of the city of Portland, Ore., are advertising unprecedented bargains in wines, liquors and whiskies preparatory to going out of business. "The advance guards of the drys, under a screen of political cavalry, have captured the last trenches in this state and we must relinquish all that the Spring Valley Wine Company represents and sign the article of surrender," is the announcement which precedes one advertisement.

Characterizing Oregon's victory on November 3 as unique in the history of prohibition, Dr. Frank L. Loveland of Portland in a recent sermon said:

"I wonder if you know what a distinctive victory Oregon and Portland have achieved in this temperance warfare? No state in the Union has yet gone dry with a city in it half the size of the city of Portland; no state ever yet has gone dry with so large a proportion of her citizens living in the cities; no state has yet gone dry with such a large proportion of foreign population as has Oregon; no state has gone dry carrying the county having the metropolis in it; no other state has ever yet gone dry carrying every county into the dry column."

CONGRESSMAN HOBSON'S CHALLENGE

If the Sixty-third Congress does not grant the plain right of the people for this referendum to meet the mighty evil of the legalized liquor traffic, the Sixty-fourth Congress will be likewise invoked. The day is coming when we shall have that referendum sent to the states, nor is that day as far distant as some may imagine. Unless this question has been made a state matter by the intervening Congresses, I here announce to you that the determination of the great moral, the great spiritual, the great temperance and prohibition forces of this whole nation will make this question the paramount issue in 1916, not only to gain a two-thirds majority in the Houses of Congress, but to have an administration that neither in the open nor under cover will fight this reform, so that in the spring of 1917 with an extraordinary session of the Sixty-fifth Congress we will have a command from the masters of men and of Congresses to grant this right to the people.

CONGRESS RE-ASSEMBLES AFTER FOUR DAYS RECESS—NOTE SENT TO GREAT BRITAIN INSISTING THAT AMERICAN COMMERCE RIGHTS BE RESPECTED—IMMIGRATION BILL PROVIDES FOR EXCLUSION OF BELIEVERS IN POLYGAMY—CONGRESSMAN HOBSON TO CONTINUE PROHIBITION AMENDMENT FIGHT—SHOCKING STATE OF AFFAIRS IN CROW INDIAN RESERVATION BROUGHT TO LIGHT—ALL SAILORS PASSING THROUGH PANAMA CANAL TO RECEIVE BIBLES.

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D.C.

Congress, after four days' recess, is back at work. This has been the shortest holiday vacation on record. Leaders in both houses are still determined to push through all necessary legislation, in order to avert an extra session after March 4 next, when the Sixty-third Congress comes to an end.

As the hands of the big clock over the entrance door of the Senate chamber marked noon, Tuesday, December 29, Vice-President Marshall rapped for order. The Senate chaplain, Rev. F. J. Prettyman, offered prayer, asking that the Senate now assembling be guided along the right path in the delicate conditions existing today. Seventy-nine senators answered to their names when the roll was called.

Outside of appropriation bills and a few general measures which the House has begun to clear up with remarkable rapidity, there remains much for the Senate to do, in fact, the entire legislative program outlined at the opening of the session by the President, and later discussed in Democratic caucus, is yet to be accomplished.

Note Sent to Great Britain Insisting That American Commerce Rights Be Respected

On Monday, December 28, the United States government dispatched a long note to Great Britain, insisting upon an early improvement in the treatment of American commerce by the British fleet. It gave warning that much feeling had been aroused in this country and that public criticism was general over unwarranted interference with legitimate foreign trade of the United States. The document, which constituted the strongest presentation of this subject made by the United States to any belligerent since the outbreak of the war, was cabled to our Ambassador Page, to be presented formally to Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary. Its preparation was begun a month ago by officials in the Department of State, and finally during the past two weeks had the personal attention of President Wilson himself, who revised its phraseology with minute care.

The note declares at the outset that the representations are made in a friendly spirit, but that the United States considers it best to speak in terms of frankness lest silence be construed as an acquiescence in a policy on the part of Great Britain which infringes the rights of American citizens under the law of nations.

Half a Million Spent by Senatorial Candidates

Nearly half a million dollars was spent by candidates of all parties last November in the first popular election of the United States Senators in the history of the government. To be exact, $460,777.-25 represents the total of sworn statements of campaign expenditures filed with the Secretary of the Senate by the men who sought senatorial honors from thirty-one states. Several candidates reported that they spent no money whatever, but the lowest expenditure on record was eight cents, reported by E. L. Hitchens, Socialist candidate in Ohio.

The Senate on Thursday, December 31, by a vote of 47 to 12, defeated the amendment to strike out the literacy test from the Immigration bill. This action was taken in the face of the President's known opposition to the literacy test. Soon after, by a vote of 29 to 25, the Senate adopted the amendment to exclude members of the "black or African race" from the list of persons excluded from entering the country.

Immigration Bill Provides for Exclusion of Believers in Polygamy

Before the debate ended, a religious issue was injected, in a general discussion of the Mormon faith, Senator Smoot as an Apostle of the "Latter Day Saints" declaring for the right of those connected with the Mormon church to be given free access to this country. Senator Reed of Missouri had proposed an amendment to the Immigration bill to "exclude those who believe in, advocate, or practice polygamy." Senator Smoot objected strenuously, declaring that "the Mormon faith demanded obedience to the law of the land, and also a belief in the Bible." The Old Testament, he insisted, taught polygamy. His objection to the amendment, he said, was that an immigrant Mormon on being asked if he "believed in polygamy would answer in the affirmative, meaning merely a remote, more or less, philosophical belief in it." However, the Senate by the overwhelming vote of 45 to 3, excluded believers in polygamy, the three voting for the Mormons being Smoot and Sutherland of Utah, and Hughes of New Jersey.

> The Smith-Hughes bill for censorship of moving picture films should become a law at this session of Congress. Let your representative at Washington hear from you!

Congressman Hobson to Continue Prohibition Amendment Fight

Congressman Hobson intends to continue the battle for nation-wide prohibition for the remainder of the present session of Congress, by introducing another resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal Constitution outlawing the manufacture of intoxicants for purposes of sale in the United States. This new amendment will differ slightly from that voted upon on December 22. It will provide that Congress and the states shall have power independently and concurrently to enforce legislation necessary to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicants in this country. This will probably have no chance in the present session of Congress, but it will give an opportunity to keep up the agitation for nation-wide prohibition.

Shocking State of Affairs in Crow Indian Reservation Brought to Light

A belated publication of the report of hearings before the Joint Congressional Commission on Indian Matters has brought to light a shocking state of affairs on the Crow Indian Reservation in Southern Montana. The record shows that although the Crow Indians of that reservation had $900,000 in bank to their credit, there was actual want on the range, several of the Indians dying from starvation. At the same time their accustomed annuity was withheld on the plea that it was being used for irrigation purposes. As to these irrigation projects, it was shown that the Indians get little, if any, benefit from them, and that the full cost of maintenance comes out of the Indian funds, while white settlers along the irrigation ditch pay nothing. The commission took much testimony regarding the system of leases of Indian land. It developed that practically 500,000 acres of land allotted to individual Indians are utilized by great lessees with no compensation to the Indians. The loss to the Indians is estimated at $25,000 a year. Bad conditions were disclosed as to many reservations, but it is acknowledged that the worst conditions were on the Crow Reservation. The testimony, all of which was under oath, states that the reservation of 3,000,000 acres, partly good for farming, mostly good for grazing, and in spots supposedly of great mineral value, with power sites on the Big Horn river, is under the domination of one group of interests, largely concerned in leasing the Indians' land under admittedly illegal conditions. It is to be hoped the good work of the commission will lead to a radical change in the treatment of these greatly abused and long-suffering wards of the government.

A bill to authorize the Legislature of Hawaii to extend the right of suffrage to women was introduced in the House on Tuesday last by the delegate from Hawaii. The measure would permit the legislature to submit the question to a popular referendum.

All Sailors Passing Through Panama Canal to Receive Bibles

It has been stated by James Wood, president of the American Bible Society, that every sailor passing through the Panama Canal will be given a Bible. Colonel Geo. W. Goethals, who is now in Washington, has selected a place at Bilboa, on the Pacific side, for the establishment of a Bible distributing station, and when he returns to Panama this month, Mr. Wood will accompany him and examine the site. According to the present plans half a dozen men with motor launches will distribute the books, which will be printed in many languages. The reason the Pacific side instead of the Atlantic side has been selected is because more ships will stop on the Pacific side to take on provisions. The first shipment of Bibles will number about 50,000.

A meeting of women especially interested in universal peace, and looking toward the organizing of a National Peace Committee of women is called for January 10, in Washington, the call coming from Miss Jane Addams, and Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt.

Please do not overlook the Smith-Hughes bill for censorship of moving picture films. That bill should become a law at this session. May the New Year bring to us all opportunities for furthering the cause of God and Home and Every Land.

A blessed New Year to my comrades in this and all lands!

Arguments for National Constitutional Prohibition

(Excerpts from Addresses, December 22, in House of Representatives)

Congressman Francis O. Lindquist

Another man stands in the way, and he voices the only reason which sounds like logic in opposing this measure, and he is the revenue man, the man who has no greater pride than to deliberately place the almighty dollar above human life. He forgets that revenue can be raised in a hundred ways and that manhood of a nation is the true wealth and glory of any country. What amount of revenue can ever replace the lives which have been ruined, the homes which have been impoverished and the children who have been left dependent, simply because we are unwilling to protect them from the curse of drink?

Right at this very moment while I am speaking there are thousands and tens of thousands of young men who are taking their first drink. How do you know but what your boy is one of them?

Zeppelins, submarines, bombs, and siege guns are not the only things that can destroy a nation. We do not need to wait for a foreign foe to invade our land to find it in peril. Our Nation is already in peril, and the foe is within our borders, making a mighty campaign to capture our cities.

Congressman Caleb Powers

Will not this resolution be a wonderfully potent factor in the establishment of "domestic tranquility?" What is it that disturbs "domestic tranquility" more than the drinking of twenty-five gallons per capita of alcoholic beverages every year, as do the people of this country?

Will not this resolution aid wonderfully "to provide for the common defense" by making us, or at least helping to make us, a virile, strong, and sober nation? We have in this country 1,000,000 drunkards, 4,000,000 heavy drinkers and 19,000,000 moderate regular drinkers, besides many millions more who drink more or less—sometimes more and sometimes less, but oftentimes more. The lives of 700,000 of those imbibing are cut short every year in payment for the privilege. Nature always exacts payment. Those who violate her laws must suffer the consequences. Will not this resolution—this amendment to the Constitution of the United States, if it becomes such—aid wonderfully to "promote the general welfare?" What could aid more?

Congressman Percy E. Quin

The American people do not propose to support their government through the agencies that will finally destroy the government. The fact that the United States Government is a partner in crime with the liquor traffic is one of the stigmas against the fundamental principles of the civilization of this country. We want to divorce the American Government from its co-partnership with the liquor traffic. That traffic has great influence in some sections of this country, and it is going to continue those influences unless this resolution is adopted and is finally ratified by the states of the Nation. Some of the states of this Republic never will vote whisky out. We know that. There are certain elements of citizenship that do not care to have this country grow up to those high planes of Christian civilization that every man hopes the American Government will reach.

Congressman A. J. Falconer

Property destruction! Is there a man on the floor of this House who opposes this Resolution who would vote today to make Alaska dry, where there is now no property to be destroyed? Alaska has 35,000 white people, and we have just appropriated $1,000 per capita for a government railroad; and if we were to come and ask you to vote to make Alaska dry, what would you say? Would you go behind the excuse and say you do not believe in the government of the United States telling the citizens of Alaska what they should do, notwithstanding the fact that we have more wards and dependents in Alaska whom we are morally bound to protect than there are white citizens, and when it is a fact that this Federal government owns ninety-nine per cent of the 580,000 square miles of Alaska Territory?

In every mark of the procedure in an anti-liquor fight the forces favoring the saloon find one excuse after another, and today is no exception.

CONGRESSMAN RICHMOND P. HOBSON

Who are the agents that teach the boys to drink? Thousands and tens of thousands of agents of the liquor trust all over the land. You need not think the bootlegger is simply sustained by his peddling; he is sustained by the great national liquor interests. They must get the boys, and they go after them systematically. Why do they do it? What is their motive? Not to harm the boys. I am not fanatical on this question. They do it to get the profits from the sale of their goods. We propose to remove the motive; we propose to cut out the sale and everything that pertains to the sale.

POLL OF THE PRESS

Editorial Comment on Vote on Prohibition Amendment.

Their Dismal Victory

This is not a day of rejoicing for the liquor interests and the liquor sympathizers in this country. As was anticipated, the vote in the House of Representatives yesterday failed to secure the necessary two-thirds to submit the Hobson Constitutional Amendment providing for National Prohibition to the people, but a majority of the House of Representatives voted for such submission. This shows clearly how the thought of the people is tending. * * * * *

There were a good many preliminary victories for the slave-holding interests of the country, but they were victories dearly bought and in the end the Emancipation Proclamation of Abraham Lincoln turned every one of these victories into eternal defeat. The determination to put an end to the alcohol trade is as deep seated in the hearts of the American people as was their determination sixty years ago to put an end to the slave trade and to slave holding in America. The opponents of the traffic have more right to rejoice in the results of that vote in which the majority of the House of Representatives declared for National Prohibition, than have those who desire to continue the legalization of the traffic in America.

Satisfactory Test of Sentiment

The prohibition cause lost nothing in the fight before Congress, for the majority vote which was cast for Constitutional Prohibition indicates very clearly the growth of popular sentiment and points unerringly the way the country is destined to go sooner or later. A few years ago there would have been scant attention given such a movement by the Federal Congress. It would have been difficult to bring the matter to a vote, but a great change has come over the people of the various states as regards their views on the liquor traffic; many who formerly felt it should be merely regulated now believe the traffic to be an unmixed evil and that it should be destroyed; many who formerly favored local option and regulation now favor prohibition and the absolute and complete destruction of the liquor traffic, and as this sentiment is becoming a dominating factor in many of the states, it was a most reasonable thing for members of Congress to heed its demands. The people back at home have much to do with the way Congressmen vote—and it is right that this should be so—for Congressmen are the servants and not the masters of the people.

The vote of the Tennessee Congressmen, which was unanimous for the prohibition resolution, is conclusive of what they think of their state's real attitude on the question. It shows that they have accepted as absolute the decree as rendered by the people in the last election, when they cordially ratified the prohibition pronouncement of the Democratic party and in doing this said to the world that prohibition is a fixed policy of the state.

The test that has been made in Congress of the strength of the prohibition sentiment in the United States must be eminently satisfactory to all sincere advocates of the cause, for it indicates the approach of the day when the liquor interest will be subdued and the liquor traffic suppressed.

Day of Ridicule Past

The vote in the National House of Representatives upon the Hobson Amendment is the greatest prohibition victory ever scored in the United States.

That a clear-cut proposal to prohibit the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation and exportation of intoxicating beverages should receive a majority vote in the lower House of Congress in the year 1914 is a fact undreamed of as recently as five years ago.

Congress faced the ordeal of a vote, too, with a greater courage than would have been the case a few years ago. Only forty-one were absent when the roll was called. The prohibition movement thus proves another element of its strength. Men are not afraid to stand up and be counted in favor of it. The ridicule has died down, as it has become an accepted commonplace of American life.

Political prophecy is hazardous nowadays because the great undercurrents of public thought are unusually obscure, but unless there is as yet undiscoverable reaction against prohibition through police power, we should say that the majority vote of the House of Representatives meant the eventual and inevitable end of the liquor traffic in these United States.

Prohibition is Taken Seriously

The significant thing about the defeat of Congressman Hobson's National Prohibition Amendment to the Constitution is not that the resolution failed to pass. That was of course fully expected. But the significant thing was that it received a majority in a Democratic House, a majority made up of members of every party and all parties. Nobody would have ventured to predict as recently as two or three years ago that such a resolution would carry a Democratic House in the next twenty-five years. Yet it has done so in 1914. How much the abolition of the traffic in Russia and the reported great success of prohibition there had to do with this week's big prohibition vote at Washington can not be told, but it was a considerable factor in convincing many men that prohibition on a national scale is something more serious than a piece of chimerical sentimentalism.—Topeka (Kan.) Capital

Nationwide Prohibition in Ten Years

It may be assumed that there was a good deal more talk of Congress in barrooms yesterday than there was of barrooms in Congress the day before or than there ever before has been talk of Congress in the brass-railed chambers of the demon rum.

There is a feeling in these mirrored and railed precincts that prohibition, by Federal provision or by such widespread state action that it will have the effect of Federal enactment, will come some time. That some time may be as indefinitely in the future as the sot's promise to himself to lay off the stuff. * * * * *

Men who are extremely interested in the preservation of the business of making and selling liquor do not argue. They fight. They permit the use of rhetoric by their publicity men, but they do not rely on it. The method by which making and sale of liquor shall be prevented is the obstacle over which men not extremely interested split.

Men not at all interested in preserving the business or in using its product differ as to the practicability or advisability of imposing rules of personal hygiene and sanity upon a nation of nearly 100,000,000 people. These differences may be dissolved. We believe that if a nation-wide vote upon the manufacture and sale of liquor were permitted, the nation would prohibit it. Men who drink would vote for prohibition—not all who drink, but many who drink. What would happen thereafter we do not pretend to know.

It is observable and conceded that the drift of the nation is toward restriction, if not extinction, of the liquor business. Nation-wide prohibition within ten years? It may be.

Demonstration of Persistency and Definiteness of Purpose

Ten years ago the man who predicted that Congress would be forced by 1914 to vote on a prohibition amendment would have been set down as a wild ass, braying in the wilderness of private hallucination.

Politics was against it. Public sentiment showed no sign of being for it. Yet it is here as a demonstration of persistency, specialization and definiteness of purpose.

When we were studying third base in college springtimes and right tackle falltimes we used to wonder over that fight story about Antaeus and Hercules, because the giant son of Poseidon got stronger every time he hit his mother earth. The prohibition cause resembles Antaeus in that the harder it bumps the higher it seems to bound.

From solitary Maine, made nominally dry fifty years ago, to fourteen prohibition states and a fight in Congress over national dryness is some jump. And in the pathway between these points are bumps that few other issues in the world's history could survive.

The present action of Congress simply means that Antaeus has been slammed down upon the earth again to again come up a bit stronger. A prohibition resolution will appear regularly in succeeding Congresses just as prohibition tickets have appeared regularly in every campaign. And it is probable that more and more conspicuous and urgent will become the people who believe in the efficacy of federal action.

It is not to be doubted that, since the issue has actually been joined in Congress, there will be a more definite alignment of opinion and perhaps less cowardice in discussion, which is a good thing in respect of all general issues that refuse to die of anemia or senility.

Majority Vote Will Make People Think

As a result of the house vote on the Hobson resolution prohibition of the manufacture and sale of liquor becomes a national political issue. It is possible that before another presidential campaign this issue will obtrude itself as the determining factor in the choice of candidates on the national ticket of the various parties. Yet in national conventions in former years platform declarations against sumptuary laws were common.

The heavy vote for Nationwide Prohibition serves the good purpose of setting people to thinking.

A majority of the members of the present national House of Representatives favors prohibition as a national policy. Their attitude reflects public opinion in many sections with a fair degree of accuracy. It cannot be doubted that temperance sentiment is growing in the nation. If this growth is to continue to breed prohibition sentiment one is bound to assume that the Congressional vote against the liquor traffic will be still more formidable in future sessions.

The liquor question has made an impressive entry into national politics, and there it is likely to stay for a considerable time.

LIQUOR EVIL A NATIONAL PROBLEM

SENATOR MORRIS SHEPPARD

(Excerpts from Speech of Senator Sheppard before the United States Senate, December 19, 1914)

Although the decision as to the merits of the National Prohibition Amendment belongs fundamentally to the states, let us examine it briefly. We are told that the liquor traffic is a local problem, a home affair. Experts have figured that the present European war will destroy seventy billions of wealth. The drink bill of the United States is now about two and a half billions every year. In one brief generation the liquor traffic will waste as much wealth in this country as the most terrible and extensive war of history will consume. In addition, the human wreckage of the liquor traffic will far exceed the toll of war. The records show that the annual consumption of intoxicating drink in the United States equals twenty-three gallons for every individual. Add to these things the fact that alcohol is the principal source of crime, disease, immorality, hereditary deformities, both mental and physical, insanity, inefficiency, poverty, and it will be seen that the very life of this nation is imperiled. The Member of Congress who claims that the overthrow of the liquor traffic by the united action of state and nation as contemplated in this amendment so violates the underlying principles of the republic that he will refuse by his vote to permit the people to consider and determine the matter for themselves will undoubtedly have trouble in explaining such a position to his constituents. The liquor problem is essentially a national one, and every unit of government must be directed against it.

"They cannot send too big an army against the Liquor Traffic to suit me!"

But it is said that National Prohibition will mean the overrunning of the state by a swarm of Federal officials. When these officials swarm into the states to attack the cattle tick or the boll weevil or the foot-and-mouth disease, it is all right; but it is a sacrilege, a destruction of all the state holds dear, if they interfere with the saloon. So far as I am concerned, they can not send too big an army against the liquor traffic to suit me, and I do not care whether it is Federal or state, or both.

The states, acting together, formed this Nation for the specific purpose of co-operating for the common good. If they can not co-operate through the regular channel of an amendment to the Federal Constitution for the purpose of abolishing an evil like the liquor traffic, they had as well dissolve the Union and each return to a separate government of its own.

Let me say here that the traffic is so firmly intrenched in some states that they will never be able to destroy it by their own unsupported action. Therefore a vote against the National Amendment is a vote for the traffic's perpetuation. From its strongholds in a few states it will debauch the rest, despite all interstate restrictions, desirable as they are, in the absence of complete prohibition. Aside from this, the nation—that is, three-fourths of the states acting in their organic capacity as the creative power of the Constitution—should have as much right to guarantee the people of a state against this traffic in human hearts, in human virtue, in human blood, as it has to guarantee them a republican form of state government. The latter right is already provided for in the Constitution.

> An Irrepressible Conflict
> The movement for National Constitutional Prohibition cannot stop, because it is grounded in the aspiration of the American people for purity in government, for righteousness in law. It cannot stop until the liquor traffic or this aspiration dies.

It will be seen that the Amendment deprives both Federal and state governments of the power to authorize the liquor traffic. It delegates to both Federal and state governments the power to prohibit the traffic within their respective jurisdictions. How misleading the statement that it turns over to the Federal government the entire machinery of control and eradication! The Federal government exercises, through the taxing power, a control over the liquor traffic today superior to that of the states, except in the case of absolute prohibition. Neither the sale nor the manufacture of alcoholic liquor may be undertaken in any state in the Union without Federal authority. The Federal government maintains a rigid supervision over the making of alcoholic liquors from the still to the saloon, and with this supervision no state government and no state official may interfere. When the state of South Carolina entered the dispensary business her officials had to pay a tax to the Federal government. The amendment now pending preserves to the states the only exclusive right they now have with reference to the liquor traffic—the right of prohibition.

But they say that concurrent jurisdiction by the Federal and state governments will lead to confusion and friction. The answer is that a sufficient number of states to adopt the amendment means a sufficient prohibition strength in the state and in Congress to avoid all conflict and confusion of jurisdiction.

They say that the prohibition question should be kept out of national politics, that it will interfere with the proper settlement of other issues. If they believe this, let them vote to submit this amendment to the states, and the question will be out of Congress and national campaigns for at least a decade. Prohibitionists will then center their efforts on the various states. The surest way to keep this question in national politics is to defeat this amendment.

Solemn Duty Confronts Congress

The disposition of this prohibition amendment is the most solemn duty that has confronted Congress since the death of slavery. It will determine whether this nation is capable of invoking its constituent powers to consider an evil which at least half the population believes to mean the nation's ruin, and to make what constitutional changes they may deem proper for its extermination. It will determine whether the moral forces of the nation are the dominant ones in this republic. It will determine whether this is a Christian nation. We need not deceive ourselves. The issue is plain. A Christian nation can not tolerate the liquor traffic. We must array ourselves for a higher civilization or a lower one. We must stand for the American home or for the American saloon. We must stand for efficiency or for waste, for purity or for pollution.

Gentlemen, before you take your stand on the side of these infernos, may you think of the mothers that are praying for a liquorless republic, of the women this traffic has widowed, the children it has made fatherless, the manhood it has wrecked, the virtue it has damned, of the maniacs it has produced, of the misery of men once strong and proud.

Today we have, as we have always had, an anti-whisky Bible; we have, as we have always had, an anti-whisky God. Millions of the American people, both North and South, now want Congress to give them a chance to establish an anti-whisky Constitution. They realize that as long as the Constitution fails to prohibit the existence of the liquor traffic anywhere in this Republic, it is still a covenant with death and an agreement with hell.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

"It is glorious to man a Lifeboat, but better to build a Lighthouse"

MRS. ROSS HAYES SCHACHNER, National General Secretary Young People's Branch, Evanston, Ill.

GAIN FOR 1914—3,857 MEMBERS; GOAL FOR 1915—5,000 NEW MEMBERS

The year is closed—the record made,
The last deed done, the last word said;
The memory alone remains
Of all its joys, its griefs, its gains;
And now with purpose full and clear,
I turn to meet another year.

Already we have turned to meet another year and as I think back over the encouraging progress of our Young People's Branch during the one just past, the New Year seems bright with the promise f things yet to be done by the great band of enthusiastic young people eager to do them. I am quite sure that every one of us who has had ever so small a part in the campaign thus far carried on, is rejoicing heartily over the vote recently taken in the House of Representatives which shows so clearly that our cause is marching on. As a branch of the organization which is so largely responsible for this advance it should give us renewed courage to march steadily on with our regiment toward National Constitutional Prohibition.

The plans we have laid for the New Year are as good as we can make them, and with every state Y. P. B. secretary, every individual Branch, and every individual member in the United States working in the place appointed, and with the help of Jehovah, our leader, they shall be accomplished. Word has come from almost every state in the Union of the desire to push the young people's work this year. The reason for this is that we are all realizing the great need of fresh young soldiers in our holy conflict—soldiers who will dare to fight in the very forefront of the battle for God and Home and Every Land, taking always new recruits with them. And so the call goes up for more and yet more young men and young women who, being total abstainers themselves, are willing and anxious to discourage the use of and the traffic in alcoholic liquors. I want to give to our young people everywhere a few words of John Bright:

"You are perhaps waiting to do some great things; you would bleed and die for your country. Citizenship does not demand any such act of heroism. Do the SMALL things, and the FIRST one that comes to you, and a second will immediately come." Let us each do the SMALL things and the FIRST things as they come to us in this great work that we may be ready for the things which will follow another year. If our goal is to be 5,000 new members in 1915, may not our individual watchword for 1915 be—"Others?"

WORKING PLAN FOR 5,000 NEW BRANCH MEMBERS THIS YEAR

In view of the great work being advanced for National Constitutional Prohibition, our young people have declared for an increase in membership of 5,000 during the coming year and in order to obtain these 5,000 or more dues-paid members the following plans were respectfully submitted by a committee of state Y. P. B. secretaries at the National W. C. T. U. Convention in Atlanta and adopted by the Y. P. B. conference, sanctioned by the National Officers of the W. C. T. U. and are herewith submitted:

1. That each state not already engaged in Branch work be urged to appoint a state Y. P. B. secretary and appropriate a sufficient sum to enable her to visit and organize Young People's Branches.

2. That each Y. P. B. state secretary, at her own or state W. C. T. U. convention, present prizes or other honors to the individual, the Branch and the county securing the greatest number of paid members during the year; that state secretaries also make it their aim to have a county Y. P. B. secretary in every county in the state.

3. That April, the birthday month of our first "Y" secretary, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, be especially recognized as Y. P. B. campaign month, and that all through this month an especial effort be made to secure new members and new organizations as a birthday offering to the Young People's Branch of the W. C. T. U. and that, as an aid to this membership campaign, "Birthday Post Cards" be prepared by the National secretary and circulated by state secretaries, who will urge each member in their state to secure at least one new member during April by means of these cards, and in order to push the plan still further, that April 14, our Y. P. B. Red Letter Day, be observed by an especially prepared program and social meeting, and that at this time "I Won One" buttons be presented to all who have gained new members during the month—a button for every new member gained.

4. That the third prize offered by the National W. C. T. U. to the Y. P. B.—$10 in UNION SIGNAL subscriptions—be awarded the state securing the largest number of paid-up members during the month of April (names for subscriptions to be furnished by the state secretary); and that the National general secretary award suitable prizes to the county Y. P. B. secretary organizing the most new Branches during the month and to the individual member (anywhere in the United States), who secures the most new paid-up members during the month. The two latter reports will be made to the general secretary by the state secretary, and individual members in sending in names of their new members should use the "Birthday Post Cards" in order that they may be used for demonstration purposes at state and National conventions.

(Especially prepared programs for April, the "Birthday Post Cards," and other material, may be obtained from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill.)

Miss Amy A. Swankie-Cameron in a beautiful letter of greeting to the Y. P. B. conferences made the following request of our American young people: "Will you ask the young white ribboners of America for me if they will definitely resolve to pray and talk and work during the whole of this coming year, so that the young life especially of your land may be influenced for peace? For if those who come after us grow up in the strong determination that wars shall cease, never again will the war-demon be allowed to raise its head and peace will reign throughout the whole wide world—may God grant it!" Let us not forget this heartfelt appeal from the World's "Y" secretary, who has given of her very best efforts to the promotion of our work among young people the world over.

NEWS FROM THE STATES

News comes from the Arkansas Baptist College (colored) that an organization has been perfected in that institution with Mr. N. F. Jackson as president. Mr. Jackson writes that they have pledged their best effort to the work and we know that much good will be accomplished because of that pledge.

Miss Estelle Crane, the new Y. P. B. secretary of Mississippi, is the originator of a most delightful idea and she has carried it out in her home town of Belzona. Miss Crane persuaded the brothers of the young women members of the Branch to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL (Y. P. B. Edition) for their sisters, and the mothers of these young women to give them Y. P. B. or white ribbon pins for Christmas. The Banner, the newspaper of Belzona, comments on the Y. P. B. organization as follows: "It is gratifying to the citizens of Belzona who have the welfare and law enforcement of the town at heart to know that the Young People's Branch of the W. C. T. U. has been perfected. * * * The Banner offers its co-operation in every consistent way to the Young People's Branch and will do all it can to make their organization a success."

A local newspaper of Nyack, N. Y., gives an interesting account of a visit paid by the Y. P. B. to the almshouse at Viola, N. Y., and pronounces the evening "one of the most delightful ever experienced by the aged men and women who are county charges." How glad we are that our Branches are not overlooking this beautiful phase of our work.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENTS

The 1915 Year Book is now ready and may be obtained at the usual price from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters. Order these books early in order that no time may be lost in carrying out the National plans.

The February Y. P. B. Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL will be a "College Number," and, therefore, of special value and importance. Have you anything to contribute that would be of special interest in such an edition? If so please send it in ample time. We want to make 1915 a banner year in the ranks of the Y. P. B. and THE UNION SIGNAL will be our medium of exchange. The pages allotted us for the Y. P. B. Edition are open to YOU. Please make use of them by sending in all items of interest in your town or state—they will interest others also.

For the January Meeting.

Let the executive committee read the National membership and campaign plans as found in Year Book and report on the local plans based thereon. Then let the members discuss same freely.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH CAMPAIGN PLANS

The sixth paragraph of the plans for National Constitutional Prohibition as laid by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, reads as follows: "That the Young People's Branches be urged to have a share in the campaign by adapting to their work plans proposed for the W. C. T. U. and by enlisting other young people to become active and intelligent workers." We do herewith urge every Branch in the United States to share in this great campaign, and in adapting to our work the plans proposed by the National W. C. T. U. we suggest the following:

1. That every state secretary furnish a column in the January number of the state paper, giving the especially prepared plans for young people and any suggestions she may have to offer for carrying them out successfully.

2. That the Branches join with the W. C. T. U. on January 14, in special prayer service, aiding wherever possible with the program and remembering our young people's work in prayer.

3. That we emphasize more strongly than ever before co-operation with young people's church societies, organized Sunday school classes, etc., furnishing them with or conducting programs for the quarterly temperance meeting, inviting them to attend regular Branch meetings, at which especially prepared programs should be rendered, and joining with them in at least one young people's prohibition mass meeting or Christian citizenship rally (programs for which can be obtained from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters).

4. That every Branch endeavor to organize Young Campaigners for Prohibition or Campaign Clubs with the idea of developing Branches later.

5. That all Branch members wherever possible enclose campaign literature in personal correspondence and that they use "The Liquor Traffic Must Go" or other suitable stickers on such correspondence.

6. That the state secretaries prepare a letter setting forth facts and figures particularly applicable to local or state conditions and that copy of such a letter be sent to the president of every local Branch in the state urging that each member of the Branch send a like letter to at least one other young person with the request that he or she read and pass on to another young person, thus making the letter "progressive," and personal. If preferable this may be done with an especially convincing article or tract.

7. That a glee club be organized for the specific purpose of singing campaign songs and to take part in all public meetings, held either by the Branch or the W. C. T. U., and that "outside" young people be invited to join. Our Y. P. B. chorus book or special campaign songs may be used.

8. That wherever possible young people secure the promise of college or other glee clubs to include one prohibition or temperance number on their program.

9. That Branches everywhere render special aid to the W. C. T. U. in placing posters, in poster parades and other spectacular demonstrations, setting aside a special poster day, and having sign painting expeditions.

10. That each Branch contribute and secure contributions to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund.

11. That April be set aside as a special campaign month—campaigning not only for members, but in the interest of National Constitutional Prohibition.

12. That the state Y. P. B. secretaries furnish or see that all local Y. P. B. presidents are furnished with a copy of the March issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.

CONVENTION SIDELIGHTS

There were present at the forty-first annual convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union fifteen state Y. P. B. secretaries, two state Y. P. B. officers from Ohio, one from New York, a number of county secretaries from various states, a goodly number of local members and workers from as many states, all of whom attended the Branch conferences, helping to make them the interesting features that they were.

A "memorial" presented to the Official Board by the state secretaries requesting the appointment of a number of field secretaries in order to thoroughly cover the field during the coming year resulted in the appointment of Miss Ruth Frances Davis, Miss Mary Frances Anderson, state secretary of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Linnie Carl, state secretary of Oregon. We regret exceedingly that Miss Davis finds it impossible to serve in this capacity, but are hoping that she may still help the young people's work in her own way. The other two field secretaries are most capable and consecrated young women and any state desiring to push young people's work will do well to engage them.

The conference declared for an increased membership of 5,000 new members and a general plan laid out by a committee of secretaries. This plan as perfected appears below. It declared further for a definite part in the campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition, and suitable campaign plans also appear in this issue; an effort to carry out these plans in every state; and co-operation wherever possible with other young people's societies.

Every conference meeting was well attended despite the early hour and the long rides which it was necessary for many of the delegates to take. The sessions were given an impetus in the very beginning through the consecration service conducted by Mrs. Mary Stewart Powers, state secretary of Ohio. Mrs. Powers told the story of Mary Thompson's part in the Crusade and followed it with a reading of the Crusade Psalm. The Secretaries' Hour was most helpful in that the "Best Things Done" in the various states were of a varied nature and very suggestive to new secretaries. All states engaged in campaigns reported valiant service rendered by the young people, Mrs. Linnie Carl of Oregon giving a most interesting recital of the campaign work done in her state through Campaign Clubs. Georgia was well represented not only by its able state secretary, Mrs. Lella Dillard, but by a goodly number of Branch members, and we were impressed with the fact that Georgia leads in its college work. New York reported 1,599 young men members and 1,200 young women, over 100 being in attendance at their state convention. Mrs. Perkins, the able secretary of that state, attributed much of its success to district or group meetings and department work. Missouri claimed credit for the fact that two-thirds of its Branches are following the study course. Mrs. Theresa A. Williams, District of Columbia secretary, told of the aggressive and systematic work done through the Sunday schools. Mrs. E. E. Peterson, president of Texas Thurman (colored) W. C. T. U., and Mrs. J. M. Johnson, the Y. P. B. secretary, were an inspiration. Particularly so was Mrs. Peterson's story of how she asked the Lord for just 300 dues-paid Y. P. B. members in Texas, and then started out and worked night and day to this end. The Lord gave her more than twice that number in 757 dues-paid members. Texas (Thurman) Y. P. B. received the $25 prize for the largest gain in paid-up membership, Ohio coming second.

Those attending the conferences were greatly benefited and enlightened by the splendid talks given by Mrs. M. D. Tomlinson, National superintendent of Social Meetings and Red Letter Days, and Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, National superintendent of Parliamentary Usage. Those who heard these two women will undoubtedly make it their aim to combine the "larger vision" with the social hour and to do all things in a lawful and orderly manner. The study course was given much thought, and some valuable suggestions will appear in the Year Book. So much interest was aroused on the cider question that it was recommended that one meeting each year be devoted to that subject.

The general secretary and all state secretaries were much gratified at the interest awakened in the accomplishments and possibilities of the Branch by the demonstration which took place on Saturday afternoon. Each state, not represented by its secretary, spoke for itself through a banner carried by a Georgia girl or some young woman of the convention.

A pleasing feature of the convention was a reception tendered the Y. P. B. and L. T. L. workers at the Hotel Ansley on Saturday. Songs furnished by two of the local colleges, and short talks by a number of the guests composed the program.

The mass meeting on Sunday evening was especially well attended and was not only an enthusiastic but a spiritual one. The Atlanta young people were ably represented by two young gentlemen speakers, and various Y. P. B. secretaries responded with inspiring one-minute talks. Miss Anna A. Gordon in a few well chosen words spoke of the beauty and possibilities of youthful endeavor. Miss Ruth Frances Davis, our returned missionary from Japan, gave a most forceful talk on the "Five Essentials of Success."

The members of the Young People's Branch everywhere will be glad and proud to know that they were represented on Jubilee night by all the state secretaries in attendance at the convention, and all the Y. P. B. members and workers who marched to the platform carrying the banner which displayed our splendid 3,857 gain and sang the song composed by Mrs. Fannie R. Danser of New York state, "The Time Is Now," set to the tune of "The Fight Is On." Truly the Young People's Branch was a large feature of the forty-first annual convention of the National W. C. T. U.

SEND TO STATE HEADQUARTERS

The program budget containing program for all-day meeting on January 14, Plan for 1915 campaign, National Constitutional Prohibition Quiz and Resolution form has been sent to local unions through the various state headquarters. If you have not received this material, apply to your state headquarters.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION DAY

Have you arranged in your town or city for a day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition on January 14? In view of the notable vote given by the House of Representatives on December 22, the time is opportune for arousing the people to a sense of their responsibility, and this can be done by meetings in every community.

PROGRAM MATERIAL FOR JAN. 14

Many of the state papers are publishing material to be used in the program for January 14, given on this page. "The Present Crisis" and "Why We Expect to Succeed" appeared in the last issue, and the Plan for the 1915 Campaign on the cover page of November 26, 1914.

U., price fifteen cents a copy. For "The Present Crisis" and "Why We Expect to Succeed," see UNION SIGNAL, January 1.

Suggestions

Each white-ribboner is urged to devote at least one hour to prayer and study of God's Word before coming to the morning meeting.

Hold the meeting where people can easily attend. Invite all who are interested in the abolition of the liquor traffic to join in the service of the day. Make an especial effort to secure a large attendance of men as well as of women.

Invite the representatives of the various churches and other organizations present at this union meeting to secure in their respective churches and organizations not already on record the endorsement of the resolution favoring National Constitutional Prohibition.

Advertise well, specifying the hour at which well known men or women are to participate in the service. Extend personal invitations.

Place the music in the hands of a good leader, making the singing a special feature.

Children's Hour

Invite the boys and girls from the public schools to march to the church at noon in Young Campaigners' regalia, carrying flags, and singing. Follow program and at close serve a light luncheon to the children.

RESOLUTION

Suggested for adoption by churches, young people's societies, clubs and other organizations, and by public meetings generally. W. C. T. U. speakers are urgently requested to secure from all meetings which they address the adoption of this resolution.

Resolved, That we are in hearty favor of National Constitutional Prohibition and will do all within our power to secure the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution as embodied in the Joint Resolution introduced in the United States Congress by Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson, and by Senator Morris Sheppard.

LAST APPEAL AGAINST RUSSIA'S PROHIBITION DECREE FAILS

The last appeal against Russia's prohibition decree failed December 31, 1914, when the councils of Petrograd and Moscow rejected a petition to authorize the recommencement of the sale of beer and light wines, reports the Petrograd correspondent to The Chicago Tribune.

The recent final order to discontinue the sale of all alcoholic drinks was issued with the reservation that the city council should have the right to appeal for an authorization of the recommencement of the sale of three per cent beer and light wine.

The final prohibition order was so unexpectedly issued that there was no opportunity to provide a stock against the coming period of abstinence.

Between six and eight o'clock in the evening the merchants received instructions that next day there would be absolute prohibition, and hence there was no chance to give warning to eager customers who, on a false alarm previously spread abroad, lined the streets for hours awaiting their turn to squeeze into the crowded wine shops. The formerly popular restaurants which managed to weather the vodka edict are now almost without patronage.

Liquor Men Make Hard Fight

The liquor dealers, restaurant keepers, wine growers, and distillers brought all possible influence to bear on the city councils for authorization to sell beer and light wine, assisted by theorists, who, while approving of general sobriety, thought that abstinence should come more gradually and that the sudden cessation of the use of all alcohol would have an injurious effect.

But, despite these influences and the fact that not one per cent of the members of the city councils were teetotalers, the councils rejected the petition by a vote on a ratio of more than four to one.

The extreme measures to enforce prohibition even extend to the sale of denatured alcohol, varnish, and every conceivable alcoholic compound which is not salable without a permit.

ARIZONA'S PROHIBITION LAW GOES INTO EFFECT

Arizona's constitutional prohibition amendment, characterized as the most drastic in the country, went into effect January 1, 1915. More than 300 saloons and ten wholesale liquor establishments went out of business. One brewery also closed and the only remaining one will manufacture "two per cent," or "near beer."

Saloon men in the central and northern portions of the state have traded their stocks, said to be worth at least $1,000,000, to individuals who will hold them pending the outcome of the appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States against the recent refusal of the supreme tribunal at Los Angeles to grant an injunction staying the execution of the prohibition amendment.

DID NOT CARE TO BE CLASSED WITH WETS

Not expecting to be present when the vote on the National Prohibition Amendment was taken, Representative Adamson of Georgia a few days previously expressed himself in favor of state prohibition but opposed to National Prohibition as proposed by the Hobson Amendment. However, on December 22, he voted for the amendment, explaining that the congratulations he had received on his former speech convinced him that he would be classed with the wets, whereas he was not in sympathy with their views. "If many of the so-called states' rights men had been as honest as Mr. Adamson, they would have done as he did, in my judgment," commented Representative Thomson in telling of the incident.

SIGNIFICANT!

On the same day that the House of Representatives at Washington gave a majority vote for a resolution for Federal Constitutional Prohibition, an eastern brewery concern capitalized at twelve million dollars, went into the hands of a receiver. The liquor business in 1914 is getting so that it begins to realize how the slaveholders felt along about 1860.

—Topeka Capital

The city council of Des Moines, Iowa, has given the saloons of that city until February 15 to prepare to close their doors.

STATE GRANGES DECLARE FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

Not at all frightened by the warnings of the liquor tribe that National Constitutional Prohibition would deprive them of a market for their products, the farmers of the United States, through the state granges, are placing themselves on record as favoring nation-wide prohibition.

On December 8-10, the state grange of Massachusetts, meeting in Worcester, unanimously passed a resolution declaring that because of "the widespread evils of intemperance in the use of intoxicating liquors and believing the nation-wide extent of the liquor traffic to constitute a national menace, thus rendering that traffic a fit subject for federal control," it favors the adoption of a prohibition amendment.

The Minnesota state grange, meeting at Owatonna, December 18, adopted resolutions endorsing national and state prohibition.

PRESS PARAGRAPHS

For the first time in the history of Petrograd, cabled a correspondent from Russia on December 23, four consecutive days have passed without an arrest for drunkenness, notwithstanding these days included two Russian holidays and Sunday. This is one of the results of the governmental order forbidding the sale of alcoholic liquors.

That the old-time cause of the Chicago New Year's disorder and improprieties—wine-buying—was fully a third below the expectations of venders based on the sales of previous years, is the judgment of a representative of The Chicago Herald. Quite probably the same could be said of other large cities.

It is reported in a Colorado paper that a large eastern concern has made an offer to take over a Pueblo brewery and convert it into a packing plant, and the rumor is abroad that another brewery of the state will open a pottery.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

HOUR BY HOUR

God broke our years to hours and days,
That hour by hour, and day by day,
Just going on a little way,
We might be able, all along,
To keep quite strong.
Should all the weights of life
Be laid across our shoulders, and the future, rife
With woe and struggle, meet us face to face
At just one place,
We could not go;
Our feet would stop, and so
God lays a little on us every day,
And never, I believe, on all the way
Will burdens bear so deep,
Or pathways lie so steep,
But we can go, if by God's power
We only bear the burdens of the hour.

PRESIDENT OF W. C. T. U. OF IRELAND PROMOTED

It is with deep regret that we learn of the home-going of Mrs. R. W. Booth, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Ireland. In writing of her Miss Agnes Slack, honorary secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., says: "Mrs. R. W. Booth was widely known in Ireland through her great-hearted, generous support of many branches of Christian enterprise. Her charm and power lay in her wonderful capacity for loving. She has left behind her numberless acts of love and kindness which for long years to come will make many lives nobler and stimulate those she has helped. Her trust in God was never known to falter. Her generous hospitality was shared by a large number of people, rich and poor. To be near her was to feel Christ's presence. Our Irish white ribboners have lost a great leader. Mrs. Booth's help near her own home at Dalkey and the white ribbon savings bank in connection with the mothers' meeting were of very practical aid to a large number of poor women. Many poor girls have been transferred from city slums to the refreshing, upbuilding surroundings of country life and rest by the kindness of Mrs. Booth. She lived to love, to help and to lift."

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. EVALINE E. PRATT, Evansville, Wisconsin, formerly state superintendent of Literature. Mrs. Pratt has served the W. C. T. U. in various official capacities and for many years was a leader in the activities of the Evansville union.

MRS. JULIA D. NELSON, Red Wing, Minn., state superintendent of Franchise, and one of Minnesota's faithful and most efficient workers.

MISS KATE A. PETERS, Beverly, N. J., a prominent worker in the state, county and local W. C. T. U., for twenty years serving as treasurer of the Burlington county union.

SUPERINTENDENTS

CO-OPERATION WITH MISSIONARY SOCIETIES

DR. LOUISE C. PURINGTON

Since the National Convention at Atlanta I have thought out, written and published in this department a manual, "How to Do the Work," a sixteen page leaflet with illustrations and embodying almost all I know on the subject, from World's to National, state, county, and local unions. A great deal of instruction has come to me from my state superintendents by the questions they have asked and by their expressions as to kinds and quality of ammunition needed. All this I have kept note of as the year has gone on. Besides, inquiries have come from representatives of missionary boards, home and foreign, manifesting interest and requesting help; also special data as to the duties ("privileges") of the temperance secretary are called for.

All this and more is included.

What is lacking and wherein in any way the thought does not answer to your thought or wish for information the National superintendent would be glad to know.

It will speak for itself.

I am going to improve some of my space by passing on this refreshing bit in our line—the "hard experience" of a bright New Jersey superintendent.

Temperance and Missions

(In part a prophecy)

Good women sat at a mission board
And planned, and planned, and planned;
Their object seeking ways and means
To Christianize this land.
So great the need, the cause so vast,
The dollars, ah, so few,—
And oh, for a way, a speedy way,
To cut the cost in two.

And women in "a union" met
And prayed, and prayed, and prayed
That God would show that mission board
Just where their feet had strayed.
From the only course that leads to light
On this problem gravely true;
The only way that will reach the need
And cut the cost in two.

And lo, there came to that Mission Board
As it planned, and planned, and planned,
The meaning of saloonless towns
In all this mighty land
And lo, this news to those who met
And prayed, and prayed, and prayed;
"Missions and Temperance have joined;
The tide of vice is stayed."

—Mary V. Littell

But this is not all. I do not know how many read our National superintendents' page. I hope all have the ear of state superintendents at least; they can skip this if they want to.

I am moved, all unknown to her, to share another letter from one of the old guard in our board, to take the thought for a moment from the dusty details of work—overwork—to a bit of the deeper significance in our calling—"to make our calling and election (more) sure." Speaking of the Convention, "What a restless, rushing, almost tumultuous life we superintendents lead. We meet once a year and then have not even time for a civil greeting! Just now as I pen these lines I am almost conscience stricken because I know I am stealing the time. Candidly, I cannot even recall that I clasped your hand."

I do not know how you feel about it but it is altogether true that my thought had run in similar lines. There is the gospel of camaradarie as well as co-operation.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

The following "Round Table," arranged from the Bulletin of the Health department, is suggested as program No. 1, for the current year. Each topic is found in the Bulletin. The program can utilize twelve members, thereby adding greater interest to the meeting.

One dozen copies of the Bulletin may be distributed to those participating, each copy indicating number on the program, with part to be read correspondingly marked.

The leader, in announcing each topic, will, of course, include name of participant.

Program

Opening exercises: Hymn, or music; Scripture reading and prayer; hymn, or music.

1. Statement by leader regarding the Health department, created by merging "Health and Heredity" and "Physical Education."
2. "Necessity for Such a Department."
2. "Status of the Health Department."
4. "Evidences of Degeneracy in Human Kind."
5. The leader will then read, or state, what is found under the head, "A Department of Study," finally calling upon the several members (or visitors) appointed, to read the definition of terms, as follows:
   (a) Science. Art.
   (b) Health. Vitality.
   (c) Heredity. Environment.
   (d) Puberty. Adolescence.
   (e) Genetics. Euthenics. Eugenics.
6. "The Triple Force."
7. "Relation Between Eugenics and Euthenics."
8. "Working for the Future."
9. The four suggested divisions, including topics so grouped that systematic study of the health question is aided:
   1. Eugenics, etc. (omitting sexology).
   2. Mental Hygiene, etc.
   3. Euthenics (right living), etc.
   4. Physical Betterment, for children and adults.

   Music.

   "Race Betterment," article in THE UNION SIGNAL, issue of August 27, 1914.

   Music.

For these health meetings, always extend an invitation to many not connected with the W. C. T. U., particularly mothers. Do not fail to give opportunity to become members, at the close of the meeting.

Health is today a vital topic in every home, beginning with the child, continuing through life.

The Bulletin can be secured of the National superintendent at five cents per copy, or twenty cents per dozen copies. The department Plan of Work for 1915 will be ready the first of the year.

Ten cents will secure sample envelope of literature. New leaflets and other programs will be announced as they are ready.

The Health department will include the literature of both the merged departments. Unions just inaugurating the work will find helpful material for programs in the old literature. Send stamp for program No. 1, and the list of literature, orders for which can be filled, either by the superintendent, or at National Headquarters, Evanston, Ill.

WORK AMONG COLORED PEOPLE

MRS. E. E. PETERSON

January 1, 1914, was a day of prayer and fasting for our people to more actively work for National Prohibition, with the result that a jubilee year has been reported by almost every state president of the colored state unions. Some of the successful prohibition states give fine accounts of the work done by our men and women at the ballot box for God against the saloon.

The Willard Memorial fund proved a benediction to this department. Because of it the Texas Thurman Y. P. B. made a gain of 757 members with live organizations carrying on monthly or semi-monthly programs. On my tour of the state speaking in twenty schools 1,240 pledges were signed and 3,000 endorsed the resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition. Miss M. A. Lynch, president of North Carolina union, and I wrote 200 newspapers for colored people asking the people to endorse National Constitutional Prohibition. The articles were given a prominent place in the papers.

The saintly white ribboner, seventy-seven years young, Amanda Smith of Sebring, Florida, stands back of me with prayer and faith for great things for God and the race.

The Temperance Situation in Kuling, China

ELEANOR E. ELLIOTT

It may be of interest to UNION SIGNAL readers to know what has been going on in Kuling, China (the resting-place in the mountains for twelve hundred or more missionaries) in the interests of temperance. We find ourselves hedged about with the usual drawbacks, and as the slang has it, "then some." It must be understood that this land on which we erected our homes in the mountains, has been leased to the foreigners for a certain term of years by the Chinese government. We are, therefore, known as a company of "land renters." There are a number of nationalities represented in Kuling, but Americans predominate with the British following closely. There is a hotel where liquor can be obtained by the glass, and two stores where it is sold by the bottle. The estate has a constitution by which it is run but which contains nothing in regard to restrictions of the sale of liquor. Doubtless the writers and framers of that constitution as little dreamed that liquor would come into this company of people as did the framers of the constitution of the United States. But the friends, known here as "community people," who are engaged in mercantile pursuits, are mostly "continentals," and they demand their supply of liquor.

The gentleman who largely controls the two stores has yielded to demand and has placed both liquor and cigarets within easy reach of the younger generation growing up in our midst. One store has carried liquor for several years, but the second store was started this year as a pastry shop and tea-room(?) where liquor can be quietly bought by the bottle. The matter was talked over in two homes, and resulted in one instance in the man of the house issuing circulars urging the residents of Kuling not to allow such a thing among us, and in the other instance (this latter our own) in framing an amendment to the Kuling constitution based on the Hobson resolution to Congress, and giving notice a month before the land renters' meeting, as we are required to do, that such amendment would come before that body.

Both appeals did good. On the one hand, the pastry shop has been so little patronized that the Italian wife of the lessee said she feared they would not be able to pay the rent for the summer, and that it was a losing venture all round. On the other hand, in the land renters' meeting, when the amendment came up for consideration, another (substitute) resolution was presented reading as follows: "Resolved, that the land renters' meeting views with concern any possible development of facilities for the purchase of alcoholic beverages on the estate and expresses its strong conviction that it would be for the best interests that all such sale should cease." There was very little discussion and this resolution passed. The amendment to the constitution proved too strong a dose this year, but we hope by another year to put it through and in the meantime to set in motion a campaign of education and revelation.

Now what is the effect of this resolution? The gentleman in control of the stores stated in a letter that he would abide by any decision the land renters would make in regard to the sale of liquor on the estate. Does he consider this a decision? We are afraid not, for the secretary of the council to whom a note of inquiry was addressed replied as follows: "I am sorry I cannot speak with any certainty as to the results this resolution may have produced, but I do not think it is the kind of resolution that is likely to produce any definite results. It is not a by-law or restriction."

One difficulty lies in the fact that the Kuling land renters are not incorporated. Incorporation is a very expensive proceeding and it has been discovered that at the end of twenty years a company of people who have been associated together for that length of time will automatically be incorporated—how we do not know—but that seems to be the understanding, and as this community has existed for seventeen years, there are only three more years before we may come into our own and have some power to enforce our requests.

AN IMMEDIATE DUTY

KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON

At the request of Miss Ellen Stone the Post-Official Board of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, following the Atlanta Convention, voted, first, to co-operate with the committee for Albanian Relief, the president of which is Hon. Charles R. Crane of Chicago and the treasurer, Rev. Frederick Lynch, D. D., editor of the New York Christian Work. All contributions to this fund are to be sent as soon as possible to 170 Fifth avenue, New York. The need in Albania is very great and a relief ship is to be sent at the earliest possible moment.

Second, it was unanimously voted to request each state president to ask her unions to address, at an early day, a letter to Hon. Eduard W. Pou, M. C., chairman United States House committee on Claims, asking him to use his best endeavor that House bill, 1864, which has been four times passed by the Senate, be speedily, and, if possible, unanimously reported from his committee to the House in such a manner as to insure it full consideration on the floor, which it has never before obtained.

Third, Miss Stone requests also that members of each union address letters or telegrams to each of their Representatives in the National Congress asking that this bill be passed by the present session of Congress, which opened December 1.

This is a case in which the individual request will count far more than any formal petition. Miss Stone would have, if possible, every man and woman in every district express to his or her Representative directly the desire that his help and vote may be given to this measure so clearly in the interests of justice and righteousness. This bill, which we all know has reference to the payment of Miss Stone's ransom, ought to pass at once and it will be a disgrace to our nation if it is longer delayed. Let us see to it that each white ribboner does her part for her love to Miss Stone and for the credit of our country.

THE PEOPLE DEMAND NATIONAL PROHIBITION

"In answering statements that the government would be unable to enforce the law, the prohibitionists declare they have no fear respecting this," says Angus McSween in the North American of Philadelphia. "Give the right-thinking people of the country a law that they can use to protect themselves, their homes and their communities from the curse of whisky and they will see that it is enforced, they assert.

"They declare that the country needs and demands such a law, and that not later than 1916 the country will elect men to congress who will enact such a law.

"The prohibitionists are no longer a poverty-stricken force, striving to make headway in their fight by futile appeals to the consciences of liquor-controlled politicians and seeking to arouse public sympathy by appeals to the moral sentiment of the public. They are well equipped with money, contributed for this fight by themselves through the temperance organizations.

"They comprise a majority of the voters in many of the Congressional districts of the country, and they have demonstrated that they have with them a majority of the House of Representatives. Under such conditions, they are going forward in the fight, no longer pleading, but demanding, in the name of the American people, that the greatest and most palpable cause of waste, of human suffering and of national inefficiency shall not be permitted longer to pursue its destructive course."

"Showfolk,"—asks the New York Clipper, the paper read by more stage and show people than any other—"has John Barleycorn and his numerous offshoots been draining your bankroll? Did they eat up the better part of your earnings the last season? Have you a home of your own, there to go when your year's work is over? Have you a bank account upon which to rely when the dark days come? Did booze ever do you any good? No! We are not preaching. We are just giving you some food for thought, and if you will take time to think this over you can see the question is being given wide and serious attention. Why not in the show business?"

"The liquor traffic and the open saloon are today the two worst enemies of the laboring man," declared the carpenters' labor union of the city of Des Moines in a resolution in favor of national and statewide prohibition passed at a recent meeting.

STICK TO IT
Until Coffee Hits You Hard

It is about as well to advise people to stick to coffee until they get hit hard enough so that they will never forget their experience.

A woman writes and her letter is condensed to give the facts in a short space:

"I was a coffee slave and stuck to it like a toper to his 'cups,' notwithstanding I frequently had severe attacks of sick headache; then I used more coffee to relieve the headache, and this was well enough until the coffee effect wore off.

"Finally attacks of rheumatism began to appear, and ultimately the whole nervous system began to break down and I was fast becoming a wreck.

"After a time I was induced to quit coffee and take up Postum. This was half a year ago. The result has been most satisfactory.

"The rheumatism is gone entirely, nerves practically well and steady, digestion almost perfect, never have any more sick headaches and am gaining steadily in weight and strength."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

O'RILEY OF THE WHITE SWAN

MARY P. SAYERS, Martin, Mich.

O'Riley peered over the green baize curtains that screened the bar of the White Swan from the curious gaze of the outside throng. The White Swan—as O'Riley himself was fond of saying to his friends—was a place for men who had the sense to know when they'd had enough. Indeed, O'Riley was always setting forth the merits of the White Swan in his most convincing manner, though why the existence of a respectable business needed vindication was more than some people could understand. As he looked into the street his mouth suddenly relaxed into a genial smile.

"Steve Graham! That's great!" he ejaculated. "It's been a year and more since—begorra! he's going straight by!" His under jaw dropped, then came back with a snap like a pistol-shot. O'Riley could not stand it; he and Steve had known each other too long. He stepped promptly to the doorway to call his friend, when—such a spectacle met his gaze as caused him fairly to gasp with surprise not unmixed with alarm. Down the street, headed by Graham himself, came a marching multitude, carrying banners on which in burnished letters were written the words, "Statewide Prohibition."

"The saints preserve us!" he cried, and hoping that Steve had not seen him, was turning to go in, when with a quick jerk of the head Graham made a sign that had been the signal of their school days—for both O'Riley and Graham had been graduates of the city high school. O'Riley grinned, but a change came over him. He walked back into the saloon and began cleaning up the bar for the noon trade.

When Steve Graham had gone west the previous year on a big real estate commission, he had been far from an advocate of prohibition for any state. It seemed strange to O'Riley that some men could so suddenly change their views. He could still hear the cheers of the people who had rushed from their places of business along the street to view the parade, but he felt too much chagrined at the change in his former friend to feel even the slightest interest in who were the leaders in this fanatical movement in his home town.

That night, as O'Riley was closing up "shop," as he made a practice of calling the saloon, Graham came in with the old familiar salutation. O'Riley returned the greeting, but somehow he could not quite keep a feeling of resentment from showing itself towards his old schoolfellow.

"What's the trouble, Jack?" queried Graham.

"Pshaw! don't you s'pose I can—"

"Look here, Steve," O'Riley broke in impatiently, "what do you mean by getting mixed up in this temperance nonsense, anyway? Don't you know you're doing something that'll hurt my business?" Graham laughed derisively, then immediately became serious.

"That does sound odd, Jack, for a fellow who hasn't cared about the breaking up of other people's business for a matter of fifteen years or more. Jack O'Riley, I'll guarantee that right here in Clifton many a man's business has gone to the wall on account of whisky. In all probability, you've sold him as much of it as any other saloon keeper. I know you've had the trade of many who started out well but now—" Graham shook his head.

"I've been a law-abiding citizen," O'Riley declared sullenly; "I've never sold liquor to a minor, I never sell whisky to a man that's drunk and I shut up shop—"

"But you'll sell whisky to a man until he is drunk! You'll send whisky by a child on an order from the father—"

"Good heavens, Steve, what's the use of our quarreling over something that'll never come to pass! Haven't these temperance spurts been going on for years and the cranks are no nearer winning out now than ever? Haven't I kept tab? Hah!" O'Riley reached out his hand. He had recovered his geniality.

"Don't be too cock-sure, Jack! This isn't the last of us, by any manner of means!"

"Let's talk of something else anyway. Going up to the house?" Graham shook his head. "Better," urged O'Riley.

"No. I'm going up to Hanchett's. We have a little business to transact," replied Graham.

"Hanchett's! Hm! He's on for state legislator!"

"Sure! I know it! For the Independents." O'Riley thought he saw the point: Hanchett was rumored to be the only one of the Independent party who was holding out against fusion with the prohibition forces which called themselves the Home Protection party. Not that he was a drinking man—in fact, he was said to be a total abstainer—but he was still undecided as to the wisest policy. He had never been able to make up his mind whether high license or some other form of restriction would be best.

"You see we have an option on the Hensler eighty out west of town," continued Graham, "and we're thinking of cutting it up into small plats for future suburbanites." O'Riley's big, robust body shook with silent mirth. The idea of Steve's trying to lead him off on a false trail. That Hensler eighty was just a secondary consideration. Steve wanted to see if he couldn't win Hanchett over to his side. He ran his fingers through his heavy iron-grey hair and reflected that he must find some way to stop it. "We're going out there in the morning," Graham finished.

"Why, say, Steve, I can take you out in my car in the morning just as well as not," O'Riley offered eagerly. "Tom'll be in to 'tend bar, so I can get away." Graham accepted without hesitation.

Bowling along over the smooth macadam road leading west from the city, the following morning, O'Riley, well groomed and self-satisfied, kept an ear open for any talk that might be going on between Graham and Hanchett, who sat in the rear seat of the vehicle. As the car left the city streets and emerged into the open country, O'Riley himself entered into the conversation. When the temperance topic was brought up, he made the usual vindication of his business, as he spoke looking to Hanchett from time to time for approval. But Hanchett was non-committal. He was very courteous, but to O'Riley's disgust, his replies were evasive and unsatisfactory. Even a direct question put to him in regard to his opinion about the matter of statewide prohibition elicited no answer of importance.

At the Hensler eighty, the three men stood for a moment or two looking out over the fields of abundant grain, dotted here and there with orchards bending low with ripened fruit.

"It's almost too bad," remarked Hanchett, waving his hand towards the beautiful panorama before them, "to cut up things like this to make cities. It's been a long time since I've tramped the fields. I s'pose we might as well start. Coming, O'Riley?" O'Riley had not intended giving Steve the ghost of a chance to talk to Hanchett alone, but it looked like a gigantic task to drag his ponderous body over the uneven surface of some lately ploughed fields that he noticed in the distance. Somehow, too, he felt a slight feeling of offishness such as he invariably felt when in the company of those who were at variance with his own idea in regard to the saloon business. Stepping back into the car, he seated himself and smiled deprecatingly.

"I don't think it. I ain't much interested in farming only to know whether or not wheat and corn are going to be cheap enough to make whisky sell at a profit." When he realized how his words sounded, O'Riley would have recalled them could he have done so. Hanchett and Graham both gazed at him for an instant in wondering incredulity, then started on their tramp over the fields. It was something like an hour before they returned, and in that time O'Riley had gone over the situation again and again It had been a good while since he had been so wrought up over his social or business status. Of course, such men as Hanchett were ready to take the license money from the saloon-keeper, but they always had a way of making one feel that he was just a little out of the sphere of the better class of people! And Steve! But pshaw! what was the use of getting grouchy. He'd show 'em yet. When Hanchett and Graham had finished their survey of the eighty they at once took their seats in the car. O'Riley, however, had noticed coming down the road, a big farm autotruck loaded with what looked like bags of grain, and driven by what the saloon-keeper termed a "rube." O'Riley was in his proper element when he could turn a good joke on someone. Furthermore, in this case he thought he saw a chance to show up the temperance question in its right light. He kept fussing around the car and awaited his opportunity. "We ought to get ahead of that big truck, hadn't we?" It was Graham who spoke, but O'Riley shook his head. The truck was about opposite now and the saloon-keeper motioned to the driver to halt. The latter brought the truck to a stop, and O'Riley, straightening up, began to talk about the big crops of grain in the country.

"What you farmers going to do if this prohi. movement wins out?" he quizzed, with a sly look at Hanchett and Graham. The farmer pulled his hat a little lower and gave O'Riley a queer look.

"Say, stranger," he grinned, "I cal'late there ain't been many days fer a good while't I ain't took a nip of whisky—but I s'pose y've heard 'bout the tract the temperance folks put out once?"

"I don't know as I ever did," O'Riley replied.

"Waal," drawled the farmer, "someun tried to quiz a farmer same's you've quizzed me, and the farmer told 'em't if prohi. won out he guessed he'd raise more hogs and less hades! S'long, folks!" Steve roared, Hanchett grinned, but O'Riley climbed into his seat and started the motor without another word. Usually, he could appreciate a joke on himself as well as the best of them, but now—well, the ride back was made in comparative silence. At Steve's request, O'Riley drove the car to Hanchett's office. When Hanchett stepped out he thanked O'Riley for the use of his car, and said he was glad that he had made his acquaintance.

"You see," he smiled knowingly, "you've helped me to solve a most important question to-day, Mr. O'Riley." O'Riley wondered. It couldn't by any possibility be that—no, his side had been shown up in too ridiculous a light for that. Just then he caught Graham's eye and without a word braced himself for what was coming:

"You see, O'Riley, I thought that if you

ARIZONA PROHIBITION LAW BEFORE UNITED STATES COURT

COURT REFUSES TO GRANT STAY OF EXECUTION—LAW GOES INTO EFFECT JANUARY 1, 1915

SUSANNA M. D. FRY

The attack on the constitutionality of the Arizona prohibition amendment opened in Los Angeles, California, December 23.

Judge Rose of the United States Circuit court of appeals, and Judges Sawtelle and Wellborn, respectively, of the United States District courts of Arizona and Southern California, ruled they had jurisdiction to hear the application of the wets for an injunction preventing enforcement of the law.

When the case was called, the prohibitionists asserted the law under which the application was made did not apply in this case. They maintained the law in question was an amendment to the state constitution and not a statute, but the court held it is a statute.

Arguments Follow Ruling

Following the ruling above cited, the law was attacked by the hotel, drug store and liquor interests of Arizona and by the Catholic Church. The former three attacked it on the ground that it is confiscatory and that it makes no provision for goods on hand after January 1. They also asserted that it exceeds the police power of the state and is unreasonable in its alleged prohibition of the use of liquor for medicinal purposes. The Church attacked it on the ground that it is unconstitutional in forbidding the exercise of religious liberty in using wine for sacramental purposes.

George P. Bullard, former attorney general of Arizona, was instrumental in drafting the law, but as a representative of the Adams Hotel Company of Phoenix he vigorously assailed it, laying especial stress upon the alleged confiscatory feature, and Reese M. Ling attacked the law because of its alleged injury to pharmaceutical interests.

Religious Rights Assailed

A former Arizona territorial senator, Eugene S. Ives, pointed out the alleged violation of the rights of religious liberty.

The court room was packed with attorneys and others eager to hear the display of eloquence and knowledge of the law. It was a great day for the attorneys of Arizona, and they did themselves proud.

It will be of interest to other states contemplating prohibition amendments to know the holes the wets profess to find in the skimmer, that they may provide against them as far as possible, especially in the matter of giving dealers time to close out their business.

Ex-Judge R. E. Sloane of Phoenix made the closing argument for the wets. He claimed that the act in question is a usurpation by the state of a power inherent only in Congress, and that there is no warrant for its enforcement without the act of the Arizona legislature, giving it life and vitality. He said its enforcement meant that the complainants would be deprived of property without due process of law, and that it was the duty of the court to construe the law as it was written, in spite of the claims that it did not apply to certain businesses in Arizona. The amendment also prohibited the use of wine as a sacrament, in his opinion. Under the amendment it would be unlawful to sell medicine, either proprietary or put up in a prescription, if it contained alcohol. In the opinion of Judge Sloane, the Webb-Kenyon Act, prohibiting the importation of liquor into dry territory for an unlawful purpose, is unconstitutional and will be so decided by the Supreme court of the United States.

Judge Sloane asserted that the enforcement of a prohibition law has been a scandal wherever tried, and cited the situation in Maine (as he sees it). He affirmed that the law was not self-executing, but needed additional legislation to make it effective.

For The Drys

Judge A. C. Baker of Phoenix, who opened the argument for the drys, said the only question involved in the case is whether the amendment is confiscatory in character. In any event, if it is claimed to be confiscatory, it is a question for the state courts to decide. He denied that the law deprived anybody of property rights. The law did not take a barrel or a bottle of whisky from a dealer, but said that he should not sell it. "License to sell liquor is a privilege, not a vested right, and may be taken away by the people at any time. For the liquor men to come into court and claim that they are being deprived of their property rights would be something like the fellow with a faro kit or a dice box, whose exploitation had been prohibited by law, coming into court and seeking relief because he had been deprived of his property without due process of law."

As To The Church

Leslie C. Hardy of Phoenix argued specifically the complaint of Father Connelly of the All Saints Catholic Church who alleges that the enforcement of the amendment would deprive his parishioners of the right to use fermented wine for sacramental purposes. Mr. Hardy said the amendment did not prohibit Father Connelly from using wine for the purpose of the mass; that it did not forbid the importation of wine for such purposes; religious freedom had been guaranteed to all by the constitution of Arizona.

George J. Stoneman of Phoenix said it is a most unfortunate situation, that the druggists of Arizona, whose business it is to conserve the public health, and the members of the Catholic church of that state—a church that had been a bulwark in favor of prohibition for centuries—should be allied with the liquor interests to defeat the amendment. Mr. Stoneman declared that no restraining order should be issued in a case involving a measure built up on the Webb-Kenyon law, whose constitutionality had not yet been passed upon by the Supreme court of the United States.

S. L. Kingan of Tucson argued that the government will not interfere with the states in the exercise of their sovereign rights unless it could be shown that the provisions of the constitution had been contravened.

Judge J. R. Campbell of Tucson discussed the question whether the amendment becomes self-executing on January 1, and quoted an opinion of Judge W. H. Taft, in which a similar issue came up in regard to the constitution of Mississippi. He argued that no ancillary legislation is needed.

Closing Arguments

Wylie E. Jones, attorney-general of Arizona, closed the argument for the advocates of the amendment. He said that the Webb-Kenyon law, upon which the amendment is based, is the last word of Congress on the question of prohibition; that measure, in spite of the fact that it had been vetoed by President Taft, was passed over his head March 3, 1913. The proposed amendment was almost word for word like the Federal statute prohibiting the sale of liquor on Indian reservations.

The amendment had been adopted in harmony with the thought in the country and the age, and the people not only knew all about it, but they understood that it was to take effect in January, 1915.

Eugene Ives closed the argument for the wets. He declared that no harm could come if the injunction were granted and that irreparable injury would follow the refusal of the court to do so. He asked in a voice vibrant with emotion that the court stand in the way of those who would destroy the business of thousands of people in Arizona.

The following day after the arguments were presented Judge Rose, the ranking jurist, set forth that the evidence in the four cases presented was not sufficient to justify the granting of the injunction asked for and said, "The application for an injunction is in each case, therefore, denied."

After this ruling, the court was requested by attorneys for the opponents of the law to grant a stay of execution of the law until the Supreme court should pass on the case. The court refused. Notice was immediately served by the wets that an appeal would be taken to the United States Supreme court,—so the end is not yet.

HEALTH DEPARTMENT EXHIBIT

The exhibit at the recent Atlanta Convention of the National W. C. T. U. Health department of which Mrs. Frances W. Leiter is superintendent is worthy of notice. Seventy-five posters on questions pertaining to public health, sanitation, ventilation, sewage, the "typhoid fly," the health certificate, etc., were displayed on the walls of the booth. These posters were selected from the American Medical Association, the Michigan State Board of Health, the Los Angeles Board of Health, the Chicago Board of Health, and the Battle Creek Sanitarium.

Six large tables, covered with snowy linen, stood in the floor space. Tables No. 1 and 2 held model garments, feeding bottles, and suggestions on the proper care of the child, etc., including casts of permanent teeth, and temporary teeth in the deciduous stage, with some important information.

No. 3 was devoted to a study of "Comparative Food Values;" No. 4, a cultural study of micro-organisms inhabiting the home, school, and public buildings; No. 5, apparatus for the pasteurization and sterilization of milk; also, miniature nursery refrigerator, and labor-savers were demonstrated; No. 6, suggestive literature on the decoration and care of the home; selection and preparation of food materials. An extra table was devoted to free literature.

The booth was one of continued interest, many delegates appearing, not once only, but every day. Tables 3 and 4 were, much of the time, surrounded by groups intently listening to explanations by the department associate, Mrs. Minnie A. Emmons, an experienced dietician and professional domestic science lecturer and instructor.

saloon fellows looked at the prosperity of the country merely in the light of getting profitable whisky, it was time I took a stand on the side of prohibition." With a wave of the hand Hanchett entered his office.

Months later, when the state went dry, O'Riley owned to Graham that it was a good thing, for he was actually glad not to be all the time thinking of reasons for vindicating the business of the White Swan.

SERMONS BY THE WAYSIDE

Though the subject of prohibition is a tremendous one, the human interest side of it touches the very heart of the problem. The following every day incidents of every day life are but a few of the countless thousands which make temperance workers determine to annihilate the liquor traffic:

"LET BOOZE ALONE"

One Ralph Greene, who recently died of alcoholism in a cheap hotel in Chicago, left this statement as a legacy to the public:

"Six months ago I was earning $300 a month as a civil and general engineer. I had a wife and a little daughter and a nice home in Winnipeg, Canada. I did not drink. Then I was employed by the United States government on the marine barracks at Washington, D. C. One night I took a drink. Since that night I have taken many drinks.

"I lost my speed. Then I lost my job. Then I continued to drink, and soon I discovered that I couldn't get another job. I felt that I did not want another job as long as I could get something to drink. I lost my home. Then I came to Chicago.

"I am going to die. I don't care. I want to say this before I go: Let booze alone. It can't be whipped. It's too fast for me and it's too fast for you. For booze I gave everything I had, and now that I haven't anything left, booze will take me."

TRIED TO SAVE HIMSELF FROM RUM.

A victim of the liquor traffic in Lehighton, Pa., in the following words notified each hotel in the town not to serve him rum, asking that the notice be observed to the letter:

"I hereby notify all landlords in Lehighton, Weissport and elsewhere in this county not to sell me any strong drink. God knows I am trying to stop drinking, but I can't.

"John H. Betz."

If the hotelkeepers sell him again after being served with the notice the man is prepared to have them prosecuted on the charge of selling to a person of known intemperate habits.

YOUTH CRAZED BY DRINK MURDERS PARENT

An evening spent in rum's company led a nineteen-year-old youth of Pleasant Valley, Pa., to commit murder. Enraged because his parent reprimanded him for draining the last drop of beer from a keg as the culmination of a debauch, he shot and instantly killed his father. Seeing the result of his act he turned the weapon upon himself, inflicting an injury that will probably prove fatal.

BEER DRINKING A MENACE

MR. DANIEL A. POLING

Science has demonstrated, first in the laboratories of Germany and later in the university and private laboratories of our own country, that one dram of alcohol, the equivalent of one drink of whisky, may so affect the eye that the power to distinguish colors is lost, the ability to distinguish red being first destroyed. One drink of whisky taken by an engineer before going out on his run may plunge a train into an open switch! And engineers have testified truthfully that they saw no red light when it was conclusively proven that the signal was set against them.

A Modern Fallacy

There is abroad in the land a modern fallacy that beer drinking and the drinking of milder liquors generally, should be less seriously regarded than the consumption of the distilled and more violent intoxicants. Fallacy, I say, for the fact that the immediate effects of the higher drinks are less radical on body and mind invites larger consumption—"guzzling." The continuous debauch takes the place of the periodical spree and all the while an appetite is being strengthened that eventually the most violent beverages will not satisfy. I am persuaded that beer drinking in the United States is even a greater menace than whisky drinking. In the final reckoning there will be no distinction made.

Emerson said, "Anything that is against nature will be destroyed." Alcohol as a beverage, alcohol as an internal medicine, is against nature and will be destroyed.

I think the question of revenue, while it is an important one, need not be considered as offering a serious barrier to prohibition, for, in addition to the suggestions made by Senator Sheppard, there are other ways by which revenue could be raised, as I think the capacity of the people to pay taxes would be largely increased if the liquor traffic were destroyed.

Ex-Governor M. R. Patterson

THE RETREAT OF JOHN BARLEYCORN.

There is a doughty fellow, prime favorite and boon companion of our ancestors, who is "getting in bad" with the present generation all over the world. His name is John Barleycorn.

Peace and war, foreign climates and lands at home, all alike spell trouble for John. In the United States, he dodges around the corner at the mention of votes for women, and has been evicted from several states where women do not vote. In Russia, he is exiled on the plea of military necessity. In Germany, he finds himself out of favor with the kaiser; in France, he is jailed on suspicion of lack of patriotism; in England he is tolerated chiefly that he may be taxed, and is dubbed a lowbrow, even then.

It is not as it was in the good old days, when a man's rank as a good fellow depended on the number of bottles of wine he could drink at dinner without slipping under the table.—Chicago Journal.

BARROOMS IN THE HOME

Barrooms in the home—that is just what some newspapers are with their flaring whisky advertisements. People who would not think of going near a saloon, carelessly allow publications containing enticingly worded liquor advertisements free entrance to their homes, where their harmful influence may be exerted on the growing boys and girls. Just now a big brewery company is running a series of large, finely illustrated advertisements, so cleverly worded as to inspire confidence in and create an appetite for their product. Are these advertisements, or others of the same class, finding an entrance into your home? Look out!

—Maurice Floyd in Farm Journal

Go where you will the map of the country is being changed from wet to dry. The wets call it a craze. But I tell you it is a universal evolution and we are stepping out of the chrysalis and soaring on the wings of the butterfly over an enlightened civilization.

IMPROVED CONDITIONS IN WEST VIRGINIA

Concerning the decline of drunkenness and the reduction in number of arrests for this cause in West Virginia, Mr. B. H. Lee, a resident of Bluefield, explains in a letter sent to a brother in Ohio, during the campaign, "before the abolition of the liquor traffic in this city, the average daily arrests for drunkenness were from four to ten. Now the average arrests for drunkenness average three per week, and these are persons who became intoxicated in Pocahontas, Va., and left there too soon. Personally, I have not seen a drunken man on the streets of Bluefield for thirty days, probably longer, while it was formerly a very familiar sight."

In telling of bankruptcy in West Virginia he makes the following charge against the liquor traffic:

"During the past three years, up to June 1 of this year, on which date I resigned. I had been referee in bankruptcy here for this division of the southern district of West Virginia. During that time I handled on an average of 125 cases a year, and I think I state it conservatively when I say that on an average 100 out of every 125 bankrupts were men who were employed by the railroad corporations and had spent their salary on liquor for months, perhaps years, and had not paid their legitimate debts for dry goods, groceries, etc. When they found their wages attached by the merchants of the city they sought protection and relief in the bankrupt court, thus depriving the merchants of the city of from $50,000 to $100,000 annually. Since July 1 there have been filed in this court but ten cases in bankruptcy."

OUR WOMEN LAWMAKERS

Mrs. Frances Munda of Yavapai county, Arizona's first woman state senator, led the entire Democratic ticket, defeating her Republican opponent by 600 votes. She was one of the suffrage leaders in the 1912 campaign for woman suffrage.

Miss Marian Towne of Jackson county will be the first woman to sit in an Oregon legislature. She will have the added distinction of being the only Democratic member of the lower house.

"WHY DIDN'T SOME ONE TELL ME?"

LILLIAN M. MITCHNER

I do not believe that women are inherently better than men. Give men and boys the same environment that you give women and girls, demand the same kind of virtue, do away with the dreadful double standard of morals, and we shall have better men and better boys. The saloon is responsible for ninety per cent of the social evil and we must get rid of that dreadful institution, if we are ever to educate the people up to a single standard of morals—"the white life for two."

Men and women, is it fair that a pure girl shall marry a man, and after awhile go down into the valley of the shadow of death, and then come back to find herself the mother of a little baby blind and diseased because its father in an idle hour of pleasure has sown his wild oats?

Not long since a physician put into the arms of a young man his first born, a beautiful baby boy. The young parents were very proud of it, but in about a week the doctor came back and as he looked at the child, he said, "This baby is blind; he will never see." The father said, "Oh, what a dreadful dispensation of Providence." The physician replied, "Young man, don't you dare lay that on Providence; Providence had nothing to do with it. This baby is blind because of the wild oats you have sown." The young man threw up his hands, saying, "My God! Why didn't some one tell me?" Friends, isn't it about time this black cloak of ignorance, which we have so long called innocence, was lifted and our boys and girls told the truth, that "God is not mocked; whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

"Recollections of Full Years," a book just off the press from the pen of Mrs. William Howard Taft, contains this illuminating paragraph regarding the frequently exploited total abstinence principles of her husband, ex-President Taft: "He was at a dinner at Hot Springs, Va. As the wine was being served one of the diners turned down his glass with the remark that he had not taken a drink for eighteen years. Mr. Taft, in the most usual and commonplace manner, followed suit, saying that he had been a total abstainer for nearly two years and expected to continue so. The incident was made the basis of a sensational newspaper story which created the impression that he had acted with great dramatic effect and that his remark amounted to a declaration of principle which he would turn into a presidential policy."

When Ham set out the grape vine, Satan poured upon it the blood of a peacock. When its leaves began to appear he poured over it the blood of an ape. When the grapes began to form he watered them with the blood of a lion, and upon the ripe fruit he spilled the blood of a pig. Hence the first glass makes the drunkard resemble a peacock, his face turns red and he struts; the second glass makes him act like an ape; the third glass makes him rage like a lion, and the fourth glass makes him wallow in the mire like a hog.

CLIPPED FROM CORRESPONDENTS' LETTERS

"You may be interested to know that our Campaign Edition list contains the names of all the ministers of the town of Lititz and all the Lutheran ministers in the city of Lancaster."

REBECCA W. GRIEST

"I cannot afford to miss a number of THE UNION SIGNAL. I can hardly wait for it from one week until the next. I would love to tell THE UNION SIGNAL family how I came to be a reader of the paper. Some one sent me the full report of the convention held in Nashville, Tennessee, years ago, and then I made up my mind I must have the paper. I did not know where to send for it. I asked my minister and he told me to write to Miss Willard. I did so and she soon answered and told me my letter had been forwarded to the publisher. Very soon I received a sample copy, and have taken the paper ever since."

SUBSCRIBER OF ARTESIA, NEW MEXICO

"I think the campaign number is a great educator, and I shout for it whenever I can."

A SUBSCRIBER OF OWATONNA, MINN.

"The Liberty (Mo.) W. C. T. U. allows itself the honor of sending the weekly edition of the best-ever temperance paper to each of our five pastors, two editors and our school superintendent. Were we able, we would gladly place it in at least a dozen other homes. We wish that every one of our white ribbon women would come to love and anxiously await this weekly letter from home. How much it would mean to be a member of a union every member of which received and read THE UNION SIGNAL. 'Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished."

LAUBA E. CORBIN

"I have almost forgotten when my subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL began, but it must be between twenty-five and thirty years ago. Nevertheless, the last paper, as it comes each week, seems always the best, especially at this time when so much is being gained in the interest of good government."

A SUBSCRIBER OF PASSAIC, N. J.

From Oneonta, New York, has been received a list of 71 subscriptions for the Campaign Edition, all of which are to be sent to teachers in the Normal or high schools of the city of Oneonta.

Interest in the temperance question is keen in Honolulu, as evidenced by the twenty dollar order for UNION SIGNAL subscriptions, recently received from Mrs. Mary F. Whitney, president of the Hawaiian W. C. T. U.

GEORGIA'S ANNUAL MEETING

Mrs. August Burghard, Macon, Ga.

Into the one day of the Georgia W. C. T. U. convention was crowded all necessary business—hearing, discussing, adopting reports of officers, executive and standing committees.

The election resulted in the old officers being returned, as follows: President, Mrs. T. E. Patterson; vice-president-at-large and college Y. P. B. secretary, Mrs. Lella A. Dillard; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Julius Magath; recording secretary, Miss M. Theresa Griffin; treasurer, Mrs. August Burghard. Mrs. Jennie Hart Sibley is our honorary president; Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, state field secretary; Mrs. L. B. Hubbs, secretary Y. P. B.; Mrs. J. L. Kennedy, secretary L. T. L. A fine corps of department superintendents was chosen. All were given an ovation. Special features were the devotional exercises by Mrs. L. B. Hubbs, Mrs. J. B. Dobson and Mrs. Lem Gilreath, and the sweet songs of the loved singer, Mrs. Annie Laurie Cunyus.

A White Ribbon Book

It was a cause for rejoicing that "The Georgia W. C. T. U. History," by Mrs. J. J. Ansley, has been published, and that the book is so creditable in style, finish and illustrations, as well as valuable as history, and that it is of such intense interest to white ribboners, not only in the South, but to all whose thoughts and labors are directed to the temperance cause.

National Convention an Eye-Opener

Great was the inspiration and education which came to Georgia white ribboners from the sessions of the National Convention. "I will go home with increased zeal and enlarged faith since I realize fully, for the first time, that I am a part of this capable, consecrated band of National workers," said one delegate. "It is strengthening beyond compare to feel that I am co-operating not only with my loved union, nor even alone with our state union, but with this magnificent union of all the unions."

Personnel Pleasing

Our National officers, speakers and delegates made a favorable impression upon all Georgians so fortunate as to see and hear them, and their praises individually and collectively are continually being sung in the Southland. Miss Gordon has long been known and loved by Georgia white ribboners for her charming personality, her noble aims, and her many achievements. They will loyally follow her leadership as they did our promoted leaders, Mrs. Stevens and Miss Willard.

Aftermath—National Speakers

Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, National superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, was well received at each place visited during a week's itinerary following the Convention. She addressed the students and faculty of Brenan College, State Normal College, Georgia Normal and Industrial College, Georgia Military College, Wesleyan Female College and Shorter College for Women, Martha Berry School for Boys, Boys' Reformatory, the high school at Macon, and two other cities. She delivered two evening lectures, making seventeen addresses in all, and taught 6,309 students. She has been invited by the president of the Georgia Teachers' Association to address that important gathering next spring, and colleges are asking for a return engagement of longer duration.

Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U., thrilled her hearers when she related the convincing story of Kansas' prosperity under continued prohibition at the North Georgia Methodist Conference at Marietta.

Miss Ellen M. Stone was given an ovation in La Grange. She was the guest of the La Grange Female College and addressed the students, also spoke to large audiences at two Sunday services.

Mrs. Eliza Peterson, National superintendent of Work Among Colored People, has done effective temperance work among the negroes of Georgia, speaking many times in churches and schools.

Our Washington Letter—A Challenge From Kansas—Is the "Loss of Revenue" Argument Worth Considering?—Sledge-Hammer Blows Dealt the Liquor Traffic—What the Liquor Interests Are Saying and Doing—Men of the Moment—From a Governor's Viewpoint

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

HOUSE PASSES BILL PROHIBITING SALE OF LIQUOR TO MINORS WITHIN THE ADMIRALTY AND MARITIME JURISDICTION OF THE UNITED STATES—AMENDMENT TO PHILIPPINE BILL PROHIBITING MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF LIQUOR IN ISLANDS INTRODUCED IN SENATE—SHARP DEBATE OVER SITUATION IN MEXICO—POPULAR GOVERNMENT LEAGUE DENOUNCES LIQUOR TRAFFIC—CHILD LABOR CONFERENCE DECLARES FOR FEDERAL CHILD LABOR BUREAU—WOMEN'S MOVEMENT FOR CONSTRUCTIVE PEACE.

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D.C.

January 4 the house passed a bill to prohibit the serving of intoxicating liquors to minors on American vessels in waters within the jurisdiction of the United States. It would impose a fine of $500 for violation.

Tuesday, January 5, Senator Gronna of North Dakota introduced an amendment to the bill known as the Philippine bill as follows: "That no intoxicating drink or drug shall be manufactured for sale or gift, imported for sale or gift, or sold or offered for sale or gift for use as a beverage."

As the United States Congress is seriously considering the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, it certainly is only right and proper for the United States government to remove the evils it introduced when it took possession, and which would hinder and prevent the Filipinos from becoming desirable citizens.

It will be remembered that the first transports carrying troops to these islands had their holds filled with intoxicating liquors, and within a very short time there were 400 saloons opened along the principal streets of Manila. Congress may well strive to undo some of the evils resulting from this most deplorable condition.

Mexican Troubles Subject of Debate

Mexican troubles were the subject of another sharp debate recently in the Senate. Senator Lodge, ranking Republican member of the foreign relations committee, made a speech criticising the administration's attitude, and declaring that it was all but too late for the American government to adopt any policy toward Mexico other than military occupation. This drew a vigorous reply from Senator Stone, chairman of the committee, who branded the Massachusetts Senator's attack as a purely partisan outburst.

Senator Borah joined in the discussion, and it was indicated that there would be a general airing of views on the Mexican situation in the near future. Senator Stone took exception to Mr. Lodge's statement that it would be impossible to expect the organization of an orderly government in Mexico, and that anything looking to that end was an impossible dream. He sharply arraigned the Massachusetts Senator for precipitating the discussion of the foreign relations of the United States at this time, when every possible effort was being made to keep the nation at peace, while war raged in many parts of the world.

By adopting a resolution expressing sincere regret over the death of Mrs. Thomas S. Martin, wife of the senior Senator from Virginia, who is one of the veterans of the Senate and former Democratic leader in that body, mentioning her by name, the United States Senate yesterday established a precedent. Never before has the Senate adopted such a resolution in the case of a Senator's wife who had died. When Mrs. Frye, wife of Senator Frye of Maine, died, the Senate took a recess. But, in doing so, no resolution was adopted, and she was not mentioned by name, though it was understood why the recess was taken. Accordingly, yesterday's proceedings were unique in Senate annals. Senator Gallinger, floor leader of the Republican side, offered the resolution, saying he did so at the solicitation of many senators on both sides of the chamber. Unanimous consent was granted for the immediate consideration of the resolution, which was unanimously adopted.

"This resolution is somewhat unusual," said Senator Gallinger in its support, "but to my mind notice might well be taken of the loss of a wife of a Senator who has served so long and with such distinction as has the senior Senator from Virginia."

JOINT RESOLUTION

Introduced in the House of Representatives, December 10, 1913, June 9, 1914, and as Amended later.
By Congressman Richmond P. Hobson.
On December 10, 1913, the Resolution was also introduced in the Senate by Senator Morris Sheppard.
Proposing an Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be and hereby is, proposed to the states, to become valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of the several states as provided by the Constitution.

Section 1. The sale, manufacture for sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and exportation for sale thereof, are forever prohibited.

Section 2. Congress or state shall have power to enforce this article, independently or concurrently, by all needful legislation.

Popular Government League Denounces Liquor Traffic

The Popular Government League has been in session in Washington this week, and denounced the liquor traffic and big business interests as the principal foes of popular government. One member, in speaking of the very serious part the traffic plays in defeating popular government, said, "I sometimes wonder whether we can abolish the saloon by popular government, or whether, by abolishing the saloon, we can gain popular government."

Miss Janet Richards of this city, one of the vice presidents of the league, was called upon to discuss certain phases of the very successful British corrupt practices act. "In the United Kingdom," said Miss Richards, "the candidate, among other restrictions, is held strictly accountable for the actions of his agent. The candidate is forbidden to 'treat' prospective constitutents to liquid refreshments, and in case of any contention over the result of an election, the case is decided by the local courts, and not by parliament at the time and expense of the whole nation."

Would Create a Federal Child Labor Bureau

The eleventh annual conference on child labor has been in session in Washington this week, under the auspices of the National Child Labor Committee. The conference drafted and referred to the committee's trustees a resolution, asking the creation of a Federal child labor bureau, to prepare a model code unifying state laws on the subject.

One of the desires of the conference was that every state in the Union should give its children an elementary education: industrial and technical training must be promoted; a "scholarship" fund must be extended to prevent hardship in cases where a child's earnings are needed.

This program and "contract," as it was called, was characterized as stupendous, yet, it was declared, public awakening to the evils of child labor gives promise of its fulfillment.

Women's Movement for Constructive Peace

A third great meeting will be held here, commencing today, to further the woman's movement for constructive peace. The call has gone out from Miss Jane Addams of Hull House, Chicago, Mme. Schwimmer, and others. Women from all parts of the country are gathering for the meetings. Women with a large national following have been invited to contribute strength to the peace cause, and it is hoped and believed that within a few weeks the organization will extend throughout the country.

On Tuesday, President Wilson declined, for the eighth time since he entered the White House, to support a Federal constitutional amendment for woman suffrage. When a delegation of Democratic women, who declared they had helped to elect him, presented the eighth formal petition, the President repeated his previous declaration that he considered suffrage a state issue.

Petitions, resolutions, letters, etc., for National Constitutional Prohibition should continue to come to the Senate.

Saturday, January 9, 1915.

A CHALLENGE FROM KANSAS

CONGRESSMAN JOHN R. CONNELLY, of Kansas

"Today we issue this challenge and feel free in so doing," said Congressman Connelly in his speech before the House of Representatives on December 22. "We dare you to find a community in the state of Kansas where the abolishing of the sale and manufacture of liquor has permanently increased the taxes raised in other ways, where it has increased the crime in the community or contention among its citizens, or where it has made it more difficult to reap a recompense for their honest endeavor."

Mr. Connelly gave the following reasons why Kansas was not ashamed of her prohibitory law nor of the progress she has made during the third of a century that it has been a part of her fundamental law:

She has but half the population of Missouri and has twice the number of students in her state university.

She has more than twice the population of Colorado, and she has fewer prisoners in her state penitentiary.

She has twenty-nine counties without an inmate in a poorhouse and eighteen counties without a poorhouse.

Her entire state debt is less than twenty cents for each man, woman, and child, and she has half that amount laid away in her vaults in cash, waiting for the debt to come due.

Her agricultural and live-stock crop alone this year will reach the stupendous sum of $620,000,000.

Last year she sold over $25,000,000 worth of eggs and butter, and this year she raised 160,000,000 bushels of wheat.

While she spent less than $1.50 last year for liquor per capita, she spent over $15,000,000 to educate 400,000 boys and girls that wend their way to the common schools of that great commonwealth. The state of Kansas is not ashamed of the fact that eighty per cent of these boys and girls never saw a saloon or a place where intoxicating liquors were legally sold.

Kansas comes to you today with no apologies for those laws that you who are not in sympathy with prohibition are pleased to term sumptuary laws.

On the third day of last November her citizens, men and women, to the number of 528,000, went to the polls and cast a ballot for governor, and only one out of every eleven voted for the candidate on a resubmission platform.

We of Kansas, where the storm over prohibition has ceased to rage, have met and in our honest opinion defeated every contention as to the abolishing of the sale and manufacture of liquor bringing want and squalor to the threshold of the laboring man. We have tried it, and we know that it is not true. Our laboring men and our business men have long since ceased to contend that the man who spends forty cents out of every dollar that he earns over the bar for strong drink thereby helps himself or helps legitimate business of every kind. We know that every dollar that goes for strong drink is just one dollar less with which to buy food and raiment that adds to the happiness of himself and his family.

> I am glad to speak today for the splendid commonwealth of prohibition Kansas. A half million boys and girls tread her highways who never saw a place where liquor was legally sold, and a hundred thousand of them never saw a drunken man, nor do they know the taste of liquor. The older generations are not entirely free from the baneful effects of the liquor habit; but from the loins of that mighty people there is coming into maturity a new generation free from the tyranny of its hurtful reign. May it please God that with the coming of another generation we may not only appreciate the benign influence of state-wide prohibition, but that on that glad day there will be no place where a licensed grog-shop may find lodgment under the protecting folds of the national flag. For this we dare to hope, for this we dare to pray, for this we dare to vote.

A folder sent out by some one who is interested in the defeat of this resolution came to my notice a day or so ago, which says that if you legislate to do away with the jobs of the fellows who work in the breweries and the distilleries it will cause these men great hardship, and they will not be able to support their families and buy their share of the food and clothing that is necessary for them. This is a very legitimate argument were it sound, but to our mind it is by no means unanswerable. It may for a time make a little readjustment necessary, but if the money that men spend for drink were spent for additional food and clothing it would create an additional demand for these articles, which would call for additional labor in their production, and the man who is now employed in these industries would find that his services were in demand in other, and in our opinion, more fruitful lines.

In the transitory period from high license to enforced prohibition in Kansas many towns with 2,000 inhabitants allowed, through a system of fines, which amounted to high license, the running of places where liquor was sold. It was necessary so long as these "blind tigers" were tolerated to have a considerable police force, and to many of them it never occurred that with the driving out of the saloon would go the necessity for much of their police protection. These places were allowed to run in some towns because the business men thought the revenue to pay all this police force would necessarily be placed upon them, and they were willing to tolerate the saloon in order, as they thought, to escape the tax. Later, when public sentiment demanded a better enforcement of the law, they in many instances found that with the going of the "blind tiger" there went also much of the necessity for additional expense. It is not an unknown thing in Kansas today to see towns of 2,000 people where once three police officers were thought to be necessary now getting along with one, and this one finds his duties limited largely to supervising street improvements, moving the garbage from the back alleys, and enforcing the ordinance prohibiting chickens and pigs from running at large.

I know little about the workings of prohibition elsewhere, but when those who are opposed to the principle desire to point out a place where prohibition has been a failure they must leave Kansas out of their calculations.

What Is the Object of National Constitutional Prohibition?

CONGRESSMAN RICHMOND HOBSON

What is the object of a National Prohibition Amendment? It is to destroy the agency that debauches the youth of the land and thereby perpetuates its hold upon the Nation. How does the Amendment propose to destroy this agency? In the simplest manner. It simply says that it shall not make profit in barter and sale out of a business in which it cannot get customers by teaching old and grown-up men to drink, but has to debauch the youth of the land. It does not coerce any drinker. It simply says that barter and sale, matters that have been a public function from the semi-civilized days of society, shall not continue the debauching of the youth. Now the liquor trust is wise enough to know that it can not perpetuate its sway by depending on debauching grown people, so it uses an organic method of teaching the young to drink. We apply exactly the same method to destroy the traffic. We do not try to make old drinkers stop drinking, but we do aim to effectively put an end to the systematic, organized debauching of our youth through thousands and tens of thousands of agencies throughout the land.

Is the "Loss of Revenue" Argument Worth Considering?

EXPRESSIONS OF OPINION OF LAW MAKERS

Congressman Kindel, of Colorado

In answer to the soulless argument against prohibition on account of loss of revenue to the cities, states, and Nation, it should not and cannot be considered for a moment by any self-respecting citizen, be he rich or poor, white or black. Even granting this debatable argument to be true, he indeed deserves our pity who lives for revenue only. None but a coward would sacrifice priceless manhood and womanhood to insatiate greed and self-aggrandizement.

Congressman Lindbergh, of Minnesota

It is also foolish to claim that the liquor traffic should be supported to furnish revenue to the government and to villages and cities collecting for licenses. In the first place the evil effects resulting from the business in themselves create more expenses than all the revenue and license collections amount to. And, furthermore, in accounting for the collections made for village and city licenses we know that the dealers must pay for their stock and the costs of running the business as well as a profit in addition. Since what they sell serves no actual need of the buyers, here again is a waste, and the funds used might much better be invested in enterprises that would serve actual needs.

Merchants and other business men in some of the towns in my district who, when two or three years ago an effort was made to close the saloons to carry into effect the terms of the Chippewa Indian treaty of 1855, requested me to oppose the closing, informed me afterwards that it was a mistake for them to have made the request because they had since discovered that the money that had been paid into the saloons was, after their close, being used in the purchase of goods and services that other business could furnish. Leading merchants in those towns have said that during the time when the saloons were closed they sold more children's shoes and clothing and more Christmas presents than they had ever before done, and that most of the people who had been delinquent came in and paid their debts.

Let me suggest to my anxious friends who fear for their capital invested in the liquor and brewery interests, and to those who foresee a failure of employment through the adoption of the Hobson resolution and its incorporation as an amendment into the Constitution of our country, that they look carefully over the opportunities afforded by our state for the investment of capital and the employment of labor. To all who fear a loss of occupation by reason of the righteous increase of sentiment in favor of prohibitory enactments, I say come to northern Minnesota, use your swelling muscles in subduing a portion of the wilderness and enjoy the rewards of a well-spent life in the old age of comfort that may easily be derived from a well-tilled farm.

Congressman Lindquist, of Michigan

If this government has the right to put out of business the great business monopolies, it certainly has the right to put the liquor monopoly out of business. We have destroyed great business trusts—those industries which have carried on business at the expense of other industries, and for no other reason than that they have ruined the smaller industries of our land. Then have we not the right, and is it not our duty, to destroy the great liquor trust, that is daily bringing ruin to other industries? For this business cannot survive without injury to all other legitimate industries.

Capital and labor are much the same wherever we find them. Their problems are the same problems. I live in a small city, where we have a few factories, and we have this advantage, that we can study the problem at close range. And some of these factory managers tell me that when we had the saloon, the day after pay day, in many cases, their men were incapacitated for their work and unfit for their duties, and for the last four years since we have abolished the saloon, the day after pay day finds every man at his work, sober, and at his best. So from a business standpoint alone we shall produce more and industry will thrive more successfully, if we remove this clog in the wheels of business

What is true in our city in this respect is undoubtedly true everywhere the saloon has a chance at the pay envelope of the wage earner. Without the saloon the pay envelope finds its way into the legitimate channels of business, so that the groceryman, the merchant, and the banker alike are benefited by the abolishment of the liquor traffic.

If you must know and must have this problem figured in dollars and cents, there are many who have gathered the statistics. They can tell you the exact amount of money spent for liquor and the amount of money appropriated for the care of the unfortunates, the criminals, the insane and the dependents, who are the by-products of this monstrous liquor business. There is a big balance against that traffic in plain dollars and cents without figuring the depreciation of manhood.

PROHIBITION STATES

Arizona: Constitutional prohibition adopted November 3, 1914, in effect January 1, 1915.

Colorado: Constitutional prohibition adopted November 3, 1914, in effect January 1, 1916.

Georgia: Statutory prohibition enacted August 5, 1907, in effect January 1, 1908.

Kansas: Constitutional prohibition since 1880. Under the law of 1880 intoxicating liquor could be sold for medical, scientific and mechanical purposes. The Legislature of 1909 passed a law eliminating the three exceptions.

Maine: Statutory prohibition enacted 1851; repealed 1856; re-enacted 1858. Constitutional prohibition adopted 1884. February 11, 1911, the Legislature passed a resolution resubmitting the question. At the special election, September 11, 1911, the citizens of Maine, after a notable fight, voted for the retention of the prohibition amendment.

Mississippi: Statutory prohibition enacted February, 1908, in effect January 1, 1909. A bill to submit a constitutional amendment, brought before the Legislature immediately after the passage of the prohibition statute, failed by only a small vote.

North Carolina: Statutory prohibition adopted by popular vote, May, 1908, in effect January 1, 1909.

North Dakota: When North Dakota entered the Union in 1889, the prohibitory clause of the constitution was voted upon separately and adopted. The first legislative assembly passed a strong law for enforcement. The constitutionality of the law has been sustained by the Supreme court, and its enforcement has been strengthened by legislative enactments.

Oklahoma: Constitutional prohibition adopted September 17, 1907. November 8, 1910, a local option and high license amendment was submitted to a vote of the people and defeated. Shipment of intoxicating liquors by freight and express has been prohibited by a federal court decision in that part of the state formerly known as Indian Territory, because of the twenty-one-year provision in the enabling act.

Oregon: Constitutional prohibition adopted November 3, 1914, in effect January 1, 1916.

BANKERS TELL OF PROSPERITY IN WEST VIRGINIA

"It is the general opinion that prohibition has been beneficial to business. Many coal operators tell me their men work more steadily and are getting better wages since the state went dry," is the statement of P. M. Snyder, of the bank of Mount Hope, W. Va., in speaking of improved conditions since the saloons were closed in his state.

"Savings accounts from our working population are steadily increasing," testifies a Clarksburg banker. "Hundreds and thousands of the laboring class who were in the habit of spending their all across the saloon bar, leaving their families in want, have started savings accounts," writes another banker. "The $15,000 per week that went to support the saloon in our city now goes to other lines of trade; real estate men report better collections and a demand for better houses and all the factories of our city are now busy," is the word from the Clarksburg Trust Co.

These testimonies are a few of many similar expressions secured from bankers and other business men of West Virginia by the Temperance society of the Methodist Episcopal church. Among the twenty-seven leading bankers of the state who told of an increase of prosperity under prohibition were officials from banks in Clarksburg, Hinton, St. Albans, Moundsville, Huntington, Grafton, Sutton, Charleston and other cities. These expressions are unanimous in declaring that the money which formerly went to the saloon-keeper is now being spent through legitimate channels, thereby bringing increased business to all lines of trade and larger deposits to the savings banks.

Sledge-Hammer Blows Dealt Liquor Traffic

(Arguments Presented in Speeches in House of Representatives, December 22, 1914)

A CORRUPTER OF POLITICS

CONGRESSMAN KELLY, of Pennsylvania

Not infrequently one hears good people deprecate the injection of the prohibition question into politics. Mr. Kelly, in his speech on the Constitutional Prohibition Amendment in the House of Representatives, gave a graphic picture of the part the liquor traffic plays in politics. We quote from it:

Rest assured that the liquor traffic regards no state lines in its organized effort. From its resources of exploitation it purchases the highest talent. It sends its hired orators on nation-wide journeys to defend it with distorted issues. It controls national periodicals on whose printed pages are falsehoods calculated to deceive the people. It pours the money collected in Pennsylvania into Alabama and that of California dealers into Maine. It will not confine itself to state limits and no adequate remedy for the problem will be found within state limits.

Is this Congress competent to pass a corrupt practices act to protect the purity of elections? It has answered that query by passing the act. But no single force corrupts elections like the organized liquor traffic. No other interest debauches so many voters, degrades so many citizens, debases so many legislators and dishonors so many public officials.

Trace its slimy way through national records and you will find it industriously at work today as in years past—find it at work in corruption and bribery, as was evidenced in the recent Mulhall lobby investigation; find it in collusion of criminals with the officers of the courts; find it manipulating the ballot and robbing the ballot box; find it thwarting the people's will by the most putrid measures, and find it the enemy of good legislation and the friend of vicious measures; find it the foe of good government, the eternal adversary of respectability, morality and patriotism.

The liquor traffic stands today as the foulest stench of governmental corruption in nation, state, county, city, township and village. It violates with brazen shamelessness, more laws than all the inmates of all penal institutions multiplied by thousands. Its record of debauchery is a scar across the face of the Republic. It is the greatest incentive to corruption and lawlessness in the nation.

CONVERTED TO PROHIBITION BY A STRIKE

CONGRESSMAN KINDEL, of Colorado

A little over a year ago, while my state was suffering the agonies of a coal strike, in which 1,000 miners were led by union agitators who insisted on intimidating over 10,000 fellow workers and making them submit to being subjected to $10 initiation and $1 per month dues and whatever fines or check-ups might be imposed upon them, I witnessed the overindulgence in liquor and its consequent results, and it was here that I was converted to Mr. Hobson's views on the liquor question. The purpose of my visit to the coal camps of southern Colorado was to get a minute understanding of the situation; therefore I was resolved to investigate the causes of trouble impartially and fearlessly. I was escorted first by one side and then by the other, and listened attentively to every complaint presented. I soon discovered that if the demon liquor could be banished from the coal camps, peace and prosperity would again prevail. I then and there came to the conclusion that it was my duty to assist in restoring law and order; that I would henceforth become a champion of prohibition for the good of humanity, although I am of German extraction and indulged in beer, and so forth, all my life, having been reared in an atmosphere of so-called personal privilege.

Just as soon as the Union troops appeared on the scene and liquor was at once positively prohibited, then anarchy ceased and the efficiency of 12,000 miners at work, by reason of enforced prohibition, was increased to from 15 to 25 per cent. (See sworn statement of mine operators).

The merchants and miners are thankful for the restoration of law and order and attendant happiness. It was the coal strike, more than any other one argument, that is responsible for state-wide prohibition in Colorado, by a large majority at the recent election.

A WORD ON PERSONAL LIBERTY

CONGRESSMAN STEPHENS, of Mississippi

One of the arguments that has frequently been advanced by the advocates of the liquor interests is that prohibition is wrong because it deprives men of their rights, it takes away their personal liberties. They say that a man has a right to drink, if he cares to do so; therefore, there should be no curtailment of opportunities for him to procure intoxicants.

They follow this argument up by saying that the Government has just as much right to prescribe what a man shall eat or what kind of clothes he shall wear as it has to legislate on the liquor question. There is absolutely no analogy between the propositions. To state the argument is to refute it.

A learned judge in Illinois, in passing upon a case before him, once said: "When we defend the sale of liquor for the purpose of tippling, we surely draw our arguments from our appetites and not from our reason, observation and experience."

"Personal liberty!" Every state has laws prohibiting the doing of many things, yet no one would denounce or oppose those laws on the ground that they interfere with the "personal liberty" of the citizen.

There are laws prohibiting gambling. Why deny the citizen a right to engage in that pastime if he sees proper to do so?

There are laws prohibiting a person from being drunk in a public place. Why deprive him of his "personal liberty" in this matter?

There are laws against profanity. Why infringe upon his "personal liberty" or his right to freedom of speech?

There are laws against vagrancy. Why not allow a man to loaf as much as he wants to?

There are hundreds of laws that provide for the punishment of those who violate them. Why not repeal all laws that make the doing of certain things unlawful and give every man his "personal liberty" to the fullest extent?

The answer to all these questions is that the interests of society, morals and good government require protection from the criminal, the vicious and the immoral.

DISSERTATION ON STATES' RIGHTS

CONGRESSMAN CALEB POWERS, of Kentucky

Every time a pesky tick straddles the back of a mangy steer in any of the barren wastes of the sunny south, has not the state rights statesman risen up in consternation and yelled to Uncle Sam for help? And has not Uncle Sam been generous in expending hundreds of thousands of dollars to eradicate the tick? No question raised about state rights then.

Uncle Sam and the Hog Cholera

And did not Uncle Sam, only last year, by the authority of no less a body than Congress itself, appropriate in a bill, which was hastily signed by the President, $500,000 to stop the hog cholera in the Middle West? And did not the state rights statesmen of Arkansas, Iowa, Nebraska and Missouri applaud that generous act on the part of Uncle Sam? Nothing said about state rights then.

Uncle Sam and the Hoof-and-Mouth Disease

And is there not a crusade now on, by no less authority than the government of the United States itself, against the hoof-and-mouth disease, which is afflicting the cattle of our country? And has not the Secretary of Agriculture already expended over $1,000,000 in the suppression of that epidemic? And will not the United States government be called upon to spend many millions more for the cattle already destroyed by its authority?

Uncle Sam and the Liquor Traffic

Is it good common sense and good state rights doctrine for the National government to spend millions of money every year in killing boll weevils, destroying ticks, and saving sick hogs, while not a copper goes to suppress the demon drink, which is filling our prisons, despoiling our homes, and damning our children? Is it good common sense and good state rights doctrine for the Federal government to spend millions of money in determining what to feed the horse and how to care for the cow, especially when afflicted with the hoof-and-mouth disease, while nothing is done for the hoof-and-mouth disease of millions of human beings—our own countrymen—a mouth disease that is ever recurring and that can only be assuaged by that which destroys its victim, and a foot disease that sends every year 1,000,000 drunkards and 4,000,000 heavy drinkers from neglected duties and unembraced opportunities to homes despoiled by their misdoings and dishonored by their misdeeds?

MEN OF THE MOMENT

THEIR TEMPERANCE PRACTICES AND PRONOUNCEMENTS

CHARLES BAILEY, Wheatley, Doncaster, England

The appalling character of the fearful struggle raging on the European continent has staggered the civilized world, especially the Christianized portions thereof. Ruthless and utterly un-Christlike the arbitrament of the sword with rare exceptions indeed, in the light of the Saviour's teachings! Absurd and largely futile, too, for real settlement of international disputes in the light of history's irrefutable records! Widowhood, orphanhood, devastation, impoverishment, brutality and overwhelming sorrows the inevitable concomitants of war's pitiless, unsparing march.

Well-nigh nineteen centuries since the advent upon earth of the Prince of Peace, and still the hideous clash of arms is heard, and men revel in slaughter of their fellows, still apparently the brotherhood of the human race is but an ideal, and the inauguration of the era of universal and eternal peace a consummation far in the future. Yet amid all the distracting, despairing elements so patent in connection with the measureless concatenation of tragedies Europe is now witnessing, one feature, at least, is gratifying—particularly so—to ardent pleaders for temperance reform and for prohibition legislation. This is the pronounced total abstinence sentiments possessed and displayed by several of the leaders of the forces arrayed in such deadly antagonism. Remarkable is the wide recognition of the advantages assured by practice of non-alcoholic methods.

Czar and Kaiser Opposed to Liquor

The suppression of the sale of intoxicants in autocratic Russia and Germany immediately on the outbreak of war plainly indicates the views of the Czar and Kaiser on the alcohol question. Understanding the strenuousness of the conflict of the coming months, perhaps years, both imperial rulers realized that their peoples and in particular the officers and men must be in the fittest condition of body and mind possible, and this could not be were the use of alcohol, as usual, permitted. Evidently the Russian leaders have learned one important lesson from the struggle with Japan ten years ago. Abundance of vodka for the men and quantities of champagne for the officers proved a chief factor in the severe defeats which the Russian forces then suffered. There must be no possibility of disaster from such a cause in the more terrible conflict of today, hence the present prohibition decree, and the extraordinary benefits which have so obviously accrued, prompting an emphatic popular demand for the decree's continuance, have considerably strengthened the temperance convictions of the Czar and his advisers. "Not a hard word, not a row, but everywhere peace, kindness, and industry. War is said to be hell but this is like a foretaste of heaven." Thus has the improvement in social and home conditions been described in a Russian newspaper. Accordingly the Czar has declared his intention that prohibition of intoxicants shall not be for the period of the war only, but remain a permanent law of the empire.

That the Kaiser was becoming a pronounced supporter of temperance methods has been for some years increasingly evident. Repeatedly he has urged the students of Germany's educational institutions to eschew drinking habits, and has encouraged in sundry ways the promotion of abstinence among the men and youth of his army and navy. In strong terms he has expressed his sense of the national disadvantage and danger entailed by the beer-imbibing proclivities of his subjects. To add the influence of his example to that of his words he has personally used only non-stimulating drinks when engaged with his troops at their annual maneuvers. His declaration that the nations which drink the least alcohol will win the day has been frequently quoted in furtherance of temperance advocacy.

Belgian King Sympathizes with Temperance Ideals

King Albert of Belgium, also, whose heroism, together with that of the noble Queen, in defense of the independence of his country and in resolutely sharing the trials and inconveniences of war fully with his people has commanded world-wide admiration, is a keen sympathizer with temperance ideals though the democratic nature of his rule prevents immediate drastic action like that in Russia and Germany. Replying to an international appeal on behalf of prohibition, in January, 1912, he promised the appeal his "most distinguished consideration." Previously thereto to stamp the impress of his royal favor on the aims of the Belgian anti-alcoholic movement and to show his deep interest in the efforts for the increased sobriety of the nation, he attended personally an important demonstration under the auspices of this organization, and followed intently the arguments and pleas presented by the eloquent advocate, M. Henri Robert. Undoubtedly the popularization of the temperance cause in Belgium was aided immensely thereby.

What say the French leaders? One at least, an officer of specially high distinction and exceptionally wide experience, has expressed unqualified belief, based upon facts of his own career, in the physical benefits of rigid avoidance of intoxicating beverages. When Paris was in imminent peril of siege in August last the defense forces were placed under the supreme direction of General Gallieni, an evidence of the complete confidence reposed by the French government in his abilities as a militarist. For invaluable aid received a few years ago General Gallieni is greatly indebted to strict temperance principles. Probably his vigor and capability for active military efforts today are due to his practice of these principles. While in comparative young manhood, engaged in arduous military operations in the debilitating climates of the East he became the victim of severe stomachic disorders which threatened to incapacitate him entirely for duty, and to curtail his life. Vainly he tried various supposed remedies, then resolved he would try total abstinence. He refused all beverages intoxicating or non-intoxicating but water. Whether fresh from the mountain rill or discolored and contaminated on the ricefield and marsh ground, water was his sole drink. The result was marvelous. He made a speedy and entirely satisfactory recovery to health. In Tonquin, Soudan, Madagascar in multiform ways his strenuous exertions and freedom from illness unquestionably established the correctness of the abstinent mode of life he had adopted. "I never had a better idea in my life." Such was his statement after twelve years of trial. He further stated that his health was fully restored, and he had been able to undertake most exacting and prolonged campaigns in the best condition possible.

Particularly have master minds participating in Britain's phase of the struggle, and directing her military and naval destinies, manifested keen temperance sympathies both by personal abstinence and by clearly approving expressions of opinion on the subject. Lord Kitchener of Khartoum, the war minister specially appointed for the present war period, has repeatedly evinced his strong conviction of the advantage which abstinence methods confer. When leader of the British Soudan expedition in 1898 he forbade intoxicants absolutely throughout the whole campaign, beer surreptitiously introduced being immediately by his peremptory order poured upon the sand. Why? Because Alcohol is the Antithesis of Efficiency

What the Liquor Interests Are Saying and Doing

"Again I have the honor," said M. F. Farley, president of the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association, in his address before the recent convention of the National Brewers' Association, "of bringing to you fraternal greetings as the representative head of one hundred and eighty thousand retail liquor dealers, who labor from early morning until late at night from January 1 to December 31 of each and every year gathering in the nickels in order that they may pay them over to you in checks."

One is reminded by this illuminating greeting from the representative of the saloonkeepers of the nation of the forceful statement of Congressman William L. La Follette of the state of Washington:

"Gentlemen may delude themselves with state rights theories, with personal liberty theories, and sophistries of many kinds to satisfy their consciences on the prohibition question, but I say, to come down to the last analysis, it is the greed of gain, the almighty dollar that controls, and if it were not for that influence the use of intoxicating beverages would have ceased long ago."

Members of the Michigan County Brewers' Association meeting in Grand Rapids, voted $10,000 to conduct a campaign of education in Michigan. That temperance is the rule of "not too much" and that breweries play an important part in civic community life, will be the chief subjects taught.

In every state of the Union so-called "campaigns of education" of this character are being inaugurated. They must be met by true educational campaigns along scientific, economic and moral lines. Remember the terse saying of Bishop Fowler: "If you reflect a ray of light into a rat hole, you destroy it for rat purposes." Try turning the searchlight of truth on the liquor traffic.

"The brewers have no quarrel with those who strive for practical temperance reform. The brewers are heartily in favor of any measure which will bring about true temperance and prevent the abuse of liquor and remove anything improper or vicious in connection with its sale. They do not believe, however, that this can be accomplished by prohibition or any other sumptuary means."

Thus speaks Jacob Ruppert, president of the New York State Brewers' Association.

Congressman Addison T. Smith of Idaho, in the recent debate in the House of Representatives on National Constitutional Prohibition, remarked apropos of this assertion on the part of the liquor man: "The liquor dealers advise moral suasion and education with reference to the evils of intemperance; but what are they doing toward co-operating with the temperance people in influencing the drunkard to reform? Do they issue pamphlets, deliver lectures, or in any other way attempt to influence the tippler to be more temperate? Is it not their business to extend their trade by increasing the number of their customers?"

The vote December 22, should carry with it a lesson and a warning. When a majority of the representatives of the people vote against an industry of such magnitude, it means something. The liquor men should themselves take the first steps toward placing the business on a business basis and toward enforcing such regulation as will keep it above reproach so far as the public morals are concerned. The abolishment of this industry would be a severe blow to Peoria and to the farmers and railroads of Illinois. It is all the more necessary, therefore, that it be placed on a basis that will make it acceptable to the majority of the people and allay the agitation now being waged against it.—Peoria (Ill.) Star.

Why attempt the impossible? The nature of the drink traffic precludes the possibility of placing it on a basis that will make it tolerable to decent people.

The education of the public by means of literature ready for distribution broadcast, as well as a steady fire kept up in the press, even if space has to be paid for, should be a part of the work under the direction of the secretary, assisted as he would be by volunteers, whose enthusiasm would be stirred by the activity created by the new functionary. He should be ready at all times to take the public platform to explain and defend our cause, or by access to the press to reach the numerous body of silent voters who attend no public meetings, but make up their minds in the privacy of their own homes.—Mida's Criterion, December 16.

"Even if space has to be paid for"—Note the words. The liquor interests are finding it very difficult, even for liberal compensation, to get their misrepresentations and fabrications published. Let us make it increasingly difficult by educating the people to refuse to take or read papers whose columns are for sale to the liquorites.

WHY NOT ANSWER THE BREWERS AS YOU DID THE SUGAR GROWERS?

CONGRESSMAN THOMSON, of Illinois

Many of those who are not in favor of prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage give as one of the reasons for their position the fact that it would interfere with the property rights of the brewers and others engaged in the manufacture or sale of liquor. This same argument was urged against that paragraph in the Underwood tariff bill which placed sugar on the free list. And the reply made to the Louisiana sugar growers by some of the same gentlemen on the other side of the aisle who are now urging us not to jeopardize any of the property rights of the liquor interests was, "Turn your rich soil to the growing of other crops, for which it is really better adapted and which as a matter of fact will in time bring you greater profits."

If in that case you were correct in your premises and your reply was not an unsound one, why reverse yourselves now when a reply along those same lines would be more sound? Every dollar invested in the manufacture and sale of liquor today will find its way into other and better avenues of endeavor and of investment if that one is closed to it. Why not answer the brewers as you did the sugar growers of the South only a few months ago and bid them turn their property to the growing of other crops than broken down wrecks of humanity and produce something for which their property is really better adapted and which will in fact bring them greater profits if they really know how to estimate those profits?—From speech in House of Representatives, December 22.

the South African war he used his influence similarly. Now he is acting in like manner in earnest support of temperance by his trenchant appeals to the men of the British armies to abstain, and his requests to the British public to help them to do so.

Sir Ian Hamilton and Sir R. Baden Powell, pre-eminent militarists, are personal teetotalers. The former found a year's trial of total abstinence so pleasing that he resolved to continue the practice permanently. The latter, the originator of the Boy Scout movement, has said: "Keep off liquor from the very first and make up your mind to have nothing to do with it." Inspired thus, a very considerable proportion of the British regular troops are voluntary total abstainers, probably more than one-third. On November 3 the general commanding several thousand men in the vicinity of Dublin declared that the great majority of these were personal teetotalers. Similar in principle is Admiral Sir John Jellicoe, in control of Britain's North Sea fleet. A man of marked religious characteristics and of iron nerve he never touches alcohol. Previous to the war he was heard to say that if he knew his men must on a certain day be in conflict he would take special care that for some time previous thereto they should have no allowance of grog. "As regards straight shooting it is everyone's experience that abstinence is necessary for the highest efficiency." Such is his opinion. He agrees with the statement of a most successful gunnery instructor that prolonged tests show that after an issue of rum ration of but one-eighth of a pint the men's shooting efficiency declined thirty per cent. Striking corroboration of the wisdom of the resolute stand by Secretary Daniels against intoxicants in the American navy! Prince Louis of Battenberg, the distinguished sailor of foreign extraction, who by dint of sheer merit has risen to almost the highest position the British navy can give, and upon whom devolved during the first three months of the war the disposition of Britain's fleets, is likewise an enthusiastic adherent of the total abstinence cause. So ardent is he in this direction that when captain of the "Implacable" on the Mediterranean station, many of his officers and scores of the bluejackets signed the pledge through the influence of his example and words. The leaders of Britain's Colonial and Indian troops are officers of the same non-alcoholic habits.

"So long as I am minister of militia," said Colonel Sam Hughes at a military conference at Ottawa last year, "there will never be allowed in the militia camps and wet messes, 'mild' or 'light' beer canteens. You will kindly not waste any time discussing this question further. It is settled." That Colonel Hughes adheres to his determination still, and that the results are excellent in the men's health conditions, the words of one of the army of Canadian volunteers in England en route for the war clearly show. "In my company," said he, "there are barristers, chemists, doctors, bank clerks and engineers. We are as happy a lot as you can find. * * * As far as training goes you may judge that it is effective when I tell you every man is fit and we have no illness. The Canadians are a teetotal army. From the first any alcoholic drink has been barred."

CAMPAIGNS THE ORDER OF THE NEW YEAR

To the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL the editors extend cordial greetings and hearty good wishes for 1915, with the gratitude which is "a lively recollection of favors to come."

Campaigns seem to be the glorious and growing order of the day. Our states are either "dry" and campaigning for law enforcement, or are in a state of preparedness presaging a campaign, or are diligently pushing the campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition. In any case, and in all cases, the assurance of our many friends that they will continue to campaign for the regular and for the campaign edition of THE UNION SIGNAL in 1915 is a joy to our hearts and will spur us on to highest endeavor.

GOAL FOR 1915--FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

MRS. BOOLE IN EVANSTON

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, Vice-President-at-Large of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, during the past week has been the guest of Miss Anna A. Gordon in Evanston.

On Saturday evening, January 9, National and state W. C. T. U. leaders, whose homes are in Evanston, were invited by Miss Gordon to meet Mrs. Boole at an informal reception in Rest Cottage. The occasion was a most delightful one. Guests were entertained with interesting incidents of the recent debate in the House of Representatives, related by Miss Gordon and Mrs. Boole, both of whom were present on that occasion.

Monday, January 11, from 12 to 1:30, the resident National Officers gave a luncheon in the reception room of the administration building to afford all workers at Headquarters an opportunity to meet Mrs. Boole socially. The new Vice-President-at-Large in a most delightful friendly talk won the hearts of all.

On Tuesday, January 12, the Illinois Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Cook County Woman's Christian Temperance Union tendered a reception at the Hotel La Salle, Chicago, to Mrs. Boole, Miss Gordon, Mrs. Parks and Mrs. Hutchinson.

The visit of Mrs. Boole is being greatly enjoyed by every member of the Headquarters circle, and all are hoping she may find it possible often to come to Evanston.

VICTORIES OF THE PAST MONTH

December 22, 1914, the House of Representatives gave a majority vote for the Hobson resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the sale, manufacture for sale, importation, transportation, etc., of all alcoholic liquors.

December 24, the Federal Court refused to grant an injunction asked for by the opponents of the Arizona constitutional prohibition amendment, preventing the law from going into effect.

December 31, 1914, last appeal against Russia's prohibition edict failed. Councils of Petrograd and Moscow rejected petition to authorize the sale of beer, light wines, etc.

January 1, 1915, the Arizona constitutional prohibition amendment went into effect, closing all saloons, distilleries and breweries in the state.

January 6, French Cabinet approved measure for submission to Parliament making permanent the prohibition of the sale of absinthe and other similar liquors.

January 4, House passed bill to prohibit the serving of intoxicating liquors to minors on American vessels in waters within the jurisdiction of the United States.

"ME" vs. THE STATE

The attempt of the liquorites to dominate politics in the interests of their own business is mightily helping the cause of prohibition. The Chicago Herald declares that a member of the Illinois legislature the other day made the strongest argument for drastic restriction of the liquor traffic that has been made for that state in five years at least, when he said:

"I am not going to vote for a candidate for speaker who wants to put ME out of business."

"What a mental and moral conception of legislative duty that sentence exhibits," remarks the Herald editorially. "Its emitter plainly subordinates his oath and his obligation to act for the public welfare to his corner saloon—to his purely personal interest."

The liquor traffic, concludes the Herald, needs incessantly to pray to be delivered from its exponents in public life.

IMMIGRATION MEASURE PROVIDES FOR EXCLUSION OF CHRONIC ALCOHOLICS

The Immigration bill, prescribing a test of literacy for aliens coming into this country, was sent to a conference committee of the House and Senate on January 7 by the House after a vigorous debate over certain amendments written into the measure by the Senate. While registering its disagreement as to certain amendments, it concurred in one that provided for the exclusion of all persons of "constitutional psychopathic inferiority and persons with chronic alcoholism."

PROHIBITION FOR DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The question of Congress passing a measure providing for prohibition for the District of Columbia is being agitated at the national capital and is occasioning much comment by the press of the country. Two bills have been introduced in the Senate providing for prohibition for the District and both are being vigorously pushed. The Chicago Tribune, commenting on the opportunity afforded Congress to distinguish itself by passing such a bill, remarks, "Josephus Daniels has made the Navy dry, Mr. Bryan has made diplomacy dry, Congress has taken the canteen away from the Army. Now comes opportunity with jocund face, beckoning Congress to make itself dry, to pour its old Falernian into the gutters and dump its choice Cæcuban into the Potomac, to make the cocktail a stranger and the highball an exile, and establish the district as a model government, drier than a bone in the Sahara. Here's a good work wide open for willing workers."

JANUARY 14, 1915, NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION AMENDMENT DAY.

January 14 is being generally observed from Washington to Florida, from Maine to Southern California, as a day of prayer and conference on National Constitutional Prohibition. The educational effect of these meetings will certainly make sentiment in every community for the cause. A report of some of these interesting occasions will be given in next week's SIGNAL.

FRENCH CABINET APPROVES BILL FOR PERMANENT PROHIBITION

According to cablegram to the Associated Press, the French Cabinet has approved a measure for submission to Parliament making permanent the prohibition of the sale of absinthe and other similar liquors. The government finds that the military decree forbidding absinthe has been of great benefit to the people.

The Cabinet is also reported to have approved a bill providing that no license shall be issued to new establishments for the sale of spirituous liquors unless accessory to a restaurant.

NO SALE FOR BREWERY BUSINESS

A most significant fact has been brought out in the testimony of the son of Peter Doelger, a wealthy brewer who died recently, leaving an estate valued at nearly $8,000,000, according to a transfer tax appraisal just filed. The son of Mr. Doelger testified that it was impossible at the time of the death of his father to make any valuation of the properties because of the difficulty and almost impossibility of disposing of business of this character. He stated that because of the growing sentiment and legislation against the drink traffic, no breweries are being built or purchased, and that no breweries had been organized during the last fifteen years in New York.

A MAN OF VISION

To many people the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of vodka by the Czar of Russia appears the impulsive act of an autocrat, suggested as a war measure, which upon the passing of the immediate emergency will be promptly rescinded. Such, however is not the case. So great a revolution in the life of a nation does not come about at once. There are contributing causes and usually, if not indeed always, back of each moral or social reform is a man or woman with a vision; a prophet with some God-given mission, who appears before Ahab in his royal court, or meets the common people at their daily toil and boldly proclaims the "thus-saith-the-Lord."

To Michael D. Tchelisheff the voice of the Lord came through science. The young man discovered that vodka, the common drink of 150,000,000 of his countrymen, possessed a poisonous character, that its effects upon his people were evil and only evil, and that there was no good thing about it, nor could there be. It was, scientifically speaking, a poison and therefore to be used, if used at all, as a poison, never as a beverage.

But what could one man do against a whole nation? He could proclaim the truth, make plain the vision, and this he did and soon he gave himself to a fight for the extermination of the poison.

In Samara, as a member of the city council, he introduced a bill providing that the sale of vodka be eliminated and the city reimburse the government for the loss of revenue by donating each year a sum equal to the amount formerly obtained from the sale of vodka. He was, however, greatly surprised to find that his offer was refused and concluded that the government "did not want the people to become sober, for the reason that it was easier to rule automatically a drunken mob than a sober people."

Later Mr. Tchelisheff became mayor of Samara, and still later a representative to the Duma on a prohibition platform, but he could accomplish nothing there.

However, the vision tarried and the young Russian was true to his mission. He appealed to the Czar, who became interested and finally dismissed his minister of finance, who had opposed Mr. Tchelisheff's measures in the Duma. In 1904 it was noted that drunkenness hindered the mobilization of troops. When the present war began the grand duke ordered the prohibition of alcoholic drinks, except in clubs and first-class restaurants.

The excellent effects of this order became so apparent that Mr. Tchelisheff inaugurated a great publicity campaign and secured petitions for enforcing the new régime during the war. This move was successful and was followed by another order removing licenses from restaurants and clubs. In spite of the terrible war, prosperity came to the people. Their appearance was greatly changed for the better and marked improvement appeared in their homes. When a band of prohibition workers called to thank the Czar for his recent order he assured them that the vodka shops would never be re-opened in Russia. The vision of the prophet Tchelisheff had so gripped the Czar that he voluntarily gave up the $500,000,000 annual revenue to his government for the sake of the good that sobriety brought to his people. Tchelisheff was a peasant, a painter, a politician; but, more than these, he was a prophet-hero. To men of such mold God gives a heavenly vision. Blessed is that generation which listens to the voice of warning, sacrifices its sin and honors its prophet. How long will America lag behind Russia in providing for sobriety among all our people?

A LAW-MAKER TO BE PITIED

What the Home Papers Said of a Congressman Who Lacked the Moral Courage to Vote for the Hobson Amendment

The name of the Congressman is not Mr. Smith, and the editorial may apply to many of the men who voted "Nay" on December 22.

"Mr. Smith is to be pitied, not condemned. His future at one time was brilliant with promise and charged with opportunities for usefulness. But Mr. Smith could not forget himself, and therein he failed always to reach the heights of success. He strove for statesmanship, but clung to the lower levels, and he lost more than he gained. In the nationwide contest in Congress he had the chance to rise to greatness of action and bigness of thought. His conscience, his training, and all his innate predilections must have drawn him strongly to the side of temperance; but other considerations apparently drew him elsewhere. So, as we are told, one day Congressmen from his state thought he would vote in the negative and the next day they thought he would vote in the affirmative, and in the end he cast his ballot to keep the whisky business alive. He voted to defeat the things that in his heart he honors and to crush the hopes of those who, as he well knows, are fighting the true fight and following the right way."

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

Solid against prohibition—Connecticut, Delaware, Indiana, Massachusetts, Nevada, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Utah—8.

PROHIBITION'S PROHIBITIVENESS

From Congressmen in the House of Representatives to the confirmed alcoholics leaning against the bar of the saloon, the advocates of the liquor traffic will continue to vociferously assert that prohibition's prohibitive qualities are practically nil and that to enact a prohibition law is to help increase the consumption of alcoholic liquors.

We know of no better or more satisfactory way to silence individuals who make such statements than to remind them that the report of the commissioner of internal revenue for the fiscal year ending June 20, 1914, shows a decreased production in distilled liquor of 10,000,000 gallons as compared with 1913, and a decreased consumption for the year of 4,000,000 gallons. These figures do not show the actual decrease in consumption, as the term "consumption" is used to cover all liquor taken from bond. Because liquor has been taken from bonded warehouses it does not follow it has been consumed, as liquor cannot be in bond for a longer period than eight years.

During the past year there have been 127 fewer distilleries in operation in the United States than in past years, and a decrease in the last twelve months of thirty-three in the number of breweries operated.

In this connection it is interesting to note the statement of the officers of the Ohio brewery, which recently went into bankruptcy. They say: "Because of adverse legislation, the sale of our product in Ohio and other states has been so curtailed that the earnings of the company have not been sufficient during the last six months to equal the bond interest and sinking fund. The loss of the business of the state of West Virginia, where the statewide prohibition law went in effect July 1, was the last straw. Ten years ago the company was bonded and capitalized on a basis of 440,000 barrels sales. These sales have been curtailed by loss of territory and adverse legislation entirely beyond the control of any one to the point where the original sales were cut almost in two."

RED LETTER DAYS

FEBRUARY 10-17—Membership week
FEBRUARY 17—Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day

SUPERINTENDENTS

PARLIAMENTARY USAGE

An Open Letter

My Dear Comrades:

You write me such pleasant letters and say such admirably admiring words of parliamentary law and express so strong a desire to "master" it, that I could just embrace you! only there is no way to "get at" you; so I am writing you a "Happy New Year" letter—ALL of you. In addition to the affectionately friendly feeling that compels such a letter I want you to make two more New Year resolutions, viz., "Resolved, that during the year 1915 I will not only earnestly strive to add to my own parliamentary knowledge, but will work diligently to convince others of their need. To this end, not only in the W. C. T. U., but in the club and missionary society to which I belong, I will 'move' that in each regular meeting at least ten minutes be given to parliamentary study and practice and that once each quarter there be held a special parliamentary meeting to which all who will may come. Resolved, further, that every convention or institute program of any name or nature should include one or more parliamentary exercises. Then I will speak to the question with such convincing words that these resolutions will be adopted unanimously, after which I will gladden the heart of the National superintendent by writing her 'all about it.'" If you only would, comrades, do you not see that 1915 would be over-joyously happy the year through, and that at the next gathering of the National clans our parliamentary cup would surely run over. The faces of General Officers would just beam, the countenances of all "outsiders" would shine with admiring astonishment and yours truly would be in a transport of bliss from the first stroke of the gavel until the final adjournment. Let me hear, please, for never in any one year in all our history has there seemed so much interest in the same length of time as from Atlanta to Christmas, so there is a prize offer good until February 15. If any state superintendent has failed to receive it, let her send notification at once for some have already "made good" and are in possession even now of the little prize.

Every state superintendent who has written me one or more letters (from some I have received a half dozen) since National Convention will soon own a copy of the big pamphlet known as "The National Report." If it had been off the press it would have been one of your Christmas presents, but even yet it will make you merrily glad, for whenever the cover meets your eye it will call to mind your New Year resolutions and will win the good-will of all with whom you deliberate. WHY? Because the practice of parliamentary law separates us from selfishness by compelling us to think of the rights of our neighbor; it makes us generous in meting out justice because we dare not be niggardly; it gives us power and influence over the wrong-minded; is saves time because we know how to conduct business with dispatch; it makes us sympathetic through our pity for those who do not know this more excellent way; it teaches us self-reliance and honor; in short, it broadens and strengthens and beautifies by bringing us into harmony with the Golden Rule. Why not then perfect ourselves in parliamentary understanding that we may obey literally the apostolic injunction, "Let all things be done decently and in order."

Yours in faith and love,
(MRS.) A. S. BENJAMIN

FAIRS AND OPEN-AIR MEETINGS

My Dear Co-Workers:

In this great country of ours it is not summer weather in all places and to some it may sound strange to speak of "Fairs and Open Air Meetings," but as your new superintendent that is the latest line of work I have taken up and I gladly do it with such magnificent support behind me. This has very truly been called the department of opportunity, and the ever alert superintendent is anticipative and ready to seize and to create opportunity for making temperance sentiment. One of the outdoor methods is the use of the bill-board poster, and just now is a most opportune time for this reason: First of all you can write to your local bill-board man and thank him in your choicest language for the second appearance of the beautiful 9x20 poster of "The Nativity." He will appreciate the courtesy. Then you might ask him for a gift that would cover the cost of posting a number of boards. This will practically secure the free space you desire and yet will not jeopardize his position in the association he represents. Some men are very friendly to temperance in spite of the fact that part of their business deals with brewers' posters. It all depends upon the way a man is approached and there is always hope at least of success. Small posters are fine for so many uses. Get them in shape beforehand. Mount them by pinning thin muslin down tight with thumb tacks. Apply paste to the muslin, then lay on the poster. A double poster with different sides is quite possible for parade use. January, February and March are dull times in the bill-posting business, so now is your time to speak. If, however, you are not successful in gaining space, then erect your own board and keep it covered.

Although it is winter with many of us, we must plan for the summer. Think of that souvenir you expect to give at the fair, get your legioners and Boy Scouts interested, decide which way you will earn some money, plan a calendar of days when opportunity may be given you to reach crowds, beginning with circus day, then Memorial Day, Independence Day, with camp meetings, reunions, chautauquas, picnics, etc., in between. Speak early for space and equipment and choose carefully literature to distribute in packages and plan if possible an exhibit. Make beautiful music a feature. Try to give something to eat, something to hear, something to see, something to take home, all bearing upon temperance, but emphasizing National Constitutional Prohibition. Send for catalogues for that fountain you expect to erect as soon as the frost is out of the ground and think of something strikingly original and artistic for that float in the parade. Design your booth or tent and get your honorary members interested in it.

In short, begin now to seek the opportunities for this new year of service wherein you can reach the disinterested public outdoors by pressing home the temperance message. The superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings is always ready to assist in any way when called upon.

Yours to serve the present age,
CAROLYN P. LINDSAY

PRESS PARAGRAPHS POPULAR

Referring to the Press Paragraphs sent out by the Publicity Bureau of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large and president of the New York W. C. T. U., urges the women of her state to interview the editors of their local papers in regard to using these Press Paragraphs, saying: "This is the greatest thing ever attempted by the National W. C. T. U., and while it will cost a lot of money it will be money well invested."

In accordance with section 10 of Plans for National Constitutional Prohibition, which provides that "campaign material will be furnished in the Press Paragraphs of the Publicity Bureau and be sent free of charge to all papers in the United States, lists to be furnished by state W. C. T. U. presidents," some state presidents have already sent in lists of the newspapers in their states. Missouri's president, in enclosing a list of some two hundred, with more to follow, writes: "I asked every district president in Missouri to interview the editors of her district and receive their consent to use these paragraphs, and the response is remarkable." No better method of educating the citizens of your state on the question of total abstinence and prohibition could be devised than getting the editors of your community to use these paragraphs.

FROM A GOVERNOR'S VIEWPOINT

Hon. George R. Carlson, who became the governor of Colorado, January 1, is a strong advocate of prohibition and declares he will see to it that the new prohibition law in Colorado is enforced to the letter.

The extension to Rhode Island women of the right to vote for president was advocated by Governor Beckman in his inaugural address January 5. "In the interest of plain justice and of sound political principles," he said, "I recommend the passage of such an act."

Governor-elect Charles Henderson of Alabama, in his first campaign speech, said, "The organized liquor traffic of the United States is the bane of our civilization, and a trust the like of which the world has never known, with its tentacles reaching into every organized government in America and for its own profit debauching our citizenship and taking a toll of death that is appalling to every thoughtful man."

In the first message of Governor Moses Alexander to the Idaho legislature, on January 5, he declared himself in favor of statewide prohibition by legislative enactment, in order that Idaho might outlaw the saloons at the same time as Oregon and Washington.

"Human rights and the welfare of humanity must be given preference in settling all moral questions," said Governor Hodges of Kansas in an address before the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association. "A liquor saloon license is the most expensive revenue a state can collect. Formerly liquor in Kansas caused taxpayers to pay out more money for costs than all the costs paid in the conviction of thieves, highwaymen and murderers combined. Whisky is a political liability—a parasite on business. Prohibition is a fact, not a theory in Kansas, and our wonderful prosperity explodes the 'necessary evil' idea. No man can obtain a position of responsibility in Kansas if he uses liquor even in a moderate degree. This is the most effective temperance argument ever advanced."

When the name of Governor-elect Willis of Ohio was called during the vote on the National Prohibition Amendment, his "yea" was given with such enthusiasm that it called forth applause from his colleagues.

"Kansas has reduced its per capita consumption of liquor to $1.25 annually, as compared to the $21 annual per capita consumption of the average state having saloons," said Arthur Capper, governor-elect of Kansas, at the recent Intercollegiate Prohibition Association meeting at Topeka, Kans.

"In Missouri one farmer in 100 owns an automobile," he said, "while in Kansas one farmer in five has a car. Missouri has 4,000 saloons into which its people pay $80,000,000 a year. Missouri has but $20 per capita in the savings banks. Kansas, with 2,250,000 less population, has more than $100 per capita and $600 for every family within its borders in the savings banks.

"Missouri has millions of dollars invested in breweries and saloons, but Kansas lent $50,000,000 to New York in the panic of 1907, while Missouri declined to send a penny. Missouri's wealth has been going into saloons and breweries to an alarming extent. Kansas wealth has been going into silos and banks, into safe homes, into educational institutions, into town improvements."

"In view of these results," Mr. Capper said, "it is the duty of Kansas people to take the lead in an active propaganda, making this a saloonless nation."

"On the west," he concluded, "Colorado has joined the elect. On the south is Oklahoma, dry from its birth; on the north Nebraska is striving for the right, and on the east Missouri is trying to be free."

THE SUFFRAGE SITUATION

DEBORAH KNOX LIVINGSTON, National W. C. T. U. Franchise Superintendent

The department of Franchise has never before been able to report so great activity as during the past twelve months. Almost every state in the Union has attempted something along the line of securing the ballot for women on equal terms with men. Two states have been added to the suffrage column—Nevada and Montana.

Everywhere it is conceded that the victories for statewide prohibition in Arizona, Colorado, Oregon and Washington at the recent elections were largely due to the woman's vote.

Leaders in the suffrage movement confidently expect that at least four states of the East will vote on the ballot for women next fall. These are: New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. In many of the state legislatures suffrage measures will be considered.

In every state that has not yet given women the ballot the propaganda of "Votes for Women" will go forward with greater enthusiasm and more definite plans. Wherever women have been enfranchised the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been a most powerful factor. With our unparalleled machinery reaching up from the local union to the National and from the National, through state and county, back to the local union, it is possible for us to create a public sentiment and crystallize public activity as not many organizations are able to do.

A few years ago it was difficult for many of our suffrage friends to recognize who was the real opponent of woman suffrage in this country, but today no leader in the movement fails to realize that the most powerful opponent the cause has to meet is the legalized liquor traffic, and combined with it is the traffic in women and the despoiling of children.

The liquor traffic has come out into the open and declared itself opposed to woman suffrage for the reason that the first thing women direct their ballot against is the liquor trade. The women of this nation declared war against King Alcohol more than forty years ago and they have fought and lost many a valiant battle, but they have arisen to fight again and have come off more than conquerors. The slogan of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, together with that of other national temperance forces is—"National Prohibition." How can this be accomplished? Only by votes—votes of men and votes of women. We must never forget that we are a government of the people, by the people, for the people. The people—that means men and women—have said in these United States of America that the liquor traffic must go. Women have prayed that it might go. They have wept tears enough to have washed it away. They have tried by every womanly charm to destroy this monster, but they have come to see that the liquor traffic will not go until they possess the vote to make it go.

The work of each department in the National W. C. T. U. has for its supreme aim the education of the people to a standard of total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state and nation. Therefore, this department has for its supreme work the securing of that right for women which above all others will bring prohibition, and the prohibition of the liquor traffic is the best possible way to aid in securing a totally abstaining citizenship. We urge every local union to appoint a superintendent whose business it will be to see that the members of the union shall be educated to their need of the ballot. We urge every county and district union to hold at least two suffrage institutes during the year, and we ask every state union to make possible by a liberal appropriation the distribution of literature, the securing of speakers and the publishing of suffrage news in the daily papers, keeping constantly in mind that we want the ballot for the overthrow of the reign of King Alcohol and the making possible of a "saloonless" nation, which will hasten the coming of the Kingdom of God.

"BUNCOMBE"

It Doesn't Always Pay to Be Skeptical.

When a newspaper writer and proof reader that works nights can feed himself out of dyspepsia, which most all that class suffer with, it is worth while to know the kind of food used.

This man says:

"Being a newspaper writer and proof reader, also a graduate in medicine as well, though not practicing, makes a combination that would produce a skeptic on the subject if anything would.

"Day after day I read the proof on the Grape-Nuts advertisements with the feeling that they were all 'buncombe.' All this time I was suffering from dyspepsia from the improper food I was eating at the restaurant.

"One day I saw a package of Grape-Nuts at the restaurant and tried some with cream. The food took my fancy at once. After a few lunches on it at midnight I noted an improvement in my feelings, and was able to work with less fatigue.

"I have used Grape-Nuts as a regular diet since then, and have improved greatly. The old dyspepsia and bad feelings that I thought were necessary adjuncts to night work disappeared, and I am able to do much more and better work with less effort than ever before.

"I was nearly ready to give up and seek health in some other walk in life, but thanks to my change in diet I am now all right." "There's a Reason."

HER CHANGE OF HEART

MARY JANET SHULTZ, Denver, Colo.

Mrs. Stuyvesant, watching the Denver sight-seeing auto one Saturday in October, 1914, heard the driver call out through a megaphone: "On the left hand corner is the residence of John Stuyvesant, one of Denver's millionaire bankers. It is built of Colorado marble and cost—" the voice died away. Mrs. Stuyvesant, who was trying to instil in the minds of her three sons a great respect for work, and who did not wish them to realize their father's wealth, fairly hated the word "millionaire."

The telephone rang almost the instant she arrived home. "Hello, Margaret, can you bring me my bag and see me off on the 3:30 train for Colorado Springs?"

"Yes, but, O John!"

"Must be there tonight. Will be back tomorro . Better come along. Good-bye."

Mrs. Stuyvesant would not accompany her husband on his trip, as it necessitated leaving the boys behind, and she felt a great resentment against the growing business interests, that, in spite of his devotion to her, were taking him away from home more frequently than she liked.

The telephone rang again and in response to Mrs. Stuyvesant's "hello" a voice said: "The Woman's Club has arranged a large reception for next Tuesday, and we want our most patrician and best dressed member in the receiving line. We would also like your auto, if you will kindly loan it, and all the flowers you can send for the table. The committee is to have tea at the hotel this afternoon at four to arrange details. Can you come?"

"I promised to help, so I will come to tea, and you can count on me for the auto and flowers, but I cannot be in line. I'll see you at four. Good-bye," was Mrs. Stuyvesant's reply.

By five o'clock everything had been settled and while tea was being served, the socially and politically prominent women discussed the liquor situation in the state.

"Do you think 'Billy' Sunday has helped the dry side?"

"I hope so, but his slangy talk is very offensive to me."

"Do you believe there is any chance of the state going dry?"

"No, it can't with all the money spent by the brewers, the Business Men's League for Home Rule, the Personal Liberty League and all the other organizations."

"Mr. Stuyvesant is in favor of local option. Shall you vote with him, Mrs. Stuyvesant?"

"No, I think I shall not vote at all. I am not interested in politics, and my three small boys and one big one give me problems enough to solve. I must leave now and go home to them. Good-bye."

As Mrs. Stuyvesant went out upon the street she noticed a crowd of men gathered around an excited youth. Two porters were holding him by the arms and he was struggling to reach his hip pocket, saying:

"I—I've done nothing. W-where's the p-pro-pri-tor? In-int-ter-fring with a m-man's lib'ty. I'll blow your heads off, and—"

Mrs. Stuyvesant stopped, paralyzed, for as the frightened crowd parted, she recognized Theodore Wescome, a boy she had loved from his babyhood, and the son of a dear friend. He was the boy she had hoped her sons would be like, he had seemed so strong, so thoughtful of his invalid mother and his venerable grandfather.

"Why, Theodore, what's the matter?" she exclaimed, going up to the young man. "Come home with me."

"Why, Aunt Margaret, t-this is n-no place for you. I w-want to s-settle with these r-ruffians, and—"

"Come now, Teddy, with me." Placing her hand firmly on his arm, with the help of the porters she led him with difficulty out to her car, while he muttered, "I'll settle you fellows l-later."

The fresh air helped him, and he said, "Guess I had too many high-balls. I don't want to go home to my mother now—and—"

"No, Teddy, you are going home with me, and I'll telephone your mother."

They soon reached the house and the chauffeur helped Mrs. Stuyvesant take Theodore upstairs. He was soon asleep.

"I have never been near a drunken man before. Jackson, what shall we do for him?"

"Oh, nothing, ma'am. I have often helped young gentlemen home. Just leave him to me. He'll be all right in the morning."

"Jackson, I don't want the boys to know he is here. Between us we must keep his presence a secret."

Mrs. Stuyvesant went to the telephone and called "Olive 544." "Hello, Mrs. Wescome. So glad to hear your voice again. John has gone to Colorado Springs and Teddy is making us a call and I want to keep him here for the night. May I? Thank you. Yes, he will be home in the morning. Good-bye."

Margaret Stuyvesant could not eat any dinner that night and as her boys chattered, her mind wandered to the heavily breathing form upstairs. Theodore was so good-looking, so athletic, the head of his team, and was to graduate next June, she reflected, then he was to study law and be junior partner in the business of Wescome, Howard and Black, a firm made famous by his father. How did it all happen? Why?

All the week long the Stuyvesant boys looked forward to Saturday evening, when it was their mother's custom to read aloud to them. Each in turn would choose a story, and in this way the mother was able to read their minds somewhat and look ahead into the future. John Junior was to be a lawyer, he asked so many questions and wanted to argue every subject. Wallace planned to be a doctor, and David, who was only seven, his mother thought would be a farmer, he was so interested in his garden and all out of door life.

On this particular evening the boys were breathlessly interested in Jack London's "White Fang." As she read the thrilling narrative mechanically, Margaret Stuyvesant was thinking. "It might happen to John Junior, or Wallace or little David. How can I save them? Teddy had the best father and the finest mother I ever knew, and neither mother love, home influence, nor the prospect of the brightest of futures has kept him from this. What can I do? All the things I believed in have failed."

"And White Fang crept closer and—"

"Why, mother, you read that page before."

"Excuse me, boys; mother is tired tonight. Let's close the book now and finish the story tomorrow."

The next morning, just after the boys had started to Sunday school, a very pale Theodore came downstairs. "Aunt Margaret, I've been awake and in torment for five hours," he began at once. "If you had not stopped me, I would now be in a murderer's cell. I can feel the shadow of the gallows over me and the rope around my neck." With a shudder he laid a revolver on the table. "I wanted to kill them. I wanted to show how easily I could do it. I would have been glad to have seen them dead at my feet." He sank into a chair and covered his eyes with his hands. "Oh, how can a few glasses of beer and a little whisky make such a fiend of a man? I forgot my mother—everything—and only murder seemed glorious."

"My poor Teddy! Teddy, how did it happen?"

"I don't know. Four of us went to a fraternity meeting in Fred Stone's machine and as we were coming home that afternoon, one of the boys gave me that revolver to take along. The wind was stinging, we stopped several times to 'warm up,' and I asked them to let me out on Seventeenth street to walk home. The next thing I remember I was threatening to kill someone—anybody—because I was refused another high-ball at the hotel bar. If you had not brought me away, I would have gone back and —you were such a brick, Aunt Margaret. I can't try to thank you, for I should break down, and—"

"Don't try, Teddy, but thank me by helping to save my boys from an experience like yours."

"If I can be the lawyer my father was, I am going to work for a law against the sale of firearms. What's the use of a law against carrying them, when at any pawn-shop for a dollar anyone can buy a revolver? If that thing hadn't given me the power to kill, I—"

"Teddy, the whole blame belongs to the saloon. It's liquor that was your undoing. I, too, spent many sleepless hours last night, and thought of many things. In this wonderful, beautiful, free land of ours, I have been told that ninety per cent of the murders, crimes and suicides are due to alcohol. A great sense of responsibility has come to me, Teddy. I have served cocktails in this very room, but from now on I am going to work for a dry Colorado. You can help me, Teddy."

"I promise to do all I can, Aunt Margaret." The two shook hands solemnly.

That afternoon as Mrs. Stuyvesant rode from Capitol Hill to the station to welcome her husband home from his journey, she read with new meaning the many huge signs displayed in the streets, some of them in letters three feet high with electric lights above them:

"Don't Imitate Bleeding Kansas. Keep Colorado on the Map." "Don't Let Cranks and Reformers Ruin Your Business." "Rule Yourself. Don't be Ruled by Outsiders. Prohibition Means Tyranny." "Taxes Will Increase. The State Will Lose Hundreds of Thousands of Revenue." In a saloon window appeared a placard reading, "Hush, little saloon, don't you cry. You'll be a drug store by-and-by. Not if the people of Colorado have any sense."

"GOD SAVE OUR LAND"

(The Patriot's Prayer)

By E. P. FISHER

Tune: "America"

God save our native land,
From rum's destroying hand,
Save small and great.
From evils proud and strong,
From rum's infernal throng,
From laws that license wrong,
God save the state.

Save thou the home from shame,
From drink's destroying flame,
Oh! save the boy.
The tempter lies in wait,
He lurks at every gate;
Save from the drunkard's fate
Our pride and joy.

With faces toward the light,
Teach us to vote the right,
With firm design.
With ballots clean and true,
To keep this end in view;
Give us a courage new—
Courage Divine.

AMONG THE STATES

South Carolina

The plan to pass a prohibition bill in the present legislature and refer it to the qualified voters for ratification in 1915 is receiving the approval of many of the South Carolina papers.

West Virginia

Prohibition is reported to have reduced the number of occupants of the Wheeling work house seventy per cent in five months. There were in the institution only 164 prisoners for five dry months, as against 600 during the five preceding wet months.

"The first Christmas under the Yost law brought happiness to thousands of homes that had never before received a visit from Santa Claus," says the Clarksburg American.

Arkansas

In Little Rock and Argenta alone several hundred bartenders and helpers found themselves out of a job on January 1, as a result of the Going law under which all saloons in the state closed. Many of them have arranged to depart from Arkansas or to engage in a business which is not hampered by a periodic closing. A statewide prohibition measure will be introduced at the next session of the legislature.

Alabama

It is generally understood, says the Birmingham (Ala.) Age-Herald, that on the first day of the session of the legislature, the prohibitionists will introduce a bill repealing the Smith-Parks local option bill and restoring the Fuller and Carmichael statewide prohibition measures.

California

Far from being discouraged at the outcome of the November 3 election, California is planning for another statewide prohibition campaign.

Montana

Plans are under way for the inauguration of a prohibition campaign in the immediate future, the vote to be taken in 1916.

Nebraska

"Nebraska Dry in 1916" is the slogan of the temperance forces of the state.

Colorado

On January 1, 1915, statewide prohibition as provided in the amendment adopted November 3, 1914, became a part of the constitution of Colorado. The amendment does not, however, become effective until January 1, 1916. The legislature which meets within the next few weeks will probably pass strong enforcement laws.

Arizona

The prohibition amendment became effective in Arizona, January 1, 1915. The efforts of its opponents to prevent by an injunction its going into effect were unsuccessful. The case has been appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

Idaho

It is expected that the state legislature soon to meet will pass a statewide prohibition law, to go into effect on January 1, 1916, the same day the laws of Oregon and Washington become effective.

The president pro tem of the Idaho state senate on January 7 introduced in the legislature a constitutional amendment prohibiting forever the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in Idaho, to become effective July 1, 1917.

Iowa

By decision of the supreme court holding the Waterloo and Valley Junction petitions of consent under the Mulct law to be insufficient, these two cities become prohibition territory. The city council of Des Moines has refused to renew the licenses of all saloons, giving them until February 15 to get out of business.

The Iowa state grange, which met recently at Grinnell, adopted a resolution favoring the submission of the liquor question to an immediate vote.

Tennessee

Governor Hooper, in his message to the legislature, recommended a constitutional amendment to extend the franchise to the women of his state.

Kentucky

On January 1, 1915, nine counties which had voted out the saloons last fall became dry. Only fifteen out of Kentucky's 120 counties are now in the so-called wet column.

Ohio

Definite plans are under way for a statewide prohibition campaign this year. Elections under the Beal local option law are resulting in the outlawing of the saloon from a large number of towns.

Georgia

Justice A. R. Hammond of the Supreme Court of Georgia is of the opinion that prohibition pays. He says: "There is almost no drunkenness in rural districts and smaller towns, comprising a vast majority of our population. In Atlanta there is very little drunkenness. The law has been of untold benefit."

Utah

In drawing up a statewide prohibition bill, the temperance forces are favoring a form similar to the Yost law of West Virginia, which has proven so successful.

South Dakota

An initiative petition will be circulated asking the legislature which meets this month to submit statewide prohibition to a vote in 1916.

THE JANUARY NUMBER OF THE TEMPERANCE EDUCATIONAL QUARTERLY

The January number of The Temperance Educational Quarterly has increased its pages from thirty-two to thirty-six.

It is the prize essay number and includes three college essays: one from Leland Stanford Jr. University, one from Chicago University, and one from the University of Pittsburgh. The high school prize essay from the Lincoln School of Portland, Oregon, is of very great value, showing, as it clearly does, what has been accomplished by temperance instruction in the schools of the United States. The two prize essays written by teachers on "Methods of Instruction in Temperance" will prove invaluable to others giving that instruction. The scientific articles by Dr. W. L. Reid of Glasgow, Scotland, and by Dr. T. D. Crothers of Hartford, Connecticut, are timely and convincing.

Numerous cuts of writers of the prize essays are included in this number of the Quarterly and one of Miss Gordon accompanying a poem written by Edith Smith Davis.

No better material could be obtained for Scientific Temperance Instruction meetings or for teachers' receptions than this number of The Temperance Educational Quarterly. A large edition has been issued to meet the demands of the schools. Single copies, fifteen cents; annual subscription, fifty cents. In clubs of ten, forty cents.

NOTED AND QUOTED FROM THE MAGAZINES AND WEEKLIES

"If the town goes dry—as it probably will—you'll put up an awful howl," said the saloonkeeper who kept the best place in town. "But cheer up! You'll be better off when you're driven out of business. I can count on the fingers of my hand all of you who are really making more than wages. The brewers are getting the money."—From "What Happens When a Town Goes Dry," in the January Ladies' Home Journal.

"Children who had never seen their fathers sober and always feared them, now beheld them with astonishment and asked their mothers, 'Will papa always be so?'"—From "How Russia Has Gone Dry," in January Review of Reviews.

"Nearly four months have now passed since the drinking of intoxicants in Russia ceased, and the results of the reform are so extraordinary as to surpass the expectations even of the most sanguine prohibitionists and temperance workers."—From "Prohibition in Russia," by George Kennan in The Outlook of December 16, 1914.

"Emperors, business men, social reformers are all agreed upon one thing: Alcoholic drinks work positive harm. A single glass of beer lowers a man's efficiency seven per cent. Imagine, then, what strong wine, gin or whisky will do. The up-to-date employer will not keep men who drink even "in moderation;" the secretary of the navy will not allow them on the warships; every commander in the field today in Europe is leading a sober army. Everywhere the brains of the world recognize that alcoholic liquors weaken both muscle and mind power."—From the Technical World.

"Alcohol is clearly opposed to the public health, for it hurts any animal organism into which it is taken," says Dr. J. N. Hurty, M. D., in an article on "Alcohol and the Public Health" in the current number of Good Health.

"That clinched it. My wife's saloon went out of business that night—last New Year's eve—and no other has taken its place, nor shall I drink again. It's not worth to me the money it costs."—From "My Wife's Saloon," in January Ladies' Home Journal.

WHY THE SHOEMAN OPPOSES THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Some of the readers of The Shoeman, a Boston periodical devoted to the interests of the boot and shoe business, have criticised it for publishing articles against the liquor traffic. The editors of The Shoeman hasten to explain that their stand against "booze" isn't entirely, or even mainly, on moral grounds, although moral grounds are ample enough in all conscience, when this miserable evil is up for judgment. "Our main objection to the liquor business and the partnership between 'Booze and Business,'" assert these gentlemen, "is on economic grounds. Booze-fighting means waste—that's why we are against it, chiefly. Waste of Money, waste of Time, waste of Energy, waste of Efficiency, waste of Brain, waste of Moral Sense, waste of Life itself. And we need every one of these things in the shoe business, because success is gained on a small margin, and that margin must not be wasted."

Will You Come Home Sober, Papa?

A NEW TEMPERANCE SONG BY REV. J. C. HARRISON of the ALABAMA CONFERENCE. This is one of the best Temperance songs written in years. Its beautiful story of a young girl's plea to her father is really a Temperance sermon, while its melody is one of the sweetest ever written. Ask your music dealer for it, or send 10c to the publisher. P. J. Howley Music Co., 102 West 42nd Street, New York. Special rates on quantities to Societies or Temperance Organizations.

FROM OUR EXCHANGES

Caused a Chill Down His Back

No specious or tortuous reasoning can destroy the impression made on the American people that the vote in the House of Representatives recently on the proposal to amend the Federal Constitution so as to prohibit the manufacture, sale and importation of alcoholic beverages in this country was an emphatic victory for righteousness.

Those newspapers which print full-page liquor advertisements for a liberal compensation with one accord referred to the transaction as a defeat for the temperance forces. But every liquor dealer whose mind was not so muddled by the consumption of his own wares as to be incapable of discerning what had occurred felt a chill running through his frame when he read the morning after that a substantial majority of the House of Representatives had voted for Congressman Hobson's resolution.—Christian Advocate of New York.

More Boys Needed!

The saloons of Connecticut, says an exchange, simply must have 2,000 new patrons at once. During the past year 9,000 of their best customers were put in jail, and about one-quarter of them seem to be regular boarders there. Two hundred and fifty went to state's prison. As many more were killed by railroad trains, frozen to death, drowned, or died of chronic alcoholism. The supply must be kept up. Now, who of our Connecticut mothers stand ready to furnish the needed quota to keep the ranks full? And if the mothers hold back, who of the fathers will step forward and offer their boys?—Central Christian Advocate.

"You Have Had Warning Enough!"

As time passes; as the warning is impressed on owners of property involved in the liquor business there will be less weight in the plea of confiscation. The popular answer will be: "You have had warning enough, why didn't you get out from under?"

It is popular editorial pastime to guess at the time of national prohibition. A leading Chicago newspaper puts it at ten years. Perhaps that's as good a guess as any, but it will depend largely on the extension of the women's franchise and more directly on what "the folks back home" say to their Congressmen as to the vote December 22, 1914.—Joliet (Ill.) Herald.

The Net Income Must Be Considered

Certainly the country was startled Dec. 23. At breakfast tables all over the land there was amazement at the size of the vote in Congress for prohibition.

The debate, so far as summarized in the dispatches, seems to have been far from striking. The arguments of the proponents of the resolution were familiar and ordinary. The opponents floundered. The loss of national and state revenues is a bogy, for it is the net income that must be considered after deductions for expenditures on police, prisons, hospitals and other government outlays chargeable to the effects of liquor. Mr. Underwood's lunge at the resolution as an attack on "the fundamental principles of our government" was just buncombe.

The composition of the vote, however, was tremendously significant. Constituencies typically American were generally represented in the "aye" column. Districts in which special local conditions were favorable to the liquor business made up the opposition.

Studying the vote from this angle, remembering that in the long run the predominant sentiment of Americans prevails in national legislation, it must be admitted that the test of strength yesterday portends national prohibition.—New York Mail.

"One More Such Victory"

"One more such victory and I am undone," the comment of Pyrrhus on his triumph of Heraclea, might well be quoted by a champion of the brewers, the distillers and the liquor sellers, surveying the Washington situation as disclosed by the House vote on a prohibition amendment to the United States Constitution. Prohibition was checked, but not checkmated. It held a majority, and only failed to get its two-thirds. The figures, 197 yeas to 189 nays, are not discouraging to the dry sentiment.—Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle.

Not a Passing Wave

A man need not be so very old to remember when the advocate of prohibition—even local prohibition—was regarded as a kind of fanatic, but now we see hundreds of serious-minded, sober-thinking, practical men, irrespective of party, few if any elected on a wet-or-dry issue, taking a voluntary stand in the national House of Representatives against the liquor traffic. This cannot be construed as in any sense a popular wav of sentiment, that will soon pass away. It is a wave, and it is moving rapidly, but it is not passing; it is coming this way, and the time of its arrival can only be a question of a few years.—St. Joseph (Mo.) Press.

FROM OUR EXCHANGES

The Question of the Hour

The prohibition question transcends in importance all others now before the American people, if the defense and security of the country be excepted. Having been thrust into Federal affairs, it cannot be well pried away, and we shall see a movement soon within the Democracy that may split that ancient organization as completely and as dramatically as slavery sundered it more than half a century ago.—Brooklyn (N. Y.) Times.

Causes of Anti-Liquor Tendencies

If a careful analysis of the vote in the House of Representatives on the Hobson Amendment were possible, it would probably be found that the two chief causes of this manifest anti-liquor tendency are: First, the domineering tactics of liquor in politics; second, the revolution against liquor on the part of many of the country's largest industries. In other words, the trend against liquor would seem to be civic and economical, as well as moral and sentimental.—Peoria (Ill.) Journal.

Liquor in Politics

Aside from the economic and social arguments used in favor of prohibition, the growth of the movement may also be attributed to the resentment of the people against the part the liquor interests have taken in politics. The liquor interests on their part make the claim they are forced to mix in politics to secure a fair deal, but the fact remains that wherever the liquor interests have controlled politics their control has been detrimental to the best interests of the people.—Dubuque (Ia.) Journal.

Hobson's Triumph

The Baltimore Sun calls the result of the vote in the House December 22, "Hobson's Triumph," and says it will be a hardy prophet who will predict the ultimate defeat of National Prohibition.

The people are less and less concerned about the road that they travel to better social, economic and moral conditions, but they are more and more concerned about the results to be obtained. We are going to have less hair splitting theories about the respective rights of the state and nation and more effective work for the improvement of the conditions of all the people. It is conceded that National Prohibition will do more to destroy the liquor traffic, the greatest of all curses to the people, than prohibition laws in a score of states, and for that reason the people are going to demand Federal action.

—Columbia (Tenn.) Herald

Victory of December 22

It is a tremendous showing for temperance, a tremendous showing of the hatred of the liquor evil. As it plainly indicates a consistent increase in the feeling against alcohol, it points to a day when two-thirds of the representatives will vote the submission of national prohibition to the states. That will mean, shortly after, the end of the whisky traffic in this country.—Toledo (O.) Blade.

Congressmen Must Explain

"Those members of the present Congress who were re-elected this fall on the plea that they favored legislation against the liquor traffic will have some explanations to make and will find that the proposition to leave the matter with the states will be slender protection against deserved criticism."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

The Significant Fact

There was, to be sure, considerable illness on the part of members of Congress. Such indisposition is always to be looked for when a vote of this character comes before Congress and its symptoms are a division of sentiment in the district of the member suddenly taken ill. But this is not the significant fact. The fact of real significance is that in the first great battle, this important preliminary skirmish, the foes of the liquor traffic scored an enormous advantage.—The Advance.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Miss Louise E. Hollister, National organizer, who has spent the holidays with brothers in Florida, is now available for work in the South. Address, Bowling Green, Florida.

The W. C. T. U. of Milo, Iowa, held a very successful matron's medal contest January 1. One of the seven contestants, Mrs. Celia Long, was eighty years young and took third place. Mrs. Ruth Van Clarke, state L. T. L. secretary, trained the class, and Mrs. E. B. Hurford, state vice-president, was among the judges.

One program devoted to the reading of extracts from THE UNION SIGNAL, The Young Crusader, and the state paper is what several states propose to include in their year's calendar. It's an idea worthy of trial, at least, and ought to result in increased interest in the official papers and many new subscriptions.

Lenawee county, Michigan, duplicates twenty-two departments and sends a National Superintendent's manual to each county superintendent. The county has a membership of over 500 and is each year entitled to send a delegate to the National Convention. Petitions have been filed for another local option wet campaign. Five years ago the county went dry by a majority vote of 2,008, and two years ago it retained a majority vote of 800 and it hopes by this last campaign to entirely annihilate the liquor traffic.

During the holidays a gold medal contest was held at the Marine Barracks in Washington, D. C. About 125 uniformed men and boys attended. The winner, Miss Madeline McArdle, gave the selection, "Is It Worth the Sacrifice?" Little Lucretia Hanson, dressed in a costume of the national colors, sang, "Prohibition's Come to Town." A double contest was recently held in Brookland, D. C., at which Miss Helen Clayton, aged eleven, won the gold medal and Miss Helen Petrie, aged five, won the silver medal. As a result of the numerous contests held in Brookland during the past year a union has been organized there.

What My Pupils Say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion, it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me. Last year I weighed 216 lbs., this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver. I can breathe now, too. It is surprising how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 lbs. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses and my catarrh is so much better. Isn't that good?"

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

PREMIUM ANNOUNCEMENTS

Cash Premiums Open to Everyone

Any person having credit for 250 weekly subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL (on which no other premiums have been taken) between October 29, 1914, and the closing of the books for 1915, will receive a cash premium of $25. If you will unite to credit subscriptions to your state superintendent, you can secure this premium and thus honor your state and advance your own work. Credit must be requested on the subscription letter, and in no case are such credits transferable.

Small Clubs

Ten subscriptions to the weekly UNION SIGNAL, either new or renewals, sent at one time, entitle the sender to one free yearly subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL, or four subscriptions to the monthly Campaign Edition, or four subscriptions to The Young Crusader.

Ten Campaign Edition subscriptions sent at one time entitle the sender to one subscription to the Campaign Edition. Ten weekly subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, either new or renewals, sent at one time will entitle the sender to one copy of "The Life of Frances E. Willard," by Anna A. Gordon.

All premiums must be asked for when subscriptions are sent in.

Banners

THE UNION SIGNAL banners, now held by Northern California and Arizona, will be awarded at the Seattle Convention to the states having the largest subscription list to THE UNION SIGNAL in proportion to W. C. T. U. membership. Winning states must have gained in both subscriptions and membership.

The 1915 Honor Roll

The Honor Roll of the Seattle Convention will include the names of all persons who send twenty-five or more yearly subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL between October 29, 1914, and the closing of the books for 1915, and the number of subscriptions sent in by each. The list will include not only the names of those who personally secure subscriptions, but also those of the state and county superintendents who send in subscriptions secured by others in their territory. All who desire a place on this Honor Roll must ask for the credit with each list of subscriptions sent in.

Those who prefer to send subscriptions direct to THE UNION SIGNAL can have them credited to the state representative by giving her name and requesting in subscription letter that subscriptions be credited to her. Four Campaign subscriptions are credited as one yearly subscription.

As exchange is charged on all personal and cashier's checks and on all drafts except those drawn on cities that are large money centers, please remit for subscriptions by money order or by draft on New York or Chicago.

Sample copies to subscription solicitors, institutes or conventions, sent free upon request.

All letters containing subscriptions, orders for change of address, requests for sample copies, or any inquiries concerning the same, should be addressed to THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Illinois.

Ask everyone to subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL.

STUDENTS MET TO DISCUSS PROHIBITION

The convention of the Intercollegiate Prohibition association held in Topeka, Kansas, from December 29 to January 2 was the largest civic student assembly ever held in the United States. Enthusiastic young people from two hundred colleges and from almost every state in the Union generously gave of their Christmas vacation to be present at this convention, which met for the purpose of lining up the young people of our universities for the fight against the legalized liquor traffic.

The entire program centered around the general theme, "The Challenge of the Anti-Liquor Movement to the Present Student Generation," and according to resolutions adopted an earnest effort will be made to secure 10,000 college young people for the anti-liquor fight, and 5,000 young men and women who will engage in sacrificial service for National Prohibition.

Among the prominent speakers were: Governor George H. Hodges of Kansas; Governor-elect Arthur Capper; ex-Governor John P. St. John; Dr. Charles M. Sheldon; "Catch-My-Pal" (Rev. R. J.) Patterson of Ireland; Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, Dr. Purley A. Baker, Virgil G. Hinshaw, Rev. Elmer L. Williams, "the fighting parson of Chicago;" Daniel A. Poling and Hon. Alonzo E. Wilson.

The biennial national oratorical honors of the association were won by Earl H. Haydock of the University of Southern California. Second place was taken by Henry C. Jacobs of Hope College, Michigan, and third honors went to Herbert M. Wyrick, of Carson and Newman College, Tennessee. One young woman was among the competitors and the contest was one of the strongest ever held.

Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., gave an eloquent address, the closing paragraph of which we quote:

"We are confronted with great difficulties. We have the most miserably misruled cities in the world, which is the result of a large venal vote of the slums cheated by the liquor traffic and then used by that traffic as a club with which to intimidate business men and political parties. Our youths are growing up in idleness and self-indulgence. The race problem, totally unsolved, confronts us. Dangers and difficulties of an unassimilated immigrant population are around about. * * * With fourteen prohibition states and nine suffrage states the moral forces have power to steer the ship of state into the pure fresh waters of the Amazon of public opinion and there quench their thirst for that 'righteousness that exalteth a nation.' The sober brains of men united with the brains and moral power of women will be able to solve all the problems that confront this nation and make the government which was the 'cradle of liberty' become the crown of liberty to the civilization of the world."

"What will John say to my change of attitude?" thought Mrs. Stuyvesant. As she watched from the auto, her husband came out from the station. Many in the crowd turned to look after him, for he had a commanding air. He handed his bag to Jackson and springing in beside his wife, turned to greet her.

"Why, Margaret, such a grave face. What's the matter? Anything happened to the boys?"

"No, the boys are all right; but, John, did you ever know of a person's whole view of life being changed in twenty-four hours?"

"Yes, wasn't my view of life changed the first hour I met you—"

"O, John, I am going to vote and to vote for a dry state, and if you will vote dry, I'll vote all the rest of the ticket any way you want me to. I—"

"So you have become a grafter and a trader as well as a politician," laughed her husband. "What wonder worked this miracle?"

"O, John, I have never been so near a tragedy," and with tearful eyes she told him her story.

"John, in the eleven years we have been married," she finished, "I have always wanted to stand squarely with you on every subject, but now, I must work for a dry state. I even think I could make street speeches. O, John, help me to protect our boys and thousands of other boys."

And on election day, November 3, John Stuyvesant's vote made one of the glorious majority of 11,572 for a dry Colorado.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

TREMENDOUS APPLAUSE GREETS SPEAKERS AT PEACE MEETINGS; STRONG PEACE PROGRAM UNANIMOUSLY ADOPTED—WOMAN SUFFRAGE RESOLUTION REJECTED BY SMALL MAJORITY VOTE—BATTLE ROYAL OVER PROHIBITION FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—NON-PARTISAN JUDICIAL REFORM IN PROSPECT BY CONGRESS—DAY OF PRAYER, JANUARY 14, ENTHUSIASTICALLY OBSERVED IN WASHINGTON.

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D.C.

This has been a week filled with meetings. The gatherings in the interest of universal peace were held at the New Willard Saturday and Monday. Most of the meetings were of an executive character. Sunday afternoon the public was invited, and the response was so great that hundreds were turned away, and over three thousand women filled the three ball rooms which were used for the occasion, the speakers going from one to the other.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt presided and introduced the speakers, who were Dr. Anna Garlin Spencer, Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman, Mrs. Pethrick Lawrence, of London, Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett, Mme. Schwimmer, of Austria-Hungary, Miss Jane Addams, Mrs. Blatch, and Dr. Anna Shaw.

Attacking war from all angles, deploring the waste on the battlefield of the flower of manhood, and emphasizing the fact that it is the inherent right of a mother to have a say in the blotting out of her son's life, each speaker retired amid thunders of applause.

Strong Peace Program.

A program calling on the nations of the earth to respect human life and abolish war, was read and unanimously adopted, viz.:

The immediate calling of a convention of neutral nations in the interest of early peace.

Limitations of armaments and the nationalization of their manufacture.

Organized opposition to militarism in this country.

Education of youth in the ideals of peace.

Democratic control of foreign policies.

The further humanizing of governments by the extension of the franchise to women.

Concert of nations to supersede "Balance of Powers."

Action toward the gradual organization of the world to substitute law for war.

Substitution of an International police for rival armies.

Removal of the economic causes of war.

The appointment by this government of a commission of men and women with an adequate appropriation to promote international peace.

Branches are to be located in all populous centers. The foreign legations have been visited to apprise them of the action of the meeting, and it is proposed that a delegation of women go to Europe in the near future to study conditions among the suffering women there, and do what they can to help the situation.

It was decided to call the movement the "Woman's Peace Party," with Miss Jane Addams as president.

Suffrage Resolution Loses by Small Majority.

Tuesday the question of woman suffrage was before the House all day and until 9:30 p. m. The vote was taken after long hours of earnest, and, at times, bitter debate. As was the case in the question of prohibition, the matter of state rights figured conspicuously.

On the roll-call, 378 votes were recorded, 204 of which were against the resolution, and 174 for it. The resolution, therefore, was rejected by a majority of 30 votes. Analyzing the vote, it is shown that of those voting for the resolution 86 were Democrats, 72 Republicans, 15 Progressives, and one Independent. Those voting against the resolution included 171 Democrats and 33 Republicans.

A delegation of women, led by Dr. Anna H. Shaw, on Wednesday waited upon President Wilson to confer with him about suffrage for the state of New Jersey, and came away with the distinct impression that in the near future the President would come out with a statement favorable to suffrage for that state.

EXTRACTS FROM SENATOR MORRIS SHEPPARD'S IMPASSIONED SPEECH ON PROHIBITION FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

It is now thirteen years since Congress put liquor out of the Capitol building. Since that time there has been no suggestion that liquor be returned to the Capitol.

The extension of that prohibition to the District of Columbia would meet with approval throughout the country. Americans desire that their capital should be the model city of the world. How shameful it is that the liquor traffic is allowed to exist here, and that there are 300 saloons in the capital.

Why is it suggested that on the liquor question there should be a referendum to the people of the District of Columbia when, on every other question relating to the government of the District, Congress is supreme? The people of the country pay one-half the expenses of the District and the Federal government must be supreme here.

Battle Royal Over Prohibition.

In the Senate there has been a battle royal over prohibition for the District of Columbia. Senator Sheppard of Texas gave notice in writing on Monday that he would move to suspend paragraph 3 of rule 16, for the purpose of moving an amendment to the District of Columbia appropriation bill. By a vote of 37 to 34, the Senate referred to the committee on Rules the motion made by Senator Sheppard. Arrangements were at once made for a meeting of the committee, and in an hour's time it was announced that by a vote of 5 to 3, the committee had ordered favorably reported the separate motion to suspend the rules of the Senate, so that a prohibition amendment might be affixed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Senator Sheppard's motion to suspend the rules so that his amendment to the District bill would be in order is so unusual that Senators insisted they could find no precedent for it, though Senator Sheppard said it had been tried in 1862. This led to an animated discussion as to whether the rules could be suspended by a majority vote, or by a two-thirds vote, and, by a vote of 41 to 34, the Senate insisted upon a two-thirds vote.

Parts of three days have been filled with temperance, or non-temperance oratory. Senators are very outspoken, and the battle is still on. The interest manifested is intense, galleries and lobbies being filled with friends or enemies of the cause. Senator Sheppard has had strong backing from many Senators and members of the House who have come over from the other end of the Capitol to listen to the speeches, and express their sympathy.

In opening the discussion, Senator Sheppard made an impassioned address.

Provision for the construction of two great dreadnoughts, six torpedo-boat destroyers, sixteen coast defense submarines, a sea-going submarine, a hospital ship, a transport, and a fuel ship, at an aggregate cost of $53,168,828, is made in the naval appropriation bill as agreed upon by the House naval committee. All told, the bill carries $145,500,000, of which $22,903,988 is directly appropriated for new construction.

Non-partisan judicial reform to speed up justice and reduce the cost of procedure is promised by Senators before Congress adjourns. The House has already agreed to reform measures, and they have been favorably reported to the Senate by the Judiciary committee. The reforms aim to restrict the number of cases which may reach the Supreme court, with a view to enabling that court to keep abreast with current business, and to simplify procedure in the Federal district courts and the Circuit courts of appeals. Chief Justice White entertains an ambition to have the Supreme Court clear up its docket each year before adjourning for the summer. The court has voluntarily lengthened its session, but cases have been piling in on the court faster than it could decide them.

After forty-seven years of litigation between the government and Gaspard Theurer and heirs of New Orleans over fifty barrels of whisky, the Supreme Court of the United States yesterday decided the contest had been forever ended by the death of Theurer. In 1867 the government began suit to condemn the whisky as having been removed illegally from a distillery. Theurer lost the suit, but was granted the right to appeal to the Supreme Court in 1870. He never docketed his appeal, and the government forgot about the case for thirty-five years. Then it sought to revive the suit against Theurer's heirs.

Day of Prayer Widely Observed in Washington.

January 14 was observed as a day of prayer by the W. C. T. U. of the District, the meeting being held in the First Congregational Church, Mrs. Emma Sanford Shelton, president, presiding. Each half hour was in charge of a different leader, who invited clergymen of the city to be in attendance to speak upon a certain topic. For instance, from 11 o'clock to 11:30, representatives of the Congregational and Lutheran churches discoursed on "The Past"; at 11:30 to 12, Baptist pastors spoke upon "Present Responsibility of the Individual" and so on through the day. The church was filled during the entire time and the talks and prayers were most helpful.

A petition to Congress for prohibition in the District, and for National Constitutional Prohibition, was unanimously adopted, and forwarded at once.

Alabama Legislature Passes Statewide Prohibition Bill

VOTE IN SENATE 29 TO 6; IN HOUSE 74 TO 26

On June 30, 1915, the liquor dealers of the state of Alabama go out of business. This was the decision of both houses of tho legislature on January 14, when they voted, by a large majority, for a statewide prohibition law. The measure providing for statewide prohibition March 31, with an amendment extending the time to June 30, was passed by the lower house by a vote of 74 to 26 about noon of January 14; and was passed by the senate early in the afternoon by a vote of 29 to 6.

In the words of the Birmingham (Ala.) Ledger, "The wets made a futile effort during the morning to stem the prohibition tide, but they might as well have hurled their verbal thunder at Gibraltar with the hope of crumbling it to dust as to have attempted to make a breach in the solid phalanxes of the prohibitionists in the house and senate."

Effort after effort is said to have been made to amend the bills in both branches of the legislature, but with clocklike precision, these amendments were voted down, with the exception of one changing to June 30, 1915, the date for the measure to go into effect.

STATES WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Georgia, Oklahoma, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, Virginia, Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Arizona, Alabama.

The speeches made on behalf of and against the measure were short and there was a good spirit even on the part of the local optionists who opposed the bill but who appeared resigned to the inevitable. When the result of the vote was announced, the applause was tumultuous.

In his speech for the measure, Mr. Carmichael, the author of the original bill, said: "I hear the call of the women and children and I am determined to do my utmost toward the passage of a statewide measure. You ask where we will get the revenue to make up the deficit? We will get it by keeping in the treasury the money the saloons now take out."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union and other temperance organizations have worked unceasingly to create sentiment in favor of a statewide law and the men elected to the legislature last April were pledged to vote for such a measure at this session.

It is not at all improbable that the bill may be vetoed by Governor O'Neal, who is well known as the enemy of prohibition, but the temperance forces have the positive assurance of the legislators who voted for it in both houses, that in the event it is vetoed by the governor, they will pass it over his veto.

WHY A FRANCES WILLARD?

ANTOINETTE A. HAWLEY, Denver, Colo.

As well ask: Why a Moses? Why a Columbus? Why a Luther? Why a Wesley? Why a Lincoln?

"All history," says Emerson, "resolves itself into the biography of a few stout and earnest persons. Their success lay in the fact not that they were born great, but that God's thought for that century found in them an unobstructed channel, so that the wonders of which they were the visible conductors seemed, to the eye, their deed. That which to an outsider looked like will and immovableness, was really willingness and self annihilation." We call it consecration—a word Emerson doesn't use—so to me, the "why" of these strong souls that have led the conquering minorities of the race from the dawn of history, is simply, that in the great crises of the world, they heard in the darkness a compelling voice crying: "The Master is come and calleth for thee."

In those dark days that followed the Civil War, when the liquor traffic had "mounted the throne of revenue," and the national conscience lay asleep with that tainted gold upon its eyes, God gave to Frances E. Willard, in the street called Straight, such a vision of Christian responsibility and citizenship, such a vision of the power of an awakened civic conscience, as had never before been granted to man or woman, and ringing in her ear, too, was that insistent call: "The Master is come and calleth for thee."

How else can be explained her refusal of the offer of a splendid position that meant ease and prestige, and culture and popularity, to take the leadership of a forlorn group of women in Chicago who had nothing to offer her but privation and hardship and unpopularity?

This girl, with splendid memories of European travel singing in her brain; with glad recollections of years of success as an educator in a great institution firing her ambitions; feeling, as she must have felt, the possibilities of achievement in these congenial and fascinating fields of labor—in that hour which meant so much to this nation and to the world, this free American girl had only this to say: "Speak, Lord, for thy servant hareth."

Who today doubts that God spoke to her, as poor and sometimes hungry, she walked the streets of Chicago on her Master's errands, because she had no carfare? Who today doubts that even then He was answering that marvelous prayer of her youth: "O Thou that rulest above, help me that my life may be valuable; that some human being may yet thank Thee that I have lived and toiled."

On the walls of a German gallery hangs a small picture of Junius preaching the gospel of the reformation to a handful of people in an obscure room in Antwerp, where the only light they had streamed in from the public square where one of their number was being burned as a heretic.

Why martyrs? Why a Frances Willard? Because it takes martyrdom, as those brave women in England believe today—it takes martyrdom, of some sort, to stir the reluctant heart of the world, till it recognizes that its greatest need is light; as Mrs. Browning said:

"God's light organized
In some high soul crowned capable to lead
The conscious people; conscious and advised;
To plant the great Hereafter in the Now."

That was the supreme mission of Frances Willard; to plant the great hereafter in the now of those bitter years when she laid the foundations of the movement that today belts the globe.

Life only can kindle life, and as woman after woman felt the tingling currents of her electric enthusiasm stirring latent energies, there came into being a dynamic force that has shaken the civilized world out of its ruts of ignorance and conservatism, and sent it wheeling Godward with an impetus that means the swift coming of that day when "the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

What was the secret of her power? Her Godlike recognition of the greatness of other women, and their ability to carry out her far-reaching plans.

Long ago she cried out: We have everything to gain, and nothing to lose from free discussion, from experimental study of results, whether physical, or financial, moral or commercial, ethical or esthetic.

"These are the hidings of our power; the strong foundations, on which, as on a rock, we have begun to rear the edifice of a clear brain; an edifice that shall extend and rise till it becomes the Pharos of humanity."

At every gateway of information, along all these lines, she stationed a woman whose supreme business it was to know why drink was a foe, not only to body and soul, but to efficiency in every department of human effort; and the unique achievement of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been, that the results of the investigations it has been instrumental in starting, both in this country and in France and Germany, have become so embodied in the every-day ethics of our time, that their origin is forgotten, and you will hear intelligent persons say, "Why, the railroads and the corporations are doing a bigger temperance work than you are, because they are demanding total abstinence of their employes." Who taught them to demand it? They forget that almost thirty years ago, Frances Willard set out to compel the public schools "to focus their splendid light on the problem of prevention of the drink habit," as the sure road to industrial efficiency.

In those old crusade days, the saloons banished by prayer from hundreds of towns were restored by law, and again, when it meant social martyrdom and loss of friends and following, thirty-two years ago Frances Willard cried at Washington: "Here, then, at the nation's capital, let us declare our allegiance; here let us turn our faces to the beckoning future; here, where the liquor traffic pours in each year, its revenue of gold, stained with the blood of our dearest and best, let us set up our Home Protection banner in the name of the Lord."

Men and women, because Frances Willard uttered that pronouncement, the temperance hosts with priests and trumpets and the ark of the covenant are marching around the Jericho of the liquor traffic, intrenched in custom and law; but when all the priests blow the trumpets of prohibition, the people will shout and the walls of that dread city shall crumble before us, and the legalized outlaw of the twentieth century shall be vanquished by the laws of God and men.

WELCOMING THE STRANGER AT ELLIS ISLAND

MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, IN AN INTERVIEW, TELLS TOUCHING INCIDENTS CONCERNING IMMIGRANTS AT NEW YORK'S PORT OF ENTRY

Were you ever a stranger in a foreign land, where the speech of all around you was unintelligible, the customs peculiar and difficult to understand? If so, you can realize something of the loneliness and homesickness of the more than million aliens who each year come to our shores, landing at some of the various ports of entry.

"To make the whole world more homelike" was one of Frances Willard's definitions of the purpose of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and to make a trifle more homelike and cheerful the first days in America of those who come to us from foreign shores is the thought of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in keeping at Ellis Island one of its representatives, Mrs. Athena Marmaroff.

Mrs. Marmaroff, our white ribbon missionary who began her work January 1, 1913, is said by those who know her best to carry with her a delightful "homey" atmosphere, and when she speaks to the forlorn foreign women in their own loved languages, she makes their heartache a little less poignant, and their loneliness less intolerable.

In an interview with Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, and also president of the New York W. C. T. U., she related to the writer some incidents of the work of Mrs. Marmaroff at Ellis Island, which will show how practical and helpful are the activities carried on through our Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Christmas at Ellis Island

Especially interesting was Mrs. Boole's graphic account of the annual Christmas service held at the island. "There are about twenty-nine missionaries at Ellis Island, no organization being permitted to have more than one," explained Mrs. Boole. "The missionaries together arrange for a Christmas celebration for those who land a day or two before Christmas and are not able to start for their new homes until after the holiday, and those who are detained for physical examination, or because of lack of money or pending the receipt of some word from their friends. A Christmas tree, brilliant with hundreds of electric lights and many colored decorations, is placed in the big dining room. Imagine the surprise of the children and the mothers and fathers as they are brought into the presence of this beautiful tree."

"Did you have as many as usual at your Christmas celebration this year, or did the war make the number less?" Mrs. Boole was asked.

"The war has had a marked effect on immigration," was the reply, "but immigrants are still coming from Italy and Greece and from the other Balkan countries, and in small numbers from other countries, but this year the number present on December 23 was not as great as usual."

"What is the character of the program given on these occasions?" asked the writer.

"There is a speaker for nearly every nationality represented, for addresses are given in many different languages. As soon as a speaker utters the first sentence it is easy to tell the nationality of the different individuals or groups by the expression upon their faces. Whether from joy at hearing again their own language or from homesickness, I know not, but at the sound of their own loved tongue, strong men and women weep like children."

National Airs Stir the Hearts of the Immigrants

"How about the music? Do you have any singing of national airs?" was the next question.

"No, that is impossible, but we usually have a number of bands or orchestras, sometimes Hungarian and Italian, and possibly others, and they play, one after another, the national airs of the different countries represented. Rarely does one see a more pathetic sight than the emotion of these different groups of people during the music. First one group and then another will be moved to tears as the national air of its 'ain countree' is played."

"Of course a Christmas celebration would be incomplete without presents for the little folks?" the writer suggested.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Boole, "there are presents for all. For the older boys and girls, stockings and gloves and handkerchiefs; for the women, stockings and handkerchiefs, and for the children, candy and bags of crackers; and sometimes dolls and toys. Toys and dolls that have been used and have been thrown away by more fortunate children can be used to advantage at any time at Ellis Island."

"In her regular work along what special lines does Mrs. Marmaroff find her greatest opportunities for helping these women and children?"

W. C. T. U. Missionary Finds Many Opportunities for Service

"While her special work is among the women and children from the Balkan states, she does much work among other nationalities. Her opportunities, as you can well imagine, are manifold and varied. A woman loses her railroad ticket and Mrs. Marmaroff finds it for her; another loses her luggage and our good missionary traces it. Sometimes two friends or relatives are together, and one leaves and carries off the money of the other, and Mrs. Marmaroff is obliged to follow up the one who has taken the money and recover it. Oftentimes some immigrant has an incorrect address of the friend or relative to whom she is to go, and our white ribbon representative makes it her business to use every endeavor to verify or correct this address. Through unfamiliarity with the language and because they are confused by the strange surroundings and customs, they make incorrect statements to the officials, and do not tell the truth. Mrs. Marmaroff gains their confidence, learns the actual facts and often is able to prevent their being deported. Especially trying is it when the children become ill and are taken away to the hospital, sometimes without a satisfactory explanation to the mothers. Mrs. Marmaroff, herself the mother of five children, visits these sick ones, takes them delicacies, and reports frequently to the parents the condition of the little invalids. Sometimes, it is her sad duty to tell the mother of the death of her child, and to attend to the last sorrowful ar-

FRANCES E. WILLARD

LULU CLARK MARKHAM

Great souls have followed the undying gleam,
Great-hearted womanhood has sought the dream
Since ancient earth was young. The immortal quest
Still lures beyond the outposts of the west
The soul of motherhood, of selflessness,
That hears the sobbing rhythm of world-distress,
And seeks with life and labor sacrificed
To win the deathless legacy of Christ.

Of those who loved, a shining sisterhood
In ranks of service through the years has stood:
Brave Esther with her regal head unbowed
Before the monarch, standing white and proud,
Her beauty given to save her trampled race;
The prophetess with rapture in her face
Leading the host; the queen who gave her all
To aid the mighty conquest of a seer;
The peasant maid who left her hills to hear
The faint, far, spirit-sent, imploring call

To which her tender flesh was sacrificed;
The one who bore her spices rich and sweet
To soothe the gentle Master's weary feet;
And Mary bearing to the world its Christ—
These have loved much.

And there was one who came
With tender eyes lit with a heavenly flame.
The new hope of an unknown liberty,
Of freedom from an age-long slavery;
A vision of wan women loosed at last
From all the ghastly tortures of the past,
Of happy children born to bless the age
With minds unmarred by vicious heritage.
With bodies strong and clean, and fragrant breath
No longer tainted with the reek of death.

Hers was the larger vision as she stood
On Darien-peaks of the world-motherhood.
And saw the new land by the future's sea
Made glad with golden harvests yet to be,
When the young race, freed from the ancient doom,
Shall walk the verdant valleys bright with bloom,
And sow good seed that all the earth shall bless
With plentitude of truth and perfectness.

She stands today within the Hall of Fame,
Where all the nations throng to bless her name;
But who shall tell of the redeemed souls
Whose destiny her deathless deed controls?
Of the unwritten tales of joy and hope
Her hand inspired? The far eternal scope
Of her one radiant reach for purity,
Her faith in human power to be free?

In broken chains of tyranny and greed,
In larger strivings of a nobler creed,
In womanhood to service consecrate,
In sacred childhood guarded by the state,
In fair ideals of manhood deified
Her pure, prophetic spirit shall abide.

FRANCES E. WILLARD AND PEACE

JANE A. STEWART, Philadelphia, Pa.

"It is apparent, even to the general public, from whom diplomatic movements are carefully guarded, that the great continental nations that are most heavily armed have become sensitive to the people's recoil from the arbitrament of blood, and are growingly elastic in their willingness to conciliate, so much so that they will ere long be masters of that delicate art. It is not chimerical to predict that within the next generation the spectacle of battle to the masses who have been looked upon as fittest of all for 'bullet meat' will have become as distasteful as a street fight, and within the next century as disreputable. The code duello was once held in high honor, but it is now the object of contempt, and the duel between nations is in reality just as unpardonable, not to say wicked. The increase of woman's influence in public affairs will tell incalculably against bloodshed. Thus do all things work together for good, and no good to the human race can be greater than that dread of war, which each new invention of death-dealing weapons deepens in the people's breast."

It was Frances E. Willard who was speaking. She stood before that great World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Queen's Hall, London, 1895, the eager, responsive faces in the large audience inspiring her to even greater eloquence and feeling in the delivery of her address as World's W. C. T. U. President. It was a message uplifting and prophetic.

That was just twenty years ago. The new generation (through the great impact of Peace propaganda, in which the W. C. T. U. has so large a share) does, as Miss Willard predicted, find the spectacle of battle "distasteful," though in European countries they are forced into it. In view of the great gains made it is conceivable that within the century warfare will in fact become "disreputable."

Although the great leader brought the temperance reform to the forefront she was always an ardent advocate of international peace and human brotherhood.

When the great International Council of Women (of which she was one of the founders) met at Washington, D. C., in 1888, she was appointed to speak before the women's meeting on Social Purity. Referring to the fact that the curse of impurity is most deeply rooted and most apologized for by men in the camps of soldiery, she said:

"What would woman's coming forward in government tend to bring about? The reign of peace. The mother heart that cannot be legislated in and cannot be legislated out would say:

"'I will not give my sons to be butchered in great battles,' and we would have international arbitration."

> My heart prophesies with all a patriot's gratitude that America will win in her bloodless war against the awful tyranny of King Alcohol and King Gambrinus, and proud am I to have a part in it, for, thank God, I—I, too, am an American.—F. E. W.

Her keen vision saw in the great International Council of Women a mighty motive power for peace; and peace was the common aim and ground on which this diversified body first united for world betterment.

The World's W. C. T. U., too, of which she was the famed originator, carried Peace as well as Temperance and Purity on its banner. The Polyglot Petition called for peace, as she said, "in the interest of unifying and forwarding the reforms which are of equal importance to all the nations of the earth."

How heartily at that memorable National W. C. T. U. convention in New York City in 1888, she welcomed the presentation by Elizabeth Thompson, the philanthropist, of a "woman's flag," bordered with the flags of all nations, symbolic of international peace!

Miss Willard was intensely patriotic, the sentiments of patriotism being "like fire in her bones." When but a young woman, she helped make bandages and contributed to the relief funds from her own money earned by teaching school during the Civil War. She drew from the work of the great American war heroes, Paul Revere, Warren, Washington, Sheridan, Sherman, Grant and others, encouragement for the battle against alcohol, saying in a Memorial Day address: "My heart prophesies with all a patriot's gratitude, America will win in her bloodless war against the awful tyranny of King Alcohol and King Gambrinus, and proud am I to have a part in it, for, thank God, I—I, too, am an American."

In her address on "Man in the Home" she made eloquent reference to the immeasurable loss to man that "in the age of force, of war and pioneering, they are so much shut out from the holy ministries of home's inmost sanctuary, where madonna and child are evermore enshrined."

With largeness of view as to woman's coming status in home and nation, she said: "The femme converte is not a character appropriate to our peaceful, homelike communities, although she may have been and doubtless was a necessary figure in the days when women were safe only as they were shut up in castles and when they were the booty chiefly sought in war."

The customs which have immeasurably handicapped and hampered the development of women, in Miss Willard's view "are the necessary outcome of the age of force, so long in its duration, but certain to be slowly followed by the age of spiritual power when the gentler sex shall take its rightful place in humanity's great family."

How clearly and with what broad vision she explained the process of racial progress toward universal brotherhood! She said:

"At first courage was the greatest virtue of man; he must smite the beast of

OUR FOREIGN-SPEAKING BROTHERS AND SISTERS

MRS. MARY B. WILSON

America has always been a land of problems. Men and women of every class and rank have struggled to comprehend and settle that which has been termed the "immigration problem." Six months ago many thoughtful people considered the solution fairly well worked out. Today, conditions are entirely different, old theories are set aside, and the problem is more difficult of solution than ever before.

From the more than seventeen millions of foreign-born people in the United States, have gone thousands of strong men, for the war cry from the Old World has been loud and insistent. Women and children have been left to shift for themselves or to become "public charges." Business is so depressed that work for men or women of any nationality is at a premium. On the other hand certain trades and occupations have lost their skilled workmen, and employers find difficulty in replacing them. Supplies of raw material are curtailed, thus closing up certain lines of work. Cries from abroad for assistance are reducing the size of the American pocketbook. A large number of men have rushed to the Naturalization Court asking for citizenship in order to escape military duty in the homeland, and one wonders whether such men will prove an asset to this country. Immigration has dropped from 100,000 in September, 1913, to 20,000 in September, 1914.

But this break in heavy immigration, and this necessity for the close touch of American with foreigners, may prove a most fortunate happening for all concerned. It gives us a chance to "catch up with our work," and become acquainted with ourselves, with the foreigners, and with the demands and possibilities of the situation.

With the banishment of alcoholic liquors in Russia, of beer among the German soldiers, of absinthe among the French soldiers, and the call to British soldiers for total abstinence, this is the golden opportunity for the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States to press home upon these millions of our foreign-born neighbors the reasons for such actions and our own attitude along such lines. With broader knowledge, better plans of work, and more tools, a campaign of education can be launched which will bring to a happy climax our efforts for morality, suffrage and prohibition.

States which have never taken up this work should begin it at once, in justice to themselves and for their own welfare. States which have done good work in the past year should double, nay treble, their efforts for the coming year.

The foreign papers which are on our side of the temperance question—L'Araldo (Italian) Hvita Bandet (Swedish), Reformatusok Lapja (Hungarian), Krestanske Listy (Bohemian), Sojuz (Ruthenian or Russian)—report longer lists of subscribers, increased interest in the temperance situation by these nationalities, and a desire for organization among themselves, both here and abroad. One editor reports that other reform organizations are following their example and teaching their propaganda through the papers.

Courtesy of International Y. M. C. A.

We must win our foreign-born neighbors for the cause of total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state and nation.

Gleanings from Reports of Workers

"I have ascertained that there are about 500 Chinese men and women voters in the state." "One family of young people translate for their parents from Youth's Companion, Sunday School Times, and the temperance papers." "Let us eliminate the word 'foreign' and take these women and children into our own unions and L. T. L.'s." "Especial work has been done in trying to get out the foreign woman's vote all over the state. I found more temperance sentiment among the Bohemian women, and vastly more sincerity, than among any other class. One 'dry' Bohemian sister, whose husband was 'wet' influenced five of her nationality to vote 'dry.'" "Our part in the campaign is to make a complete canvass of the city to secure pledge-signers. One Polish Catholic priest joined in this campaign, and had about 700 of his parishioners headed by a band in our parade. Two hundred children of his parish sang, 'A Saloonless Nation' and a Polish temperance song." "Special efforts have been made among Italian boys of from 14 to 21 who have been expelled from school. They were persuaded to join the Y. M. C. A., with splendid results." "Prayer-meetings are held at the home of one of our members whose husband is a miner. The rooms are filled with men who go down in the mines every day to earn their daily bread and who preach temperance to their comrades during the noon hour." "The trouble is people do not love these foreign-speaking people as they should, or the doing of the work would be easy."

THE SAILING OF "THE HARPALYCE" FROM BOSTON WITH RELIEF FOR STRICKEN BELGIUM

EVA KILBRETH FOSTER

A far cry from Coleridge's "idle as a painted ship upon a painted ocean" was the great living, breathing, throbbing ship with its eager spreading sails, which swung off and away from New England's shores under smiling skies, January 7, on its errand of mercy to the stricken homes of Belgium—a far, far cry.

To any ship, at any sailing, from any port, there attaches always and everywhere no little interest, no mean significance; yet it is safe to assume that a wider interest, a deeper significance, was wrapped about the sailing of the "Belgian Relief Ship;" that a larger circle, a larger public, felt a larger concern for this outgoing vessel—had a larger knowledge of its cargo, a larger and more intimate acquaintance with the countless treasures which countless hands had helped to stow away in the love-laden ship bound for stricken Belgium.

That the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, through its department of Flower Mission and Relief Work, was privileged to have its share in the stocking of this great ship, privileged to contribute its offering, is a matter of no slight gratification. With the sailing of "The Harpalyce" January 7, New England was sending more than a mere "relief ship," laden with timely aid; New England had stored away in the Belgium-bound ship something more than its gifts of food and clothing—had contributed a large part of itself, of its own heart-throbs, its own heart-sympathy and heart love for the stricken ones of that far-away land. New England's sons and daughters everywhere—those dwelling in its "rock-ribbed hills" and those living in its sun-touched valleys—have had their part in the beautiful preparation for the beautiful sailing of the ship on its beautiful mission; and the dwellers in the "rock-ribbed hills" (with all the stern traditions which environ them) have not been less quick, less eager, to help than have the dwellers in the sun-flooded valleys. On rugged New England with all its rugged history the heart-stirring cry from across the sea had left its impress, and New England's hands—multiplied and scattered hands—were soon busy with their work of love. And New England's cities, too, had their share in it all—a major share, naturally. With the British flag at the stern, with streamers flying from it and large canvas signs bearing the inscription, "Commission Belgium Relief, Rotterdam," the great ship sailed away while the sun was still high in the heavens. Countless voices shouted their farewells—countless souls, we dare to believe, breathed a prayer, a God-speed, for the outgoing vessel.

Kansas To Lead In National Prohibition Movement

GOVERNOR ARTHUR CAPPER, IN HIS INAUGURAL ADDRESS, JANUARY 11, 1915, TAKES AGGRESSIVE STAND FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION

In his inaugural address, delivered on January 11, 1915, Governor-elect Arthur Capper, of the state of Kansas, took an outspoken and aggressive stand for state and national prohibition. He championed the great reform in the following words:

There has been a genuine effort in Kansas to incorporate into our body politic fundamental, moral ideas; we have tried to base our laws upon eternal truths which tend to righteousness. Kansas comes nearer giving every man, woman and child within its borders an absolutely square deal and equal chance in every department of life than any other commonwealth in this Union. And this has been true because our Kansas citizenship is made up of men and women dominated by Christian ideals of right living, high thinking, decency, honesty, sobriety, industry and the noblest things of life. Our material prosperity, our high standards of public morals, our personal well-being are largely due to the fact that for more than thirty years the open saloon has been an outlaw in this state. Our physical development has not been stunted, and our moral sense has not been blunted by the degenerating influences of drink. And we may rejoice that the Kansas election of 1914 forever settles the saloon question in this state. That vote emphasizes as never before that prohibition is a distinctive political policy of Kansas. There can be no turning backward from the course which has brought such manifold blessings to our people. We may confidently expect the liquor evil, like murder, arson and highway robbery to show itself at times, but I promise you this administration will not for a single moment relax the most searching, stringent, vigorous and continuous enforcement of the prohibitory law.

To Lead in National Prohibition

The record Kansas has made in proving that prohibition does prohibit, the blessings which have followed its enactment as a part of our fundamental law, make it incumbent upon us as a duty to the nation as well as a policy of self-protection, to take the lead in an active propaganda for National Prohibition. We must make the happy conditions we have achieved known to the world. To this extent we are emphatically "our brother's keeper." We cannot evade the responsibility. It is our duty to say to the people of the United States: "The public health, the public peace, the public morals, and the public welfare demand the complete eradication of the saloon and the absolute prohibition of its wretched and destructive traffic."

Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas

Many of us who live in Kansas and have learned to take prohibition as a matter of course, do not fully appreciate the intensity and the proportions of the struggle now waging in every part of the United States for National Prohibition. The victory is coming just as surely as the American people retain their sanity and judgment. But the battle will not be won without herculean effort. From this time forward until the question is settled and settled right, National Prohibition will be one of the big issues—possibly the chief issue—in every national political campaign; and Kansas must lead the battle.

Pledges Vigorous Championship

We have had Nationwide Prohibition in all the great American industries for nearly ten years. National Prohibition itself should no longer be delayed. It will not be long in coming if Kansas people give the movement their active leadership and their vigorous championship.

I here pledge you that my utmost endeavor shall be to aid this movement, to use all the influence I possess, as a citizen, as a newspaper man, and as a public official, to advance this great cause.

I rejoice with the people of Kansas that the women of our state have been admitted to the full rights of citizenship. By the large vote they cast at the recent election, they have shown a ready willingness to assume their new responsibilities and have made certain that we may expect a higher standard in public affairs and especially in public morals as a result. The influence of Kansas should be exerted in every possible way to bring about equal suffrage in the nation.

Try as we may, we move slowly toward the ultimate goal of mankind—the brotherhood of man. In the two years we are now entering upon, may we people of Kansas do our part in that slow but sure advance in human progress for loftier ideals; for a wider and deeper justice; for a quickened sense of public honor and public duty; toward making our beloved state a little cleaner, a little more decent, happier, and more God-like.

QUIZ FOR FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND DAY

Q. What is the Frances E. Willard Memorial Day Fund?

A. This fund, for the extension and perpetuation of the principles and work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, was established at the National W. C. T. U. Convention in 1898. Each local W. C. T. U. is urged to arrange for a public meeting on or near February 17 of each year, and to send the sum of two dollars or more, from the offering received, to the state W. C. T. U. treasurer, who will forward to the National W. C. T. U. treasurer, Evanston, Illinois.

Q. How is the Fund used?

A. For the extension and perpetuation of the principles and work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in a general way. Specifically (a) to extend the work through organization in missionary territory and to carry on prohibition campaigns; (b) to reach the thousands of foreigners who each year come to America from drink-cursed countries; to welcome them at Ellis Island, and through our department of Work among Foreign-Speaking People, with its many agencies for instruction, to enlighten them as to the benefits of total abstinence and prohibition; (c) through the department of Work among the Indians, to instruct and warn the aborigines against the red man's curse, and to interest them to use their citizenship rights to outlaw the liquor traffic; (d) to instruct and organize the colored people who form so large a factor in our prohibition campaigns in the Southern states and who if not won for prohibition will be bought by the liquor interests.

Q. What testimony has been given as to the benefits received from the use of this Fund?

A. The testimony is varied and voluminous. In the words of the National superintendent of Work among Foreign-Speaking People, "Because of the Memorial Fund, thousands in the United States are reading temperance stories, scientific articles, reports from prohibition states and accounts of campaigns, and other thousands in other countries are reading these truths and asking for further light."

Q. What evidence have we that the Memorial Fund has been of value in statewide prohibition campaigns?

A. At the recent National W. C. T. U. Convention at Atlanta, Georgia, the presidents of the victorious campaign states spoke appreciatively of the benefits received from the Memorial Fund. The president of the Virginia W. C. T. U. said, "I cannot tell you how much it meant to have given to us the amount of literature made possible through the Memorial Fund. We used a little over one thousand dollars' worth and it was of great value."

The president of the Washington W. C. T. U. testified: "We had a number of speakers who gave us invaluable assistance in refuting the false statements of the liquorites and I believe we could not have won our campaign, had it not been for the help given us by Mother National through the Memorial Fund. We had repeated calls for the National W. C. T. U. literature sent out through that Fund and there was nothing that could have taken its place."

The president of the Oregon W. C. T. U. stated: "It was the Memorial Fund that made it possible for Mother National to help us with posters and leaflets, and we cannot express our gratitude for the invaluable assistance given us."

The president of the Colorado W. C. T. U. gave the following testimony: "I wish you could have a vision of our office during the campaign, with lawyers as well as ministers asking for ammunition for the statewide battle. The only material we considered reliable that we could give them was the posters and literature supplied by the National W. C. T. U. through the Memorial Fund."

Q. What is the responsibility of the local unions toward this Fund?

A. Each local union in the United States should consider it a privilege to arrange for a public meeting once a year on or near February 17, and to send the sum of $2.00 or more from the offering received for this Fund.

DAY OF SMALL THINGS HAS PASSED

It is a fact of great significance that the temperance question has at last entered the charmed circle of live news, sought as eagerly by the metropolitan daily and the magazine as by the religious and philanthropic press.

Many of us remember the day of small things for the anti-alcohol movement and rejoice at the mighty onward sweep of our reform that today makes it a live wire in journalism as well as a dominant note in the social, civic, religious and political life of the community and the nation. A. A. G.

The heart of Frances Willard went out in love and sympathy to the people of every land and language, and we believe the work that is being done in educating our foreign-speaking people in the principles of total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the nation is the most far-reaching and significant memorial to her great life and work. The foreign periodicals which emphasize temperance truths are among the helpful agencies in this education. Some of these papers are shown on the cover page of this issue.

MAKE ARKANSAS DRY, SAYS GOVERNOR HAYS

A scathing denunciation of the liquor traffic, supplementing an earnest recommendation that statewide prohibition be referred to the people for a referendum vote at the next general election in September, 1916, was a feature of the address of Governor George W. Hays to the Arkansas general assembly the afternoon of January 14. While Governor Hays has never been known as a friend of the liquor interests, his vigorous stand was something of a bomb in their camp.

SUGGESTED PROGRAM FOR FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND DAY, FEB. 17

The observance of this day should not only commemorate the beautiful life and achievements of Frances E. Willard, but should win thousands of new members and thousands of dollars for the Memorial Fund. The program outlined suggests articles which may be used, each union selecting for itself the desired material. —EDITOR.

Alabama the Fifteenth Prohibition State

The legislature of the state of Alabama celebrated January 14—National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Day— in a most exceptionally satisfactory way, by voting by a remarkable majority in both houses, for statewide prohibition. That the event was not unexpected did not lessen the joy over the return of Alabama to the ranks of the prohibition states. The statement made by liquor politicians that the result of the Senatorial contest last spring showed that the people of Alabama did not want prohibition is now disproven completely and absolutely. The people of Alabama have always been in favor of statewide prohibition. It was not at the will of the people that the legislature of 1911 repealed the prohibitory law—it was the act of law-makers in the employ of the liquor interests of the state. Last April the temperance forces of Alabama elected to the legislature men pledged to vote for statewide prohibition, and their action on January 14 was a fulfillment of their promise to the people to do the thing the people wanted done.

It is possible that Governor O'Neal, the avowed friend of the liquorites, may veto the measure, but if so, the legislators who voted for the bill have given their assurance that they will pass it over the governor's veto.

SECRETARY OF STATE SEES END OF SALOONS IN VOTE IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The majority vote in the House of Representatives on December 22 in favor of submitting to the people the question of a prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution, in the opinion of Secretary of State Bryan, sounds the death knell of the liquor traffic in the United States.

"It only requires a majority to pass laws," says Mr. Bryan, in an extended discussion of the question in the current issue of The Commoner, "and the liquor interests see in the vote on the amendment the beginning of the end of their supremacy. The death knell of the saloon has been sounded and it is only a question of a few years when the business, now made an outlaw, will be driven from the highways and forced into secret places where, after a few years more of fugitive life, it will meet its death. From now on the liquor business can consider itself a fugitive from justice, living in constant fear of arrest and punishment."

RUM IN THE CHAIR?

The liquor interests of Chicago are finding it very difficult to get what they are pleased to term "their defense" before the reading public of the city of Chicago, so almost unanimous and outspoken are all the prominent papers of that city against the high-handed and unscrupulous tactics of the liquorites in the legislature. Their front pages are adorned (we use the term advisedly) with cartoons showing up the liquor men's conscienceless and ruthless attempt to control the law-making body of the state, and their editorial columns read like an up-to-date address on temperance. Verily, the liquor tribe of Illinois can take very little pleasure in reading the daily papers of the great metropolis, and realizing that their utterances echo the sentiments of the majority of the citizens of the state of Illinois. A sample of the vigorous handling "the trade" is receiving from these papers is shown in the following editorial from The Chicago Tribune:

"If there is one thing that the state of Illinois ought not to tolerate, and The Tribune is certain will not tolerate long, it is the organization and domination of the principal law-making agency of the state by the liquor interests.

"The control of our representative legislature by and in the interest of the organized traffic in alcohol would be a challenge to every self-respecting citizen, regardless of his opinion on prohibition or any other phase of the temperance problem. It would be a challenge he would answer, and the masterful and adroit gentlemen of the liquor lobby will do well to realize before it is too late that nothing could more effectually and powerfully advance the prohibition movement than a knowledge that our legislature had passed into their hands.

"As it is, the saloon plays a vicious and all too prominent role in our politics. The ethics of organized liquor are about as conscienceless as any force in public affairs, and whatever the variety of opinion as to legislation affecting the liquor traffic, there is none among disinterested citizens as to the propriety of government by the liquor traffic.

"Illinois is not yet ready to throw over republican government and accept a dictatorship of rum."

THE FOREIGN VOTE IN COLORADO

ADRIANNA A. HUNGERFORD, President Colorado W. C. T. U.

In our recent victorious campaign for prohibition, foreign-speaking citizens in some sections were an important part of the temperance forces. No report has been received of any organized opposition from these peoples. Four decidedly wet counties have a very large per cent of Mexican citizens and all gave a good majority for prohibition. The work done among these people is described by a minister who was one of the campaign leaders:

"Rev. M. D. J. Sanchez, pastor of the Second Presbyterian church of Alamosa, and his efficient elders, are largely responsible for the result obtained; they worked early and late making prohibition sentiment by distribution of literature, public meetings and hand-to-hand personal work. We were indebted to the El Faro of Trinidad (printed in Spanish) for most of the Mexican literature—10,000 copies were circulated during the month preceding election. W. C. T. U. literature was also used largely.

"Formerly interpreters for the Mexican people appeared at the polls and the minds of the former were more frequently expressed than the will of the voters. The headless ballot has worked a great change. The Spanish-speaking citizen votes as intelligently as his English-speaking neighbor and in our valley the Mexican in general has stood for prohibition. The Mexican women have excelled all others. When the poll of our town was taken two years ago only four or five of these women, out of nearly 150, expressed themselves for the saloon; the rest were decidedly against it. The Mexican population can be depended upon to favor National Prohibition. The gospel temperance literature, together with higher ideas of political freedom and good citizenship, is doing wonders."

A minister and wife have had remarkable results among German-Russians, the women being especially active for law enforcement and prohibition. Denominational missionaries did wonderful campaigning among Italians and other foreigners. Similar methods, literature, meetings and personal work need to be continued to sustain the present interest and win others for National Constitutional Prohibition.

National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Day

According to the plans of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, looking to the furtherance of the campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition, Thursday, January 14, 1915, was observed throughout the nation as a day of prayer and conference. The churches co-operated with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in these services. Special prayer was offered for the President of the United States, and for all law-enforcing officials, local, state and national, upon the execution of whose oaths of office so much depends. The program issued by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and which was published in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 7, was generally used at these meetings.

National Leaders Speak at Evanston Service

The Evanston (Ill.) local unions were fortunate in having among their speakers four general officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The all day meeting was held in the chapel of the First Methodist Episcopal church—the church of which Frances E. Willard was a member. In the forenoon Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson, National treasurer, and Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, led the prayer services, taking as their respective themes, "Thanksgiving for Victories" and "Official Responsibility." Two young men, students at the Northwestern University, read, with spirit and understanding, the addresses by Senator Morris Sheppard and Congressman Richmond P. Hobson.

Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National corresponding secretary, told of the plans for the year's campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition, assuring her audience that it was especially favored in receiving advance information concerning these plans.

Five Evanston ministers participated in the afternoon meeting, leading in prayer and delivering brief addresses on "The Past—Milestones Passed in the Prohibition Movement"; "The Present—The Battle Today"; "The Future—A Prophecy."

Miss Letta D. Horner, of Iowa, who is now attending the Northwestern University School of Oratory, gave, with fine expression, an adaptation of James Russell Lowell's "The Present Crisis."

Following a very spirited talk by Miss Gordon on some of the great victories for prohibition, she conducted a responsive reading of the prohibition quiz.

Miss Helen L. Hood, president of the Illinois W. C. T. U., gave an optimistic address on the hopeful outlook for prohibition. "We are standing in the midst of a great century of accumulated movements for good," said Miss Hood, "and we are facing the final solution of great humanitarian problems." In prophesying the speedy elimination of the liquor business in the state of Illinois, she told of the statement of one of the clerks of the license department of the city hall in Chicago: "I predict that in five years the city of Chicago will have no license department."

Especially inspiring were the musical numbers of the program, three local musicians singing solos. A company of between thirty and forty girls and boys from the fifth grade of one of Evanston's public schools, in the picturesque regalia of Young Campaigners for Prohibition, sang, with fine effect, "The Children's Happy Day," the words of which popular song were composed by Miss Gordon. In a delightful talk to the little folks, Miss Gordon gave to each, as a souvenir of the day, a Y. C. P. button, telling them of the significance of the emblematic button.

Others who participated in the service were Mrs. Almena McDonald, president Cook county W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Maria C Weed, National W. C. T. U. lecturer.

The closing message of the afternoon was given by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, vice-president-at-large of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and president of the New York W. C. T. U. Taking as her theme the universal appeal for prohibition of the liquor traffic, she showed that all roads lead to the goal—National Constitutional Prohibition: the roads of education, of science, of health, of business. "What has been the trouble with our great temperance train in past years that it has not moved more rapidly?" asked Mrs. Boole. "It has been side-tracked too many times, side-tracked by almost everything under the sun, and the time has now come when we need to build a highway of public sentiment, broad and long enough so that we cannot be side-tracked in our movement for National Constitutional Prohibition."

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

ELLIS ISLAND

They come, they come! One treads the other's heel;
And some we laugh and some we weep to see,
And some we fear; but in the throng we feel
The mighty throb of our own destiny.

Outstretched their hands to take what-e'er we give—
Honor, dishonor, daily bread, or bane—
Not theirs to choose how we may bid them live,
But what we give we shall receive again.

America, charge not thy fate to these!
The power is ours to mold them or to mar;
But Freedom's voice, far down the centuries,
Shall sound our choice from blazing star to star.
—C. A. Price, in Scribner's Magazine

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. E. C. WIDDIFIELD, a charter member of the Leal (North Dakota) W. C. T. U., a life member of the state W. C. T. U., and state superintendent of the department of Evangelistic work. She possessed a rarely beautiful Christian spirit, was a most valued worker and greatly beloved by all who knew her. The sympathy of white ribboners goes out to her bereaved husband, Mr. J. W. Widdifield, who is superintendent of the Temperance department of the North Dakota Sunday School Association, and who was a strong support to Mrs. Widdifield in all her temperance work.

MISS SUSIE COPE, Phoenix, Oregon, an earnest and gifted woman, and state superintendent of Christian Citizenship and president of the local union. Miss Cope will be greatly missed in Oregon.

MRS. JOHN HARPHAM, Sterling, Ill., for over fifty years a most ardent advocate of temperance and a charter member of the local union. She was at various times its president, also a worker in the county and state organizations.

MRS. H. W. MILLER, Kansas City, Mo., for twenty-five years president of Central Union. She joined the W. C. T. U. in Missouri thirty-five years ago and was closely associated with Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman in the early days. Mrs. Miller was a wise and gifted leader and her life was rich in faith and good works.

PERSONAL MENTION

One of the visitors at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters during the past week was Mrs. Mary I. Smith, of Mt. Vernon, Iowa, editor of the Iowa state paper, the W. C. T. U. Champion, and a state organizer.

WORK AMONG FOREIGN-SPEAKING PEOPLE

MRS. ELLA BOUCHER BLACK, National Superintendent

In the resignation of Mrs. Mary B. Wilson, this department loses a valuable leader. The splendid work carried on in many states is due, in large measure, to her untiring efforts.

Some of our people may think that because just at present not many foreigners are coming to our shores there is not much need of work along this line this year. We must realize that the great European conflict has taken the breadwinner from many homes and has brought untold sadness to thousands. Letters telling of the death of a father, brother, son or friend, are daily arriving. In some cases these families need financial aid, in others a word of sympathy or cheer will do much.

The department of Work Among Foreign-Speaking People embraces the work of almost all other departments. Do not think that when you ha'e'found a woman willing to be superintendent of the department your work is done. The woman who is willing to take up this work is usually a busy person, and she cannot possibly do everything. When you hold a mothers' meeting, do you invite the foreign mothers? Do you realize how much they need your help? When you hold a medical temperance meeting do you invite them?

One little Slavic girl was heard to say, "Times are hard, and we do not have much money, but we must have beer for father, he could not work without it; it gives him strength. Mother and the children can get along without it, but father must have it."

An Italian woman gave her baby beer in a nursing bottle. It made the baby stupid and hence it was less trouble to her. Do these mothers need the truths of medical temperance?

We often hear people complain that these people are insanitary in their mode of living. After what our war correspondents have told us in the last few months about the poverty of some of the people who come to us, are we surprised at their ignorance?

One little Italian girl said to a neighbor, "My mother would like to keep house like you if she knew how." Are we willing to show them how we do our work? Some few of the foreign girls have the opportunity of attending schools where domestic science is taught, but in the localities where most foreigners live such schools do not exist. This same child in speaking to another neighbor said, "My brother would like to have pie for his dinner bucket; other men have pie. My mother tried to make pie. We went to the store, got two little boxes of baking powder, put both in the pie and it got big, big, big, but no good." The good neighbor then told the little girl how we make pie. Many of the foreign mothers cannot read, but their children can. Place in their hands a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL, The Young Crusader, Woman's Journal, American Motherhood or Mother's Magazine. Some day these girls and boys will be voters. Many of the foreigners are members of no church. It is not the purpose of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to try to change the religion of these people, but if it is not missionary work to look after those who have no religion, then what is missionary work? Will God bless the money we send to heathen lands if we do not speak a kind word to the heathen about us? Have you ever asked your pastor to speak on "Our Duty to Our Foreign Neighbor?" Have the young men of your Sunday school tried to bring the Italian, Spanish or Polish young men with them? Do the men of your men's Bible class—the husbands of the white ribboners—take time to explain to the foreign voter what it means to vote for his home?

Thousands are seeking to become American citizens, that they may escape military service in the homeland. Unless our Christian men assume a more friendly attitude toward them these foreigners will become the prey of the liquor forces. If we are to have National Constitutional Prohibition within the next few years we must not overlook this important element of the community.

The example we set the foreigners signifies much. We find them trying to imitate American ways in every particular. One man, in speaking of a friend of his said, "That man's life is in the balance. He is watching very closely two families of church members." These families had no idea that their every action was being noted.

Scientific Temperance Instruction is doing wonders for the foreign children in our public schools. In many cases neither father nor mother can read in any language, and temperance tracts and stories in English placed in the hands of the children are most helpful.

As a number of weeks of the W. C. T. U. year had elapsed before Mrs. Wilson's vacancy was filled let us work with a will to make the remaining months helpful to our foreign people and to our Nation as well.

Mims, Florida.

RESCUE WORK

LURENDA B. SMITH

The year just closed has been prolific in tangible results. Not since the department was organized has there been in any one year so much progress made along lines of legislation as in 1913 and 1914.

Our Federal government and the states have been investigating vice conditions and have found, to their horror and surprise, that the open saloon is responsible for over ninety per cent of the social vice and tributary evils.

National and state leaders of the people are now, nearly all of them, co-operating with the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union for National Constitutional Prohibition. Effective legislation has been instituted in nearly all the states covering the many phases of the traffic in women and the social evil.

As workers in the Purity, Curfew, Policewomen and other departments related to the Rescue department, it behooves us to work faithfully and persistently in evangelistic, educational and preventive lines in order to keep pace with legislation. The law is a great educator in itself, but we need instruction and information. There are many people today who are utterly unaware of the dangers to girls and women that lurk at street corners, parks, ice cream parlors, steamboat landings, terminal and local railroad stations, road-houses, joy rides, public shows and dance houses; therefore let us work for policewomen; for the enforcement of the curfew ordinance; and put ourselves in communication and sympathy with policemen. Let them know on whom they can depend for assistance in times of stress, for stress does come to these public men, when they realize that motherly counsel, instead of arrest, is needed among the young of both sexes.

"Prevention is better than cure," always and everywhere and in all cases. Remember that the human voice has great power over many, therefore, secure tactful speakers. This department has three specially prepared for this work: Rev. Eugenia F. St. John, Salina, Kansas; Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Elmira, New York, and Mrs. Lora La Mance, Joplin, Missouri. There are many others. As far as possible secure our own women speakers.

Remember the printed page. There is department literature waiting to be sent to you from my office, and from our great store-house, the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Illinois.

I am hoping that the blessed Christmastide gave you a broader vision of "poor humanity's" needs, and that the opening year may bring you peace, prosperity and a greater desire to enter every open door of usefulness.

Ottawa, Kansas.

THE CHILD AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Mr. T. J. Gilmore of the National Model License League is concerned beyond measure because certain children, Samuel aged eight, Anna aged nine, Elizabeth aged eleven and Mabel aged nine, have seen fit to write to the President of these United States and ask him to close the saloons in their home cities. In a letter to the North American of Philadelphia he sarcastically wonders why our fathers overlooked this method of securing light on great problems of state and questions the knowledge of these babes as to states' rights, personal liberty, confiscation without compensation and the duty of the state to the citizen, etc.

In reply to Mr. Gilmore the North American aptly retorts:

"In his main contention Mr. Gilmore's logic suffers a lamentable collapse. Knowing perfectly well that the children whose letters to the president move his sardonic humor could not grasp the intricacies of tariff making and rate control, he assumes that they are equally unfitted to express judgment upon the liquor issue.

"He never made a greater mistake in his life. An intelligent idea of the complex issues of protection and rate regulation is denied even to most adults. But every normal child has a pretty clear concept of the rum business.

"If Mr. Gilmore gives his mind to it honestly, he will be impressed by this fact—that to the boy and girl who never heard of schedule K and to whom Mexico is a mere geographical expression the corner saloon is a concrete and familiar fact, the very odor of which is an offense to their innocence.

"Even with the powerful aid he supplies, we cannot see that the childish letters were amusing. It would be absurd, of course, if they had advised the President about the trade commission of the Philippines. But they didn't; the children addressed him upon an evil which confronts them on the public streets, which throws its shadow across their paths as they go to and from school, which lurks about them as they grow to manhood and womanhood, which threatens their homes and their lives. We cannot at the moment recall any other public question upon which the opinion of the child would be of such singular appropriateness and value."

IT'S A SHORT WAY TO PROHIBITION

The clever paraphrase of "It's a Long Way to Tipperary," sung at the National Convention at Atlanta, suggested to the liquor men the lines given below, which appeared in a recent number of Mida's Criterion.

Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts, World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of Sunday School Work, promptly retorted with the adaptation which also appears in this column.

It's a long way to prohibition,
It's the wrong way to go.
It's a sure way to bring perdition
To the greatest state I know.
Let's all stick together,
Let this be our cry,
It's a long, long way to prohibition
And we'll not go dry.
—Mida's Criterion

By Mrs. W. F. Crafts

It's a short way to prohibition
It's the right way to go.
It's a sure way to bring salvation
To the greatest land I know.
Let's all stick together
Let this be our cry
It's a short, short way to prohibition
And our Nation will go dry.

NEW HAMPSHIRE HAS A PROHIBITION GOVERNOR

The New Hampshire W. C. T. U. is rejoicing over the election of a governor, Hon. Rolland H. Spaulding, who is an ardent advocate of National Prohibition. Governor Spaulding was one of the committee of twenty-five who interviewed President Wilson in December, 1913, in regard to National Constitutional Prohibition. He did not seek the office of chief executive of the state, but was sought for and elected by a very large majority.

Ten temperance men have been appointed on the liquor committee by the speaker of the lower house of the legislature. House committees consist of fifteen members. In explaining his action the speaker made the statement that inasmuch as the prevailing sentiment of the house was anti-liquor, he felt that the temperance forces should have a majority vote on the committee. The outlook for the year along legislative lines is encouraging, and the white ribboners of the state will petition for the repeal of the local option license law.

MEN OPPOSED TO LOCAL OPTION FAVOR STATE AND NATIONAL PROHIBITION

CONGRESSMAN ADDISON T. SMITH, of Idaho

I recently talked with men in my state who have always opposed local option, who say they are heartily in favor of statewide and nationwide prohibition because they believe if the liquor traffic could be completely driven out all the people would be more prosperous and happy, thousands of young men who are now addicted to the drink habit would become sober and industrious citizens and be real factors in their community in the upbuilding of the country, and that the money now being spent for intoxicating liquor would go into channels which would make for the prosperity of all the people.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. GENERAL OFFICERS GUESTS AT LUNCHEON IN CHICAGO

The officers of the Illinois and the Cook county W. C. T. U. gave a reception and luncheon, January 12, in honor of the National W. C. T. U. officers in the Red room of Hotel La Salle in Chicago. Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president; Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large; Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National corresponding secretary; and Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson, National treasurer, were the guests of honor.

A very representative company of more than one hundred white ribboners, including the state officers, with one exception; the county officers; two National lecturers; three National superintendents; state organizers; state superintendents; county presidents and representatives from nine counties in the state, were seated at the tables.

Miss Helen L. Hood, state president, was toast mistress and called on state and county officials to rise in response to a general introduction. She presented Mrs. Almena Parker McDonald, president of Cook county W. C. T. U., who responded briefly but graciously.

Mrs. Parks and Mrs. Hutchinson praised the work of the Illinois organization and spoke words of commendation to the state officers for their faithful efficiency.

Every one was eager to hear from Miss Gordon and Mrs. Boole, who had so recently returned from Washington and from the legislative contest for National Constitutional Prohibition. Miss Gordon gave a delightful running account of the day in Congress when eager white ribboners sat in the gallery of the House of Representatives from nine in the morning until eleven at night, listening to the debate. She told graphically how when the roll was called their hearts almost stopped beating as they awaited the "yeas" and "nays" from the representatives. She said they never tired and she believed the victory of a majority for prohibition the first time the amendment was ever discussed in a National Congress was enough to hearten all white ribboners for the routine work of the year. She declared that this was only another delayed victory, and she ventured the prediction that ere long the majority vote will be changed to a victorious two-thirds.

Mrs. Boole had been requested by the presiding officer to tell of the work in the great state of New York and something of her summer trip to Europe, which was shortened by the war. Mrs. Boole is always a charming speaker, and she told in her own bright way how New York worked to make their large gains in membership and their plans for securing a vote in the New York legislature for state prohibition. Her account of the trip abroad this most unfortunate year for travel, the high hopes with which the party reached Naples and the dashing of all these hopes when they found they could not go north of Italy and must return to Naples was thrilling. The difficulty in securing funds, the canceling of sailing dates one after another, and their final return second class or converted steerage with a very limited menu, finally brought down to potatoes and lemonade, were more amusing in the telling than in the experience.

The singing of "Blest be the Tie that Binds" closed this social gathering, and all who were present felt better equipped for the work awaiting at desk or in the home.

BAD DREAMS
Caused by Coffee

"I have been a coffee drinker, more or less, ever since I can remember, until a few months ago I became more and more nervous and irritable, and finally I could not sleep at night for I was horribly disturbed by dreams of all sorts and a species of distressing nightmare.

"Finally, after hearing the experience of numbers of friends who had quit coffee and were drinking Postum, and learning of the great benefits they had derived, I concluded coffee must be the cause of my trouble, so I got some Postum and had it made strictly according to directions.

"I was astonished at the flavour and taste. It entirely took the place of coffee, and to my very great satisfaction, I began to sleep peacefully and sweetly. My nerves improved, and I wish I could wean every man, woman and child from the unwholesome drug-drink—coffee.

"People do not really appreciate or realize what a powerful drug it is and what terrible effect it has on the human system. If they did, hardly a pound of coffee would be sold. I would never think of going back to coffee again. I would almost as soon think of putting my hand in a fire after I had once been burned. Yours for health."

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

AN EVENING WITH FRANCES E. WILLARD

(Adapted from Jane A. Stewart)

SCENE: A family sitting-room, cozy interior.

CHARACTERS: Mr. Whitelife, Mrs. Whitelife; Frances, eighteen; Mary, sixteen; John, ten; Katherine, eight; Nellie, the maid; Mrs. Honore, an old friend; Mrs. Neighborly, a member of the W. C. T. U.

The family is grouped around a large center table. Mr. Whitelife is reading the paper; Mrs. Whitelife is writing; Frances and Mary are reading and studying; John is playing marbles on the floor and Katherine is playing with her dolls.

Mr. Whitelife (throwing aside his paper): Well, mother, what are you doing?

Mrs. Whitelife: Oh, I have been laboring over my notes of our W. C. T. U. meeting today, (laying them on the table). It was an especially interesting meeting and I make a point of getting my minutes written up before I lose the inspiration of the occasion. Then, too, I shall be busy next week getting ready for our Frances E. Willard Memorial Day meeting.

Frances (looking up): Frances E. Willard Memorial Day! What's that, mother?

Mrs. W.: You ought to remember, Frances. On Frances E. Wilard Memorial Day, we always celebrate the heavenly birthday of our beloved leader, Miss Willard. Don't you recall the day last year?

Frances: Oh, yes, I should say I do! What a success it was! But how you worked for it, mother.

Mr. W. (picking up his paper): I have just been reading something very fine about Miss Willard. Would you like to hear a part of it?

Mrs. W.: Yes, indeed, father, I have finished my work and we should all enjoy hearing it.

(Gets her mending basket and prepares to listen.)

Mr. W.: It's by her friend, Lady Henry Somerset, and is taken from the introduction of Miss Anna A. Gordon's blography of Miss Willard. It is written with the sympathetic insight of a justly appreciative soul companion whose rare wisdom and divining power bring out with master hand the character portrait of her friend.

Mary (looking up): Why, father, how eloquent you are!

Frances: Father always is eloquent on the subject of our great leader.

(Mr. Whitelife proceeds to read.)

(See introduction to "The Life of Frances E. Willard," by Anna Adams Gordon.)

Mrs. W.: How greatly Lady Henry Somerset helped to wind the white ribbon around the globe. The friendship and unity of alm of these two wonderful women gave a mighty impetus not only to temperance endeavor, but to all lines of advanced thought in many lands.

Frances: Mother, I've been asked to furnish a sketch of Frances Willard and the World's W. C. T. U. for a Y. P. B meeting. May I read aloud what I have written?

(Assent being given, Frances reads.)

(Frances has just finished when the door opens and Nellie enters with a large package.)

Nellie: The expressman handed me this just now, Mrs. Whitelife.

Mrs. W.: Oh, yes, it is our large portrait of Miss Willard, which we bought from the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union at Evanston, Ill. Please undo the wrappings, John. I am anxious to see the picture.

(The picture is uncovered and placed on a convenient easel. All gather round to look at it.)

Mrs. W. (thoughtfully): That is a very good photograph of our dear chieftain.

(Enter Mrs. Honore.)

Mrs. Honore (after greeting all): Ah, there's the picture of the woman who ought to have been president of this republic. If she had had her way and all the women like her, we'd have a heaven on earth in this world. Do you know, Mrs. Whitelife, that I knew that noble woman when she was a little girl—so high (measures with her hands). Did I ever tell you of the time—(the children all gather around Mrs. Honore and look expectant, as if anticipating a good story)—when my husband and I, with our little girl, were driving near Forest Home? You know we lived in Rock county, Wisconsin, and as a young doctor's wife I had many a long ride with him through the woods and over prairies to visit his patients. It was a bright autumn day way back in the fifties. The trees were just tinged with yellow and the sumac and elder had put on their scarlet, bronze and golden foliage. We stopped at the home of the Willards. Some one was very ill in the house, so I with my daughter remained in the carriage. In a chair outside and near the door sat a young girl in a gingham gown, busily reading. Soon she rose and came toward the carriage with a plate of cookies that her mother had given her. We were not hungry, but the sight of that plate made us feel that we were. The young girl said to our little daughter, "Little girl, do you like cookies with holes in them? Mother's cookies are famous. Take them and eat them, holes and all."

(John and Katherine laugh out loud.)

Katherine: How could she eat the holes, Mrs. Honore?

(Mrs. Honore pats little Katherine's head, smiles and continues): That little girl in the gingham dress later was the founder of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Mary: Do tell us more about her, please.

(Mrs. Honore tells a story of Miss Willard's youth.)

John: We learned a nice verse by Miss Willard in our Loyal Temperance Legion yesterday.

Mr. W.: Let us hear it, son.

John:

"I pledge my brain God's thoughts to think;
My lips no fire or foam to drink
From alcoholic cup; nor link
With my pure breath tobacco's taint;
For have I not a right to be
As wholesome and as pure as she
Who, through the years so glad and free,
Moves gently onward to meet me?
A knight of the New Chivalry,
Of Christ and temperance I would be."

(Applause.)

(Mrs. Neighborly arrives.)

Mrs. N.: I have brought over my article, Mrs. Whitelife, on Miss Willard's work. I hope you will like it.

Mrs. W.: How opportune! We were just having an impromptu Willard evening. Do read us your article. (Aside) Yes, John, you may pass the popcorn if you like.

Mrs. N.: I'll be glad to read it. The subject was so big that I had difficulty in condensing my ideas, but I have managed to limit my speech to the required length.

(Mrs. Neighborly reads.)

Mrs. Whitelife: Your paper is excellent, Mrs. Neighborly. Miss Willard was indeed a great woman. There are many memorials to her, but none of such practical value as the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund. Just think what is accomplished by means of it. Help, which includes work among colored people, foreign speaking people, and Indians, is extended to needy temperance missionary fields; states engaged in campaigns are assisted by money and literature. On order of the General Officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union appropriations are made to meet special needs; and in various other ways the money is carefully expended. That fund ought to grow to immense proportions. Surely every local union in the land ought to consider it an honor to contribute to it.

Mrs. N.: Our union always has made a donation to this fund, and always will, let us hope.

Mrs. W.: Yes, that ought to be the sentiment among local workers everywhere.

Mrs. N.: I must be going now, and I bid you all goodnight.

Mrs. W.: Hold on a minute, Mrs. Neighborly; let's have a goodnight song, one of Miss Willard's favorite melodies, "White Ribbon Vibrations," to be found in the "White Ribbon Hymnal."

Note: In preparing for this entertainment, consult the advertisement of Memorial Day supplies, found on page 16.

the field and ride forth to the wars; he must subdue the savage earth, while woman, the fountain at which life was to be replenished, must be kept pure, else the race would perish in the long lesson and fierce battle of its uplift and development. But now the savage world is under foot, and man lifts his strong hand up toward woman, who stands above him on the hard-won heights of purity that she may lead him upward from the drink domain and the tobacco habit, and that he may learn that highest of all human dignities—a chastity as steadfast as her own. Meanwhile she must learn of him that noble, masterly grace, physical courage, and that other manly virtue, intellectual hardihood, while she imparts to him more of her own courage of conviction. Into what mutual greatness they shall yet grow!"

At her anniversary in 1915, even in the glare of the awful war flames of Europe, we can read the signs of the times that, despite catastrophe (as the great leader were she today on earth would again hopefully declare), "the blessed time draws nearer to us every day when, in the most practical sense, and by the very constitution of society and government, 'all men's weal shall be each man's care';" and when there shall be formed the longed-for universal federation "to control the world's forces in the interests of peace and of every right reform."

TRANSFORMING THE AMERICAN INDIAN

MRS. DORCAS J. SPENCER, National Superintendent of Work Among Indians

This notary feels sorry for folks who have never known a "really, truly" Indian baby because—an Indian baby is really so very much like other babies. That little morsel of humanity, so deftly rolled up and tied into the basket in which he may ride securely on his mother's back, or in her arms, may quite safely be set up with his back against a tree, from which point of vantage he doubtless enjoys the scenery, or his basket may be swung from a low hanging limb. He is just a dear, blessed little baby, in whatever condition he is found, with all the capacity for development that any other baby has; with all the sweet, endearing charms of babyhood; and with all the rich possibilities of manhood within him, that other babies have. And they do say that lying there with restless baby hands restrained from infantile movements, he has a way of acquiring a sense that it would be extremely bad form to cry or to be unhappy, but doesn't he have a good time when his mother releases him from the basket and he may roll and tumble as much as little babies are able?

This is simply an introduction to a rising member of society, the type of many more whose infant feet must be led into the ways of Christian civilization. And just as the young of all other races claim the care and guidance of wise and good people, so do these children of the forests, of the mountains or of the old rancherias, appeal to us for aid. Year by year their development progresses, and they prove themselves to be, perhaps the most responsive to efforts made in their behalf of all the submerged peoples.

Strong Drink the Curse of the Red Man

We hear of missionaries going out to heathen lands on ships which carry cargoes of the strong drink that kills every good impulse, brutalizes the heathen, and defeats the object of missions. We need not go abroad to find parallel conditions. In one of the rich counties of the great Sacramento valley, a county nearly all dry by local option, the county seat, an otherwise lovely town, remains wet, and but seven miles away lies a little Indian village, a village whose people have come to be looked upon as bright and shining trophies of patient missionary effort. It has been a peculiarly happy demonstration of advanced ideas working on the Indian mind. But the trail of the serpent was found in this Indian Eden. Domestic discord, quarrels and conjugal neglect appeared among them. That there were weeping wives and unhappy homes came to the knowledge of Rev. F. G. Collett, field secretary of the Indian Board of Co-operation. He had been their first missionary and he undertook to find the source of their troubles. It soon became evident that it was just whisky. He said nothing to the Indians, but stayed for many weeks about the town doing some fine detective work and securing evidence against ten saloons which sold liquor to Indians. Two other places, one served by a Chinaman and one by a Japanese, refused to sell liquor to an Indian because it was unlawful.

Mr. Collett was easily the hero of this successful adventure, but he was "aided and abetted" by the local Woman's Christian Temperance Union and a number of good temperance men. As both moral and material support was necessary in an undertaking involving so many men and interests, it was rather surprising to find how many of the W. C. T. U. women, besides the men good and true, had been let into the secret and how absolutely each one kept it until Mr. Collett again appeared with two Federal officers. Within an hour nine of the ten men were under arrest, and had each given bonds in the sum of $2,000. The tenth man was arrested soon after. These men do not get off by a trial by jury at home. They have all been indicted by the Federal Grand Jury, and their trial is set for March 10, in the Federal court in San Francisco.

The heart of this superintendent is rejoicing exceedingly over the far-reaching influence that is expected to come out of this wholesale arrest, for sporadic troubles of this sort have occurred in other places quite too often. It is not only promising greater security for the Indians, but it is throwing a stronger light on the saloon. Already there is a growing idea that the law really ought to be respected and violation of law is more disreputable than it used to be.

In another county there was an aggravated case. When the Indians had finished their work of harvesting for the whites and all had been paid off, a few white men with whisky deliberately went among them to get their money by gambling. This was easily done, but in the row that followed one man was killed and an Indian youth of previous good character has been tried and convicted for the murder.

Two Squads of Young Campaigners for Prohibition Among California Indians

This is more than enough of this sort. I prefer to tell of the general advancement all along the line, of how the average Indian is looking upward. It is a slow process to find out just how many voted dry November 3, but a good many did. There were two good squads of Young Campaigners among the California Indians. The Umatillas of Oregon gave generously to the campaign fund and in one precinct where there was not a single white voter there was not one wet vote.

Arizona is doing good work just now in medal contests; so are the reservations in western New York, and here is something fine to relate: An Indian woman, Mrs. Lydia Pierce of Elko, in western New York, has become the state superintendent of work for her own people. She has been a successful local president for some years and has made a record of useful, intelligent work in her own department. Her plans of work are a credit to herself and the training she has had.

rangements for laying her away. Occasionally an aged mother comes to seek her sons or daughters in the new land, and is sorely disappointed at not finding them at the harbor in New York to meet her. It is Mrs. Marmaroff's privilege to write and learn, if she can, who and where they are, and arrange for the old mother to go to them."

"No doubt Mrs. Marmaroff is able to save many girls from the white slavers?" was suggested.

"Unquestionably," was the response. "All girls from the Balkan states who come over expecting to meet their prospective husbands are discharged to Mrs. Marmaroff, and she will not, under any circumstances, let them go out of her sight until they are taken to the city hall and safely married to the men of their choice. She often takes girls who are waiting for the arrival of friends to the Young Women's Christian Association or the Salvation Army Home."

"Does Mrs. Marmaroff endeavor to impress upon the immigrants the dangers of alcoholic drink?" was asked.

"Yes, indeed, she never loses an opportunity to speak a wise and tactful word along that line. She always wears her white ribbon pin, and has at hand a supply of temperance literature which she distributes very judiciously. When Mrs. Marmaroff hands to a man a beer leaflet, and he insists, 'That is not true; beer is a good drink,' she tries to explain to him the economic evil of beer drinking, that it wastes the money that should go to feed his family. Sometimes the women will say to her, 'That is a good thing you are saying about drink. I wish there was not a drop of liquor in the whole world.' These people welcome any literature in their own languages, and all who can read are almost certain to give it careful consideration. Testaments in the different languages are also distributed by our missionary."

"How can visitors in New York secure admission to Ellis Island?"

"The ordinary way is to secure a pass or permit from the Commissioner of Immigration at Ellis Island. Application may be made by letter and white ribbonners should ask for Mrs. Marmaroff, who will show them around the Island. The best boat to take is the one leaving the Battery at 10:30 a. m., as by going at that time they will be present at the dinner hour."

"Aside from money what are the special needs of this work?"

"Warm wraps and coats, underwear and baby clothes, especially little slips made of flannel, are always acceptable. Many of these people come from the warm climate of Southern Europe and are not prepared with clothing suited to the New York climate. Toys for the children are always welcomed. Packages should be addressed to Mrs. Athena Marmaroff, Missionary's Room, Ellis Island, N. Y. If sent by freight, sixty cents should be added; if by express, ten cents, but any package sent by parcels post will be delivered at the Island without additional charge.

"This work is made possible through contributions to the Frances Willard Memorial Fund, and while the oversight of it is given to the New York W. C. T. U., the New York women feel that it is no more their work than that of the entire nation."

MISSOURI'S VARIED ACTIVITIES

"FIVE THOUSAND LILLIAN STEVENS MEMORIAL MEMBERS FOR MISSOURI IN 1915"

The Missouri delegation brought home such splendid reports from that "greatest ever" National Convention in the beautiful Southland that those "who stayed by the stuff" feel inspired to better work and greater achievements for the future. All Missouri is pleased to greet Miss Anna A. Gordon as our National President. We pledge to her as leader the same love and loyalty that we felt for Miss Willard and Mrs. Stevens, believing she will lead wisely and well with the same dauntless spirit that characterized them.

Having met temporary defeat in the campaign for suffrage and county unit in the November election but encouraged by victories in other states and the wonderful vote on the National Prohibition Amendment, Missouri women are aroused as never before. Led by a master general, Nelle G. Burger, our great white ribbon army is marching forward to the tune of "Educate, educate, educate, agitate, agitate, agitate," ready for the next conflict at the ballot box. According to the press of the state both house and senate of the Missouri legislature are dry. That the attention of the legislature may be called to the necessity of protective laws for our boys and girls a memorial petition signed by all Sunday school scholars in the state between the ages of twelve and twenty will be presented by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The Missouri W. C. T. U. will also introduce a bill empowering the cities of the state to appoint policewomen.

State Paper in New Dress.

Missouri's enterprising, up-to-date president, Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, who is also editor-in-chief of the Missouri Counselor, gave its readers a delightful surprise when the January issue arrived in a "brand new dress," greatly increased in size, with many new features, making it equal to any church or temperance paper in the country. We are proud and pleased with both paper and editor. The amazing fact is that the subscription price is not increased, and every member receives the paper. The editor says, "This is your very own paper. Claim its columns to exploit your lines of work." It is in truth a "Counselor."

All Missouri unions are busily arranging for Clara C. Hoffman birthday meetings January 18, our state red-letter day. Contributions received at these meetings are used to organize and perpetuate the work so dear to our promoted "Greatheart."

The Press department is striving to enter each of the 750 papers of the state through the W. C. T. U. column, National press paragraphs, "ready print" sheets or plate matter.

The Soldiers and Sailors department of the Missouri W. C. T. U. is to make 1,000 comfort bags for the sailor boys on the battleship "Missouri." The bags made three years ago were very gratefully received, but a change in men necessitates the new supply.

S. T. I. Charts in Every School District

The S. T. I. department is placing the Scientific Temperance Instruction charts in every school district in the state. Under Mrs. L. O. Middleton's leadership, the boys and girls, through the essay system, in ward, high schools, and colleges, are receiving the kind of education that makes total abstainers and prohibition voters. Mrs. Margaret S. Pugh of Kansas City, Missouri, has offered $25 for the best essay from any college in the state if as many as five colleges compete.

The St. Louis W. C. T. U. has established a free clinic for the treatment of the tobacco habit. At its first clinic twenty-eight men and boys were treated; at the second, eighty men and boys, and there was a perfect mob of sight-seers. Dr. C. A. May, husband of the state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lettie Hill May, is the physician in charge. The clinic is under the management of Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, National superintendent of Anti-Narcotics and president of St. Louis district W. C. T. U.

Kansas City (Mo.) district W. C. T. U. was permitted to place fifty placards in the street cars for the opening of the new union station. The cards give location of their headquarters and brief mention of their work of education, prevention, etc.

"John Barleycorn," Jack London's wonderful temperance story film, has been shown by several unions. Previous to election, Liberty union and Y. P. B. ran the picture four times free.

Monett union recently held its annual chrysanthemum show, which was advertised by a neat catalogue—another method of agitating and raising money. The W. C. T. U. float took first prize of $15 in the Labor Day parade in Poplar Bluff. Jamesport union receives certain "sales days" a percent from merchants to replenish the treasury. Its rest room has proven a winning venture and is referred to as a "haven of rest."

As a result of the dry Jackson county campaign and victory a union was organized at Blue Springs with twenty-one members and many more in prospect. Members are enthusiastic and expect to place the white bow on the majority of the women in Blue Springs. Our state superintendent of Work among Foreign-Speaking People, Mrs. Mary E. Grigg, and husband, Dr. E. D. Grigg, celebrated their golden wedding at their home in Verona, Missouri. Helena union has an enviable record—"in fine working order, every member showing interest by regular attendance and active work."

The Roena Shaner union, which is working for a gain in membership, recently held a most interesting poster meeting. Gorin union maintains a rest room and is active along many lines.

"5,000 Memorial Members" Slogan Heard on Every Side

The slogan, "Five Thousand Lillian Stevens Memorial members for Missouri in 1915," is heard on all sides. Some unions have already gained their portion and all are in a campaign to reach the goal. State officers are aiding and encouraging in every way possible. Many unions are making a house-to-house canvass in "pairs." Some are trying the "each one win one" plan.

Mrs. Nelle G. Burger was the guest some time ago of the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville and delivered an eloquent and convincing address on "A World Vision." This is the first time the doors of the institution have been open to any temperance lecturer. Seven hundred men and women from every walk in life, lawyers, college professors, school teachers, nurses, ministers and medical doctors from all countries attend this college.

A large volume could be written of the work of the Missouri white ribboners in the fall campaign for suffrage and county option; in Kansas City women were permitted to act as challengers at the polls. A politician in one precinct said: "This is like a prayer meeting. Do send some women over to the next ward." The experience was an education and now the women can understand some things that before were a mystery to them. The Franchise superintendent has her plans laid for a two-year campaign. "Suffrage and National Prohibition must rank side by side this year," is the decree of the president.

UTAH LEGISLATURE MAY ENACT PROHIBITION MEASURE

A letter from Mrs. Lulu L. Shepard, president of the Utah W. C. T. U., dated January 11, gives this encouraging report of the situation in Utah:

"Everything points to our success in putting through our prohibition measure. Yesterday speakers were put into every ward and church in the interest of our temperance cause. I spoke at three churches during the day. This morning the legislature met, but there was a deadlock in the house. More than one hundred women were present at the opening to give support to our two women members, and we remained there throughout most of the day. There are twenty-three Republicans in the house and, while they did not pledge themselves to prohibition, many of them will support the measure. There are also twenty-three Democrats, Progressives and Socialists, and they are called allies and will stand together. We are hoping to get several good measures through and I am looking forward with much interest and a great deal of pleasure to the sessions that are before us."

RHODE ISLAND WORKING FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION

Work for National Constitutional Prohibition was begun in Rhode Island immediately after the state convention in October by presenting in several towns the cantata, "The Liquor Traffic Must Go." Later the Rev. Sam Small of Georgia gave his lecture, "King Alcohol at Armageddon," in a theater in the city of Providence. A special invitation was given to five hundred liquor dealers to attend this lecture. Early in December members of the Flying Squadron held a three days' meeting at which large audiences were in attendance. Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president-at-large, and president of the New York state W. C. T. U., was one of the speakers. She was given a reception by the Rhode Island W. C. T. U. An effort is being made to secure the appointment of policewomen in the cities throughout the state. The Women's Equality League and other organizations are strongly in favor of this, but some one has found in the old archives of the state that only a legal voter can be a member of the police force—another strong plea for woman suffrage in Rhode Island.

Become a Nurse

We have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Our graduates number 7000—a record unequaled by any institution. Send for "How I Became a Nurse" 248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free to inquirers.

There is a Chautauqua nurse in your vicinity. Ask her about our training. Her address and the above literature will be sent if you will enclose this advertisement.

REAL DEFINITION OF WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

I think the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a very much misunderstood organization, even by the ministers, for I have been introduced in churches where the pastor has said, "We are glad to have this speaker with us, for she represents one of the very best organizations outside the church." I never like that kind of an introduction, for if you will show me a woman who belongs to the W. C. T. U., I will show you a woman who attends prayer meetings, teaches in the Sunday school, belongs to the aid and missionary societies and in every way possible holds up the hands of her pastor. So I say the W. C. T. U. is simply an arm of the church working for temperance and purity.

I think Frances Willard gave us the real definition of our organization when she said it meant "organized mother love." If you will pardon a personal word in passing, I will say that for twenty-five years of my married life I did no field work, for I had in my home a boy and a girl, and until their education was completed, and they were married and in homes of their own, I felt that I should be where they were, for to my mind, as to the mind of every other woman who belongs to the W. C. T. U., there is no other place quite so sacred as home, and no honor that can come to a woman so great as the honor of motherhood.

HOW TO SECURE THE FOREIGN VOTE FOR STATEWIDE PROHIBITION

MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT, President West Washington W. C. T. U.

Washington has not as large a proportion of foreign-born voters as have many other states, and so far as I have been able to ascertain they did not to any great extent influence our victory for statewide prohibition. The leading German paper in the state was against us, and a German woman's organization, headed by the wife of the editor of the paper referred to, opposed prohibition, but evidently their influence in the state was not very widespread.

The foreign-born population of Washington is largely Scandinavian and they are mostly sober, thrifty and prosperous. A business man remarked recently that a few years ago the Sunday picnic with plenty of beer was a favorite form of dissipation among certain classes of our foreigners, but that seems to have almost entirely disappeared within a comparatively short period.

The president of one of our largest and most prosperous counties says, "There was no specific work done among our foreign-speaking people (and the county contains a very large proportion of such), except that as our workers went out they appealed to their patriotism, and urged those with whom they came in contact each to work for prohibition among his own friends. The foreigners were largely with us."

Some efforts were made to circulate literature in their own languages among various nationalities, but no large quantity was thus used. It is mostly the case that where the adult members of the family can not read English, the younger ones who attend the public school read for all. Large quantities of literature in English were distributed by county workers who went into county precincts and did house-to-house work and held meetings in the school houses and small country churches.

I suggest that systematic effort be made to put THE UNION SIGNAL into the homes of country people and in small towns, as well as in the cities. THE UNION SIGNAL was invaluable during the campaign. Give that paper a proper circulation among the people and it will gain us millions of votes.

The value of total abstinence to the young and the necessity for removing the ever-present opportunity for indulgence and temptation to drunkenness should be urged. Thousands of people voted dry for the sake of the children, and not especially for their own protection.

The campaign offer of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union to duplicate literature orders under certain rules was of great assistance to us and made possible the purchase of large quantities of supplies which were used all over West Washington. The offer was highly appreciated, as shown by the response from the counties.

Scientific temperance teaching in the public schools is invaluable. This should be emphasized in every state, dry or wet. A total abstinence constituency is necessary in order not only to secure but to maintain a prohibitory law. A people who believe in total abstinence for the individual will not tolerate non-enforcement of a prohibitory law, once obtained. Splendid work is being done by a local union that secures the sympathetic, active co-operation of the teachers and gives them all possible backing and aid in carrying out the law providing for scientific temperance instruction.

The assistance given us through the Willard Memorial Fund was of great service. It enabled us to do larger work than we could otherwise have accomplished and heartened and inspired our workers.

AMERICA FOR ME

From distant principalities, from far off foreign states
The weary workers of the world are faring to our gates,
In all the dialects of earth they hail the goodly ships.
To bear them where our Nation stands with welcome on her lips.

Oh, good bye, homeland, forevermore farewell,
For thee my heart will often sigh, my bosom often swell,
O keep the dear ancestral dust committed unto thee,
But for the hope of days to come, "America for me."

From cities steeped in sodden sin, where hopeless toilers are
Who hear the hiss of human scorn, who bear the brunt of war,
Who give their sons to cruel death, to prop the rotten thrones,
And deep in ocean's ooze they strew their sacrificial bones,

Oh, good bye, homeland, how they sweetly sing
Like the lad upon the lover's quest, the lark upon the wing,
They turn toward the bounteous land, so beautiful and free,
All their souls within them saying, "America for me."

From where the gray Norwegian crags gleam in the midnight sun
To where the foamy billows round Gibraltar's sandals run,
From where stern old Vesuvius shakes his banner o'er the deep
To where in haunted Irish glens the laughing waters leap,

Oh, good bye, homeland, we are going far away,
The Lord of love, who reigns above, will often hear us pray
"God bless this dear Columbia," for we have lived to see
The happy day, when all can say, "America for me."

—Bishop Robert McIntyre, LL. D., in Central Christian Advocate

DOES IT PAY TO HELP A HOMESICK BOY?

Joseph Mattino, an Italian lad of nine or ten years of age, who had come to America with an older brother, once visited a member of the Beaverdale (Pa.) W. C. T. U. and asked her to help him find work. Tears filled the eyes of the white ribboner as the homesick lad told how he would like to see his mother, who was far away in the homeland. She had tried, on two occasions, to come to her boys, but had been prevented from doing so by an affliction of the eyes.

"Little Joe" was taken to an L. T. L. meeting where he signed the pledge. Later he manifested much interest in the lessons and songs. He attended Sunday school and soon became a member of the Beaverdale U. B. church. Several of the women showed a motherly interest in the boy, and he never failed to appreciate their kindness to him. Today he is working in a barber shop in Buffalo, N. Y. Not long ago he sent his photograph to the National superintendent of Work among Foreign-Speaking People, saying that he is still keeping his pledge and attends Sunday school and church. He did not forget to mention others who had befriended him. Does it pay to help a homesick, lonely boy?

The Blessed Tie

What a blessed tie is that of the white ribbon. If only we are true to its holy meaning we never shall be chilled by selfishness, nor daunted by danger, nor weakened by worthlessness, nor stifled by ingratitude, but shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, shall go on endeavoring every day to follow Him who is "the way, the truth and the life."

UNION SIGNAL DAY NUMBER

ALABAMA LEGISLATURE REPASSES PROHIBITION BILL OVER GOVERNOR HENDERSON'S VETO

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO INVESTIGATE VIOLATION OF JONES-WORKS LAW —NO FURTHER ACTION ON SHEPPARD AMENDMENT OR WORKS BILL EXPECTED— PROLONGED DISCUSSION ON IMMIGRATION BILL—GOVERNING BOARD IN ALASKA PROPOSED—PLANS FOR MRS. WILSON'S MEMORIAL OPEN FOR INSPECTION

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D.C.

Monday, January 18, the question of prohibition for the District of Columbia was brought to a standstill for the present when the Senate, by a vote of 40 to 38, refused to suspend its rules to permit a vote on the Sheppard amendment. By its previous action, the Senate decided that its rules could be suspended only by a two-thirds vote. The majority of two against suspension does not indicate the real strength for or against prohibition, if submitted on its merits as an independent proposition. Indeed, there is good reason to believe there is a small majority in the Senate on the dry side of the question.

On Saturday, Senator Jones, of Washington (state), co-author of the Jones-Works excise law, arraigned the excise board of the District for flagrant violation of the law in granting licenses contrary to the terms of the law, and this in the face of protests, and knowledge of lax conditions. These charges were substantiated by names, times, place, etc., and created a sensation. Some of the liquor men who were being so severely criticised were in the gallery, and as Senator Jones gave their names and addresses, and stated where they violated the law, these men were, to say the least, seemingly very uncomfortable.

Hotel Driscoll, Washington Headquarters of the National W. C. T. U.

Committee to Investigate Violation of Jones-Works Law

A resolution was introduced by Senator Martine of New Jersey, for the appointing of a committee of five Senators to "diligently inquire into the charges made." Vice-President Marshall, later in the day, intimated that, in the selection of the committee to investigate the excise board, he would appoint two Senators favoring prohibition, two against it, and one who had an open mind. This committee has since been appointed as follows: Senator Sheppard, Texas, chairman; Senator Dillingham, Vermont; Senator James, Kentucky; Senator Hitchcock, Nebraska; Senator Jones, Washington.

Senator Works, however, has prepared a new bill which contains a provision making any liquor dealer an accessory before the fact to any crime committed by any person while under the influence of liquor purchased from him. This would apply to the entire country, as well as the District. Another provision of the bill prohibits the collection of internal revenue from liquor dealers, or manufacturers and abolishes all revenue on liquors after January 1, 1916, in any prohibition territory.

No Further Action on Sheppard Amendment and Works Bill Expected

There will be very little opportunity for either the Sheppard amendment or the Works bill to be brought again before the Senate during this session, with but thirty-four working days left, and a filibuster on the part of the Senate Republicans in opposition to the ship purchase bill pending.

Senator Burton of Ohio spoke continuously for three days this week on the ship purchase bill, followed by Senator Weeks of Massachusetts, and so on. Senator Root is speaking today, and there seems a well-laid plan to continue the general discussion of this bill for at least eight or nine days, and then offer a substitute upon which further debate would be based.

All along there has been more or less opposition to the ship purchase bill among Democrats, but only a small number have openly opposed it. Now, however, the mutiny is spreading, and the indications are that the Republicans who are fighting the measure will receive sturdy support from enough Democrats in both Senate and House to insure the defeat of this legislation at this session. In the meantime, our bills, with many others, are being held back.

Friday, January 22, five hundred men and women, social workers, labor leaders and publicists, crowded the historic East Room of the White House at a public hearing before President Wilson on the immigration bill. Three hours for argument were apportioned equally between the opponents and supporters of the measure. Seated at a long table and flanked by his military aide in full uniform and by stenographers, President Wilson took his place promptly at 10 a. m. to listen to the argument for and against the literacy test around which the fight on the bills is waged.

Prolonged Discussion on Immigration Bill

Speakers in favor of the measure contended the literacy test would improve the quality of immigration; those opposed to it declared it was no test of quality whatever, and that many aliens who would become desirable citizens would be kept out simply by an inability to read and write.

After about three hours' discussion, President Wilson brought the hearing to a close with a brief statement, thanking the speakers for giving their arguments and stating that he would reach a decision on the bill in the near future.

The coast guard bill, combining the revenue cutter service with the life-saving service, went to the Senate this week, after having passed the House. The bill provides a method of pensioning the employes of the combined coast guard, and a seventy-five per cent pension for Superintendent Kimball, the veteran chief of the life-saving service, who has been instrumental in building that service from nothing to what it is today. The bill has the endorsement of the administration and, according to officers in both services, is sorely needed. The claim is made that it is now hard to obtain good men, owing to the dangerous occupation, the comparatively small pay, and the lack of a pension system. Under the coast guard bill better rewards are promised the men.

Superintendent Kimball for twenty-five years has labored to bring about this consummation of his highest dreams. When but seventeen years of age, he became a teacher in the Cape Cod school, during which time he obtained his first insight into the dangers the rockbound New England coast held for sailormen and ships. Years later, Mr. Kimball was elected to the Maine legislature, and did excellent work in presenting the needs of the men who volunteered their services along the coast, and through his zeal and effective labors, has brought the life-saving division up to its present efficiency. Today there are hundreds of well-equipped life-saving stations, manned by more than 2,500 competent surfmen and keepers along the 10,000 miles of United States coast. Mr. Kimball, who is now eighty-five years of age, retires with the consciousness that his "boys," for whom he has labored for sixty years, will be provided for.

Governing Board in Alaska Proposed

Secretary Lane of the Department of the Interior proposes to establish a governing board in Alaska, to look after the minor affairs of the territory, and to handle its business generally. Hawaii is self-governing; Porto Rico is practically so; the Canal Zone is virtually a military station, and the Philippines are governed in the Philippines. Ninety-nine per cent of the residents of Alaska favor Secretary Lane's plan, rather than the present form of government, viz., through bureau chiefs, 4,000 miles distant. A governing board on the ground, clothed with power to dispose of minor business, and directly under the eye of the Secretary of the Interior, would be infinitely more effective in governing Alaska than the bureaucratic system which now prevails.

GIVEN TO HOSPITALITY — LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS

Lillian M. N. Stevens was strong in faith and fidelity, strong in spiritual power, embodying in her daily living the Beatitudes Christ taught us in the Sermon on the Mount. I often think of her as "given to hospitality." Happy are my memories of her hospitable home, of the rare and gracious hospitality of her big brain, her big heart and her generous soul.

New ideas and progressive plans found speedy and welcome lodgment in her ever busy brain. Her large warm heart pulsated for all humanity, and her yearning soul continually sought to know more of God and to show forth the Christ-spirit in thought, word and deed. Yes, Mrs. Stevens was "given to hospitality" and I am sure Heaven seems homelike to one who always listened to Heavenly voices and mirrored Heaven in the kindliness of her heart.

Mrs. Stevens' leadership of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union for sixteen years has been an unspeakable blessing to our organization. The years brought constant toil and were characterized by tireless, unselfish devotion, but they have been years of great and glorious victories. Forever the name of Lillian M. N. Stevens will be honored and beloved—"One of the few—the immortal names that were not born to die."

Anna A. Gordon

A GREAT GENERAL IN A GREAT WAR

SIDELIGHTS ON THE CHARACTER OF LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS

Loyalty to Christ

Loyalty to Christ became the keynote of Mrs. Stevens' life service, as shown in the countless acts of kindness with which her days were filled. When asked soon after she became National W. C. T. U. President, "What is your special ambition at the present day?" she answered with sweet and solemn resolution, "To devoutly love God and unselfishly serve humanity."

—Jane Stewart

A child's gentleness and simplicity, a woman's strength and dignity, all and at once are crowded into the words of Mrs. Stevens spoken in the first hour of her national leadership, when so reverently and so tenderly she lifted the emblem of office just laid down by Frances Willard's master hand: "Did I not believe she still lives, I could not stand here."

—Eva K. Foster

"Bring On Your Fagots"

She was a woman of courage. She dared anything and everything that ought to be done, and it was a courage born of unflinching devotion to great principles; it was a courage born of devotion to the thing we call the kingdom of God, which must be established in the human heart before it can be established in society. She believed in the kingdom of righteousness and she believed in the principles that are necessary to be established in that kingdom. How well I remember being in her home during the days of the great Maine campaign. When something was said about what could be done to prevent Maine from losing her prohibitory law she said with perfect simplicity: "If I knew that by being burned at the stake in Portland square tomorrow I could help keep Maine from losing her law, I would say, 'Bring on your fagots.'" And she would have uttered those words with a smile, for after all it would have meant doing only a little earlier what she literally did last April when she poured out her life for the cause of prohibition and righteousness.—Katharine L. Stevenson.

She Made It Her Business

An election was pending and a certain man whose duty it had been to enforce the prohibitory law was seeking re-election. He had been very lax in his duties, and Mrs. Stevens called upon him in his office where he sat with his hat on the back of his head and his feet upon his desk, and he did not remove them while Mrs. Stevens was there. An orange lay upon the desk and as he replied to Mrs. Stevens' query as to whether he would, if elected, do his duty, and enforce the law in accordance with his oath of office, he picked up the orange, cut it in halves and proceeded to eat one as he replied that "Whether he would or would not enforce the law was none of her business." Turning to leave she said to him, "I shall make it my business to do all I can to defeat you and the time will surely come when you will be sorry you did not remove your hat, take your feet from your desk and offer me the other half of that orange." In telling the story she said, "Although I was born and bred in the country, I never tramped through so much ploughed ground as I did to defeat that man," and she added, "but when the election was over he did have the grace to come to me and say that he was sorry he was so impolite and also that he did not offer me half of his orange!"—Caroline Buell.

Proclamation for National Constitutional Prohibition

Issued September 10, 1911

LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS, President National Woman's Christian Temperance Union

In the name of the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, we hereby make this Proclamation for a Great Crusade to carry the vital truth to the people themselves in all lands, and through them to place prohibition in the organic law of all nations and ultimately in the organic law of the world; and to this high end, we invoke the blessing and guidance of Almighty God and the co-operation of the men and women of all lands who love their fellow-men, and

To America, the birthplace of the local, State, National, and World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, we hereby proclaim that within a decade, prohibition shall be placed in the Constitution of the United States; and to this end we call to active co-operation all temperance, prohibition, religious and philanthropic bodies; all patriotic, fraternal, civic associations and all Americans who love their country.

Listening for the Sound of the Heaviest Firing

One of the marshals of France once asked the great Napoleon on the eve of a battle, "Sire, what shall I do on the morrow if I fail to get a specific order from you?" Quick as a flash came the reply from the great master of war. "The instinct of a soldier should guide you. March toward the sound of the heaviest firing. There you will be the most needed. There you can do the most good." Mrs. Stevens has been referred to as a soldier. Thank God, she was such on the great battlefield of humanity, progress and reform. She had the instincts that led her to listen for the sound of the heaviest firing from the great moral battlefield upon which she wished to lend her aid. She was carefully and conscientiously studying the whole situation that she might make no mistake, as if she realized that when she once put her hand to the plow, there could be no turning back. Still she was listening for the sound of the heaviest firing; still she was asking herself, "Where can I render the most aid; where can I be of the most service?"

—Colonel Fred Dow

A Triumphant Captain of Truth

Mrs. Stevens was a soldier, not a warrior of dress parades and annual reviews; not a captain of epaulets,—a soldier of long and unbroken marches, of wilderness campaigns and Valley Forge winters and bloody charges; a soldier of lost battles and many defeats, but a soldier unconquered. The female of the species has the passion of two worlds when she fights for her young. Womanhood, moving over the battlefield of the earth, with the cries of drunkards and drunkards' children ringing in her ears, is irresistible. The fighting heart of the translated leader of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union never pumped a drop of fear; her mind, though often disturbed and grieved, was never the chamber of doubt. She bore arms for Christ's sake and that the Prince of Peace might reign, and she knew his was not a lost cause. When the Almighty bent over the battlements of heaven and dropped the drawbridge of Paradise on April 6, 1914, it was not to receive a spent, defeated warrior; the hills of glory rang with the acclaim of a triumphant captain of truth that shall prevail. — Daniel A. Poling

A VOTE-MAKING AGENCY

MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, Corresponding Secretary, West Washington W. C. T. U.

Among the tons of printed matter sent out by West Washington W. C. T. U. during the statewide campaign, none was so efficient in making sentiment for prohibition as the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL. Sixteen pages of facts attested by men and women of well-known veracity, disinterested as far as any financial considerations are concerned, are bound to have an effect upon any fair-minded voter.

The prize money received by the state president for subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL was all used for Campaign Editions, a few being sent into most of the counties, names being furnished by county presidents.

One county president personally sent fifty campaign subscriptions, another sent forty to business men in the principal towns of their counties. In one case the president of the union found two or three of these valuable papers thrown in the waste basket at the post-office, so she made it her business to gather them up and distribute them; but for the most part they were received, and, we have reason to believe, were read. Only one was "refused" as far as we know.

One business man said if he had $100 to spare he could think of nothing better to do with it than to invest it in the Campaign SIGNAL for his county. In another county the "dry" campaign committee, composed of men and women, in considering the best literature to put into the hands of voters, decided on the Campaign SIGNAL as the most effective. They ordered a large number sent to one address, as they preferred using a larger number for the few months of the campaign rather than sending fewer for a year.

Several of the most convincing numbers were ordered by the hundred by the state organization and distributed largely among doubtful voters.

In such a campaign it is very difficult to determine absolutely the causes that led to victory. There are many determining factors, but the Campaign Edition of the SIGNAL cannot be excelled as a thought-arresting, convincing medium for the education of the people, and its effect was felt in our state.

If we could have distributed 10,000 of each issue, as one of the other temperance organizations did of its paper, we would doubtless have increased our majority largely, for no other temperance paper can quite compare with THE UNION SIGNAL.

HOW TO REACH THE INDIFFERENT VOTER

MRS. LINNIE CARL, Y. P. B. Secretary, Oregon W. C. T. U.

The problem all through the Oregon campaign was how to reach the indifferent voters, the majority of whom, could their interest be aroused, we knew would vote right. The young people played no small part in this work and they, as well as the grown-ups, found THE UNION SIGNAL, and especially the Campaign Edition, of great value. We found wherever the prohibition question was discussed and agitated by local and outside speakers, by literature and by the press, it naturally caused the people to think, and this brought enlightenment, and enlightenment always leads to prohibition.

Some people said, "Yes, I believe in prohibition, but what does the Woman's Christian Temperance Union have to do with it? How does it help to bring prohibition?" A few copies of THE UNION SIGNAL placed in their hands showed them what the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is doing in this great battle for righteousness. They learned how ever since those heroic Crusade mothers knelt in the snow on the streets and prayed for guidance and strength from the Great Jehovah, He, through our sainted leaders, has been the guiding star of this organization.

In visiting the various unions, I have noticed the weak ones are those whose members do not read THE UNION SIGNAL, and the very strongest are those whose members each week anxiously await its coming, and who then discuss the contents at their regular meetings, and keep the temperance ball rolling by passing the paper on from friend to friend.

The house-to-house work was one of the specialties of the "Oregon Dry" campaign. In many precincts every voter, whether wet, dry or indifferent, was booked; then on a certain day, once a week, the Boy Scouts distributed literature to the indifferent voters, each boy having a definite territory to cover. In this way the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL was used to good advantage. As this was carried on week after week, regularly and systematically, the indifferent people gradually became interested, and wondered what sort of literature the prohibitionists would send next. This plan, when used in a campaign, is an excellent vote-maker.

It undoubtedly would stimulate the temperance sentiment, as well as create added interest in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union if every local union would subscribe for the Campaign Edition for each of its honorary members; if the state W. C. T. U. would send each (paid) state member the Campaign Edition; and if every one who pledges and pays a certain amount to the state Woman's Christian Temperance Union were given by the state W. C. T. U. one year's subscription to the Campaign Edition. It is true in temperance, as in all lines of Christian reform, that in order to be interested we must know of the achievements and ambitions of an organization. "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed, and how shall they believe in him whom they have not heard, and how shall they hear without a preacher?" THE UNION SIGNAL is our temperance "preacher." Let us strive to place it in the homes of all the people.

SMITTEN ARIZONA

Prohibition has smitten Arizona and lies heavy upon the land.

The Valley Bank of Phoenix, which suspended early in November, has reorganized and opened up for business stronger than ever on the day the liquor traffic died in Arizona.

The Citizens' Bank, another financial institution, was organized by local capitalists and opened for business after the saloons were voted out of Arizona.

The Central Bank of Phoenix, a strong institution with a capital stock of $100,000, organized by eastern capitalists after the election, filed articles of incorporation three days after the saloons closed and will be opened for business in an "empty building" in the next few days.

A branch of the Anchor Trust Company, of Wichita, Kansas, has been established at Phoenix since Arizona voted dry.

It is needless to say that all of these financial institutions like to see "grass growing in the streets." It is likewise useless to say that they like to do business in a "dead town."

All of the liquor establishments put out signs before election to this effect: "This building and seventeen others like it will be for rent if the dry amendment carries."

The day after the saloons closed all of the bakers and grocers sold out of bread for the first time and the meat markets were depleted likewise. The people bought bread instead of "booze."

For the first time in the history of Phoenix there were no drunks in police court. The arrests for drunkenness the past year averaged twelve per day.

Although it has been but a short time since the saloons closed, their proprietors refuse to give up their leases to those who have been waiting to secure good locations for legitimate business enterprises. Some of the saloon men have started drug stores, billiard halls, some soft drink stands, some restaurants. Smitten Arizona, indeed!

ment block to be erected here in Washington in memory of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson by women of the country was offered last week. These plans, which have just been completed by two women architects, were shown by Mrs. Archibald Hopkins, who conceived the idea of the memorial. Mrs. Hopkins is chairman of the District of Columbia woman's section of the National Civic Federation.

Among the speakers was E. B. De Grott, a recreational expert, who has been making a survey of Washington's needs, and his ideas fit in exactly with the scope of the projected memorial for Mrs. Wilson. He is enthusiastic over this scheme, and says the people of Washington are going to have a plant that will be a model for the entire country. The real scheme of the memorial is not that it shall be built by a few large contributions, but that it is to stand as an appreciation of Mrs. Wilson's work for the poor, built by many contributions in small amounts from women in all circumstances throughout the United States.

LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS

A CLUSTER OF CHARACTERISTICS

FRANCES B. DAMON, Dexter, Me.

During Maine's resubmission campaign of 1911 prominent business men publicly remarked upon the superiority of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union over other temperance-promoting organizations in the rapidity with which it replenished its treasury, mobilized its forces, and sent hurtling through the state the dynamite of unanswerable arguments. "Mrs. Stevens has only to press a button," said a Civic League brother, "and everywhere her women respond with instantaneous and loyal activities."

To what is this superiority due? Like every other successful movement, our organization was born "when the fulness of the time had come"; it has grown and changed in conjunction with growing and changing needs; without retreating from principle, it has shifted the emphasis from one endeavor to another. "We are always moving on," wrote Miss Willard. "'Time cannot dull nor custom stale our infinite variety.' We are exceedingly apt to break out in a new phase. Here we lop off an old department and there we add two new ones. Our 'new departures' are frequent and unexpected. Indeed, we exhibit the characteristics of an army on the march rather than an army in camp."

A born interpreter of the signs of the times, and possessed of remarkable initiative gifts, Frances Willard could hardly have escaped the career of moral pioneer; but more hospitable to honest suggestions, more patient and painstaking in investigating their claims, or more helpful in carrying out such plans as met her approval, she could not have been than was Lillian M. N. Stevens.

"The scientific spirit," says that acute critic, W. C. Brownell, "is enthusiastically patient, nobly literal, candid, tolerant, hospitable." It was because the leader of the Maine Woman's Christian Temperance Union had exactly this scientific spirit, and had it combined with an inexplicable personality, and not altogether because of well-fitted machinery, that our white ribboners responded whenever Mrs. Stevens "pressed the button."

You will readily understand why I say inexplicable personality. There was something about Mrs. Stevens more than the sum of all her parts. We have seen her on the platform surrounded by a dozen or more illustrious and some of them world-famous women, yet, not by height, or poise, or gesture, or any eccentricity of genius, but by a certain outflowing aura—or what you will—she stood forth and could not be hidden,—like ". . . . a star when only one

Is shining in the sky."

Lillian M. N. Stevens

Maine white ribboners have followed their leader with increasing love and reverence as, year by year, to those fine traits that were native to her—sincerity, courage, vigor, kindness, discernment, wit, executive skill—were added the increments of experience and research.

The first year of her service as president of the Maine Woman's Christian Temperance Union (then a fellowship of only nine "auxiliaries"), in her organizing trips she was usually accompanied by the state treasurer, who did the speech-making! Mrs. Stevens did not then dream of the day when she would be everywhere recognized as a speaker among speakers — a speaker among speakers, even as "Pelleas look'd noble among the noble." She knew that she was not temperamentally an orator. She never attempted oratory. She had a message in which she entirely believed, and she gave it with clearness, without word-waste, with great simplicity, and with steadily increasing impressiveness and mastery. Her most cunning enemy knew she was sincerity incarnate. Her most eager critic could never overtake her using an illustration for ornamentation only, or telling a story merely to bring a smile or start a tear. When she told a story, which was seldom, its purpose was to stir something more enduring than either smile or tear.

She was a born conserver. She saved both herself and her hearers, neither wringing their hearts with passing emotions nor herself giving way to unnecessary ebullitions of feeling.

In an executive meeting in Maine three or four years ago a superintendent related in detail an almost unbelievable incident that had recently occurred in her own city. All over the room were heard sotto voce expressions of astonishment and horror. Mrs. Stevens turned her unflinching, penetrating gaze upon the speaker, and asked, "Do you mean to say that this happened—and that your city authorities know—and have taken no action?"

When the answer was given, Mrs. Stevens, in one distinct, rock-hewn sentence, without an expression of dismay or disgust, pointed out the unequivocal duty of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in the case, and went on with the next business, like Abraham Davenport, when he said, "Bring in the candles." No exclamation of horror, no crying out in protest, could have left upon us such an impression of her unrelenting, alert, counter-checking opposition to every phase of evil, and of her own greatness and aloofness of soul.

If we would live out and pass on the traits that made Lillian Stevens Maine's noblest daughter we must give ourselves without waste, that we may give ourselves the more effectually; we must speak with unfailing and entire sincerity —which will always mean with simplicity and strength; we must hold our minds open to new methods and believe as truly in ourselves and our work and our day and our God as we believe in the saints of old.

One Unswerving Purpose

When she began this work, temperance was a moral issue. She leaves it not only a moral issue, but the greatest economic issue of the age. She worked with all the dignity and persistency of patience, justice and prudence, with a mind fixed upon one great purpose—the liberty of the race from the enthraldom of alcohol, and the destruction of the liquor traffic. She worked for many years against general approval and popularity, but her opponents seldom met her in the open forum. Her foe has long been a coward who worked in the dark and stabbed in the back. The pendulum of popular approval has swung back and forth and the enlightenment of a public conscience been dulled by greed and falsehood or has been quickened by truth and a love of humanity. Through all this struggle this noble woman never faltered. With an unswerving purpose she worked to the very end—always pleasant, always patient, always consistent, with that kindness of nature which always sustains one in the pursuit of right. Her life's work makes a great chapter in the history of our state. Her memory is sacred to us all.

—Governor William T. Haines

Kindliness of Soul

In connection with Mrs. Stevens' services as a temperance reform leader, one thing always stood out as a possessing quality of her mind and soul. This was her courage of conviction, and coupled with it her desire not to seem to be unduly harsh in her judgment of those connected with the liquor business. She would frequently remark in conversation with a friend that she hated the man's business, but not the man, and desired to be kindly in her judgment of even those who were wrong.

A Joan of Arc

Every first and last woman in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a "living epistle," or ought to be, of whom Lillian M. N. Stevens has been chief. Saint Frances and Saint Lillian have been in God's succession leaders of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The flame which consumed them was one which burned ever in their souls for the mitigation of human woe. One might be called the Savonarola, the other the Joan of Arc of the temperance reform. Each passed through life sublimely holding aloft the torch of God.

BRINGING NEWS FROM OUR NEIGHBORS

MRS. FAITH THOMAS PARROTT, Recording Secretary Virginia W. C. T. U.

While in North Carolina recently, I was talking to a group of women, two of whom had at different times said to me, "How glad we are Virginia voted for prohibition!" Then their chins fell as though their owners were engaged in deep thought.

We were standing at a flag station waiting for our train. The January sun was bright and almost warm, and the pines on the hillsides were sweet. How could anyone's joy now be divided! Though feeling inwardly subdued, my head went up as I divined the reason of my companions' preoccupation and I said: "Yes, it is true that in Virginia we have helped you break your laws, but now we are going to help you keep prohibition." One of the good women looked up into my face and in animated and cheerful tone told of North Carolina's prosperity and happiness during recent years. All this sounded familiar and later I recalled that it was THE UNION SIGNAL that had from time to time emphasized these facts in a concise way and with official re-enforcement.

Not only did THE SIGNAL during the Virginia Campaign tell what prohibition had done for our neighbors, North Carolina, Tennessee and West Virginia, but it set forth also the need for energy and watchfulness in enforcing and strengthening the prohibitory laws.

It is not only the intelligent who like to find their own views endorsed by others in print, but it is the unintelligent, the non-thinker, who is impressed by what type can tell. All these various classes of people had to be reached. Like other campaign states, Virginia found that the dollars were dreadfully needed; but those who wisely invested in THE SIGNAL had not only general tidings to use, but were properly prepared to refute the many untruthful statements of the near-at-hand enemy through arguments as to the success of prohibition in far-away states, and still more powerful evidence from our prohibition neighbors.

So, looking backward, we feel that we owe a double debt to THE UNION SIGNAL, for every one who read it regularly was better prepared for the present battle and that of the future. This, our double debt, calls to mind the fine motive that moved the great civil engineer, Vauban, who, in the age of Louis XIV, in times of war, sought continuously to strengthen the interior and the boundaries of France; during peace he sought to fortify the strongholds so that what belonged to the country should never be retaken. Thus can the printed page help doubly today in saving America for sobriety.

THE NECESSITY FOR ORGANIZATION

MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT, President West Washington W. C. T. U.

How many realize the necessity for organization and the value of it? It is very evident that many do not.

A very excellent woman, on being asked to become a member of the W. C. T. U. replied, "Oh, I don't need to join. I'm just as strong a temperance woman now as I ever could be. It would not make me a bit better to belong to the W. C. T. U."

Another said, "Oh, I'm all right! We never use liquor, and my husband is a great worker for temperance. I have my family to look after and my church work, and I really can not belong to any more societies. My membership would not mean anything anyhow, only just a name."

And another: "Oh, I belong to the Home and Foreign Missionary societies, the Ladies' Aid and Mothers' club, and with my home work that is all I can manage. I'm a strong temperance woman and help any way I can, but there is no need of my joining another society." How familiar it all sounds! And how the excuses run on and on!

These good women do not mean to be discouraging to the worker or the cause. They simply do not understand. They do not in the least comprehend the value of organization. They do not realize that the W. C. T. U. is an organization, a great body of women working through organization, along distinct lines for very definite purposes; that it is working under a constitution which lays down certain basic principles and fixed rules of organized action and that local, county, state and worldwide achievements are attained, not because good people here and there "wish the cause well," or are "in favor of" such results or in a desultory, spasmodic way, "help all they can," but because of persistent, widespread organized action, endeavoring through every possible avenue to influence individual, social, religious and political life.

It is through organization that declarations are made, policies outlined, vice, graft and misrule exposed, the education of the public accomplished, revolutions wrought, victories won. A million people, ten million, may believe in a moral reform, but until belief is organized it makes little headway.

If a woman believes in the principles of the W. C. T. U., by refusing her membership she debars herself from taking a part in shaping its plans or controlling its actions and does an injustice to the organization and to herself. She voluntarily disfranchises herself from having a voice in matters closely related to her own personal interest, which, of course, includes the well-being of her family.

One dollar a year dues, from which ten cents goes to the National, is a mere pittance; two dollars a year from a local union to the Memorial Fund is but a trifle, yet what magnificent results have been accomplished by the use of the money. Only by organized income and organized outgo can such results be made possible.

The local union is the unit of power and the center of activity in educational or campaign work. Through the local propaganda our principles reach the individual, the home, church, Sabbath school, public school, social circle. The department work touches masses of units and permeates a great variety of interests, educates, antagonizes or allies, as the case may be; it usually awakens curiosity (which is at least akin to interest), sometimes arouses enthusiasm, often convicts, converts and spurs to performance and is always in some degree educational. Every inch or ounce of work thus done is a distinct gain.

It is a real satisfaction to be able to wear the badge of a worldwide organization; to know that the little bow of white ribbon has bound together in sacred comradeship good women of every continent and every clime, and that "where'er the sun doth his successive journeys run" that badge is recognized as the symbol of total abstinence, prohibition of the liquor traffic, purity and peace. Not only that, but it speaks of organized worldwide endeavor to engraft these standards into the customs of society and the laws of every land. It says to every woman, "If you love home and child unite, unite; become a part of the 'organized mother-love' body of the world." Yes, "unite," you will widen your vision, broaden your thought, add to your mental resources, enrich your spiritual life, increase your powers for service and conserve physical well-being by doing so. You have nothing to lose and much to gain. Unite, and remain united. The glory day is not far distant. When the final victory comes, and there remains in all our land no brewery, distillery or saloon to blight or curse our loved ones, you will look with a holy pride upon your badge of white, as an evidence and reminder of the part you bore in the organized conflict of humanity against the demon alcohol.

"PLEASE OMIT FLOWERS," SAYS CLERGYMAN TO CONGRESSMAN

THE REV. C. B. MITCHELL PREFERS ANTI-LIQUOR VOTE TO THE SPRING SEED PACKAGE

A brief correspondence between the Hon. James R. Mann, Republican leader of the House of Representatives, and the Rev. Charles Bayard Mitchell, a prominent divine of the Methodist church, and a constituent of Mr. Mann, was made public the other day. Mr. Mann recently cast a vote against the resolution for National Prohibition. The letter from Mr. Mann follows:

U. S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Office of Republican Leader,
Capitol Building,
WASHINGTON D. C.
Jan. 18, 1915.

Dr. Chas. Bayard Mitchell,
Pastor St. James' M. E. church,
Chicago, Ill.

My dear sir:

Following my custom, I will send to you by mail, in time for spring planting a package of the flower seed distributed by the government. I get much personal pleasure and benefit out of growing flowers and I am sure that you will enjoy it if it is convenient for you to plant the seed. If you cannot do that yourself, please give the seeds to some friend who can make use of them.

Yours very sincerely,
JAMES R. MANN

To the foregoing Mr. Mitchell replied as follows:

To the Hon. James R. Mann.

My dear sir:

In reply to your note just received about the flower seeds, I want to say that your constituents in this prohibition territory in Hyde Park would be better pleased with you if you would keep your flower seeds and give us your influence for driving out the liquor traffic, which allows no flowers to grow where its curse blights. We do not want your flowers. Give us your influence and vote for our homes.

From one who has voted for you, but will do so no more.

Very frankly,
CHAS. BAYARD MITCHELL.

PROHIBITION ACTIVITY IN STATE LEGISLATURES

Arkansas

In accordance with the provisions of the Going law, every saloon in the state of Arkansas was closed on January 1, and none can open without the issuance of a license upon a petition of a majority of the white adults of the community. These licenses are granted by the county judges, and are good for only a year at a time. A statewide prohibition bill has been introduced in the legislature.

Idaho

Governor Moses Alexander, the newly inaugurated chief executive of Idaho, in his message delivered to the legislature, recommended that a statewide prohibition amendment be submitted to the people and that a law be enacted prohibiting the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquors in Idaho after January 1, 1916. In the past week both houses of the legislature passed the bill recommended by the governor.

Montana

Notice of the introduction of a bill for the submission of a constitutional prohibition amendment was given in the lower house of the Montana legislature January 11.

"At the present writing the prospects are that Montana will be the next state placed in the prohibition column," says the Red Lodge (Mont.) Picket. "The granting of woman suffrage makes it certain that a constitutional amendment for state prohibition will be submitted in Montana at the general election in 1916. A strong effort is to be made at the present session of the legislature in Helena to secure the passage of the necessary resolution. If the state solons vote the resolution down the proposed amendment will be submitted to the people by initiative petition, and if the question carries the saloons and the breweries of Montana will be out of business after 1917."

South Dakota

According to the Aberdeen (S. D.) American, an amendment for statewide prohibition to be enacted by the present legislature and with an emergency clause is the program being talked of by some of the members of the present session.

Colorado

The enforcement law which is to be introduced in the Colorado state legislature and which is being prepared by the attorney of the temperance organizations, will follow as closely as practicable those provisions which have been successful in North Dakota and Kansas.

Wisconsin

A bill is to be introduced at the coming session of the legislature which has for its intent the barring of students from voting at the municipal elections. It is said that the plan is sponsored by the local liquor interests. Realizing that another campaign will be fought this coming spring to make the city of Madison dry the brewers are planning a desperate fight to head off the plan. A majority of the students vote dry and because of the closeness of the vote at the last election the liquor interests do not care to take any chances with the students.

Oklahoma.

Bills proposing stringent legislation designed to suppress illegal traffic in liquor in Oklahoma have been introduced in the legislature.

Washington

The State Hotel Men's Association of Washington has filed a petition for initiative measure No. 18, which seeks to amend the statewide prohibition law adopted by the people at the recent election. The petition was said to contain more than 50,000 signatures, nearly one-half of them being from Seattle. Only 32,000 valid signatures are required. The proposed measure would on its face abolish saloons, but permit breweries to operate in the state, and allow hotels having fifty or more rooms to have bars. In case the petition contained the required number of signatures, the legislature would be compelled to submit the measure to a vote of the people. An effort was made to secure the calling of a special election in 1915, so a vote might be taken before the recently adopted prohibition law goes into effect on January 1, 1916. Pressure was brought to bear upon the members of the legislature, urging them, on the ground of economy, against the calling of a special election.

On January 20 both houses passed a resolution providing that no special election for the consideration of liquor or other measures should be called in 1915. This insures the going into effect of the statewide prohibitory law on January 1, 1916.

Oregon

Oregon's new governor, Dr. James Withycombe, inaugurated January 12, in his address to the legislature, suggested that laws should be enacted making enforcement of prohibition certain.

Delaware

A bill providing for the enactment of a law to banish all intoxicating liquors from Delaware after May 1, 1918, was introduced January 14, by Representative Hall.

Iowa

The legislature of Iowa is said to be controlled at this session by the prohibitionists, and it is confidently expected that either the statewide prohibition law of 1884 will be restored or the present law will be amended to make it prohibitory.

New York

A local option bill designed to let political units as small as an election district decide whether or not intoxicants shall be sold within their limits, was introduced in the legislature January 14. This measure provides for a referendum election on a proposition to create an anti-saloon district after twenty-five per cent of the voters have indicated their desire for such action.

South Carolina

A measure providing for the submission of the question of whether or not the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages shall be prohibited throughout the state at a general election to be held September 14, has been introduced in the upper house of the legislature.

"South Carolina is going into an election on the question of statewide prohibition," says the Spartanburg (S. C.) Herald, "and as an observer of conditions in this state, more or less familiar with them, we should say that it is a good 2 to 1 wager that the state will vote dry."

West Virginia

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals, in an opinion handed down January 13, held that the state of West Virginia, under its present prohibition laws, has the right to enjoin express companies and other common carriers from delivery of interstate shipments of liquor within its boundaries unless the consignee can show conclusively that the shipment was ordered without the solicitation on the part of the dealer, either in person, by mail, or through advertisements.

Alabama

On January 14 the legislature passed a statewide prohibition bill, which was vetoed by Governor Henderson. On January 22 both houses of the legislature repassed the measure over the governor's veto.

A resolution has been introduced in the legislature to exclude all liquor advertising from the newspapers.

Michigan

Liquor forces in the legislature, alarmed at the strength of the prohibition sentiment, are planning to compromise with the drys by enacting a law limiting the sale of liquor by saloons to beer, ale and light wines. Whisky, brandy and similar strong drinks will be prohibited, if the bill becomes a law.

The plan is being put forth as a "statewide temperance" proposition. The liquor interests hope, through it, to take the liquor question out of politics, for the present, at least. The drys, needless to say, are not disposed to compromise. Representative Straight has announced that he will soon introduce a statewide prohibition bill.

Ohio

A bill will be introduced into the next general assembly of Ohio to provide a tax on each liquor dealer in the state for the purpose of raising a fund from which those who may be injured from the use of alcoholic beverages and those dependent upon them may be compensated. The wet interests of the state are in violent eruption because of the proposal.

Pennsylvania

Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania in his inaugural address recommended the enactment of a county option measure. "This served as his repudiation of the liquor interests which hitched themselves on to his candidacy during the gubernatorial campaign," says the North American.

Kentucky

"The outlook indicates that a great effort will be made to have the general assembly enact laws in regard to statewide prohibition and woman suffrage," remarked Governor McCreary of Kentucky the other day to a newspaper reporter.

Arizona

Wiley Jones, the attorney general for Arizona, is reported to have rendered an opinion on January 12, to the effect that "Nothing that any one can use as a beverage which may intoxicate him, can be used or introduced into the state."

AMMUNITION FOR OUR RIGHTEOUS WAR

In preparing the program for March 1, the birthday anniversary of our sainted leader, Lillian M. N. Stevens, who less than a year ago entered into the perfect life of the other world, we have tried to keep in mind her oft-repeated wish that the observance of March 1 should be an occasion for stimulating and promoting interest in the official papers, although we are confident that every local union will consider it a sacred privilege to reserve a part of the March 1 program for a service in memory of our beloved promoted leader.

In the program given on this page we have suggested the consideration in brief talks of "Ammunition for our Righteous War," not confining the topic to the official organ, but presenting it in three forms of activity, all of which may be made memorials to our translated leader: First, securing subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, with which she was so closely identified, and which she so highly valued; second, gaining memorial members to every local union; and third, contributing generously (according to the plan outlined on this page) to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund for National Constitutional Prohibition.

May we not in grateful memory of her who for sixteen glorious years led us in our victorious war, plan enthusiastically for the observance along these lines of March first.

IDAHO TO VOTE ON PROHIBITION IN 1916

Both houses of the Idaho legislature have passed the Hart resolution providing for the submission to the voters in 1916 of an amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor in the state.

PLANS FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION FOR FEBRUARY AND MARCH

That each local union be asked to hold a public meeting not later than March; an offering to be taken for the Campaign Fund, this money to be sent through regular channels to the state W. C. T. U. treasurer, who shall transmit one-half to the National treasurer, this fund to be known in both state and National as the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund.

That the Young People's Branches be urged to have a share in the campaign by adapting to their work plans proposed for the W. C. T. U. and by enlisting other young people to become active and intelligent workers.

In accordance with the above plan, envelopes have been prepared by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union for subscriptions to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund. These envelopes are to be furnished to the state at cost, to be sent by them free to every local union agreeing to place them in the hands of all members and as many others as possible, with the suggestion and hope that in March every local union send a contribution to this Fund, averaging ten cents per member. This money should be sent through the regular W. C. T. U. channels. Contributors of $1.00 or more will receive for one year the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL. The form of the pledge is as follows:

PATRIOTIC OFFERING
WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
THE LILLIAN STEVENS CAMPAIGN FUND (STATE AND NATIONAL)

My Offering is $.....
Cash or Pledged

Pledges should be paid to W. C. T. U. treasurer within thirty days. Contributors of one dollar or more will receive for one year, the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL.

VICTORIES OF THE PAST WEEK

John Barleycorn is figuring prominently in the proceedings of the legislatures of the various states, and the few friends he has are posing under the names of "local optionists," "manufacturers and dealers' associations," "hotelkeepers' associations" or other similar respectable titles. These disguises, however, are now quite familiar to the temperance people, and even the general public and press recognize the liquor interests as back of them.

Alabama's law-makers distinguished themselves on January 22, by passing the statewide prohibition bill over the veto of Governor Henderson, the newly elected chief executive of the state. The failure of ex-Governor O'Neal to either sign or veto the measure and the shortsightedness (to put it charitably) of Governor Henderson in recognizing his opportunity to do a patriotic act at the very beginning of his term of office, gave the legislature the chance not only to pass it over his veto, but to do so by an increased majority.

Acting on the urgent recommendation of Governor Moses Alexander, both the upper and lower houses of the Idaho legislature passed a measure providing for the submission to the voters of the state of a constitutional prohibition amendment. This action was not unexpected, as all three of the great political parties pledged themselves to statewide prohibition.

Oklahoma's legislature has taken an advance step, as becomes a prohibition state, in adopting a resolution in the house in favor of the Hobson Amendment. Realizing that sooner or later Congress will submit the question to the state legislatures, Oklahoma decided to have the honor of being the first state to put itself on record in favor of National Prohibition.

While some of the governors in their inaugural addresses have very carefully and painstakingly avoided reference to the question of prohibition, we note with pleasure that Governor Capper of Kansas not only gave prominent place in his address to the subject, but pledged his official and personal influence to promote nationwide prohibition.

Prohibition is apparently the livest question that is being considered in the present sessions of the state legislatures, and the record of the action being taken is not pleasant reading for the men engaged in the liquor trade.

PATRIOTISM OF RUSSIAN DISTILLER

The men engaged in the drink traffic are loud in protesting their patriotism, but fail to demonstrate it by abandoning a business that imperils the social, political and moral life of their nation. They might well give serious consideration to the words of Prince Obolenski, one of the largest distillers of Russia, who is reported to have said recently, "Serious as the matter may be for us, if drunkenness can be eradicated we distillers are in duty bound to welcome the reform and make every possible sacrifice for it." If every individual engaged in the liquor business were possessed of such a spirit, the prohibition question would settle itself.

ALABAMA LEGISLATURE REPASSES PROHIBITION BILL OVER GOVERNOR'S VETO

As stated in last week's paper, both houses of the Alabama legislature passed a statewide prohibition bill, by a large majority, the senate by a vote of 29 to 6, and the house 74 to 26. Governor O'Neal went out of office without either signing or vetoing the measure. Governor Henderson, who was inaugurated January 18, vetoed the bill and asked that the question be submitted to the voters at a special election. Within a few hours after the veto, both houses re-passed the bill by overwhelming majorities. The law goes into effect July 1, 1915.

SPECIAL ELECTION ON LIQUOR QUESTION VOTED DOWN BY WASHINGTON LEGISLATURE

The legislature of the state of Washington on January 20 rushed through both houses a resolution declaring against holding a special election in 1915 on the liquor or any other question. This defeats the purpose of the liquor men in securing the submission to the people at a special election in 1915 of an initiative bill which seeks to amend the statewide prohibition law adopted by the people November 3, 1915. For further particulars see page 7.

EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES WOULD BE RUINED

A San Francisco employment agent of long experience is reported by the Boston Transcript to have said recently, "The principal reason these men who are out of work are busted is booze." When asked if the paper could quote him as saying this, he replied:

"No, for if this state were voted dry it would put all of the employment agencies out of business. The workers would all have jobs and wouldn't need us."

A REVOLUTION BENEFICIAL

The Holton (Kans.) Recorder makes the following comment upon ex-President Taft's anti-prohibition interview: "Ex-President Taft has discovered that National Prohibition is an extremely dangerous proposition, in that it would revolutionize the government and do a number of other things to the country that would be horrible. Sometimes when we read of the dominating, corrupting, corroding influence of the whisky interests and the saloon power on municipal government, and on some state governments, we feel that a little revolutionizing would not be amiss."

HOBSON RESOLUTION ENDORSED BY LOWER HOUSE OF OKLAHOMA LEGISLATURE

By a vote of 86 to 20 the lower house of the Oklahoma legislature, on January 19, endorsed the Hobson Resolution. A new Scientific Temperance Instruction bill has passed the lower house and will undoubtedly receive favorable consideration by the Senate.

KANSAS BANKER CONGRATULATES ARIZONA

"I congratulate the people of Arizona on having had the good judgment to put Arizona in the dry column," wrote President C. O. Chandler of the Kansas National Bank of Wichita, after a recent business trip to Arizona. "I have been in the banking business in this state for thirty-two years, and as a business man I have seen a thorough test of the prohibitory law. We now have the matter so well settled in Kansas that no thinking, successful business man would return to the saloon and the domination of the brewery."

THEY DIDN'T MISS IT

A peculiar situation has developed in Philadelphia, where Billy Sunday has stirred conflicting interests to active antagonism, reports a Council Bluffs (Ia.) paper. The liquor interests were using every possible influence to oppose the work of Mr. Sunday. They went to one of the great daily newspapers in the city and told the publishers if they persisted in featuring the work of Sunday all the liquor advertising contracts with the liquor people would be cancelled. The publishers persisted and temperance forces promptly came across with more than enough additional advertising to take the place of the canceled business.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

"ALL ARE IN GOD'S HOUSE"

"How can we span with comfortable thought,
The worlds of life and death and make them one?
By calling both one household large and fond;
Just as it is when comes the evening hour,
The most are weary—some have gone to rest,
The babes, the aged and the feeble ones,
The strong and active stay awhile and talk
Of all that has been done and is to do:
Of the days' happenings and the ones that sleep,
Of what will make them glad when morning comes:
And in the intervals of play and work,
The eye of each is lifted now and then
To note the hour upon the old clock's face
Whose heart outbeats so long the human one;
Then comes the thought, it's growing late,
That very soon we, too, must go to sleep.
Oh! what sweet comfort that from first to last,
Sleeping or waking—all are in God's house,
And one paternal roof doth cover all."

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. S. S. M. WOODMAN, San Leandro, California. Mrs. Woodman served twenty-six years as state superintendent of Unfermented Wine, and by her persistent personal correspondence with clergymen and others, her sound logic and thorough knowledge, performed a great educational work in that department. She was six years president of Alameda county W. C. T. U., and above all an able, eloquent and convincing speaker.

MRS. CLARE O. SOUTHARD, Berkeley, California. Mrs. Southard was for twenty years the able and efficient superintendent of the Press department of Northern California; for four years she was editor of the state paper. She was identified with all that was highest and best in every line.

MRS. MARION G. PECKHAM passed away at her daughter's home at Fruitvale, California. Mrs. Peckham had endeared herself to workers in her new home, but was better known in the east. She served long and well as president of Cattaraugus county, New York, and was the state superintendent of Work Among Indians in the New York W. C. T. U.

PERSONAL MENTION

Mrs. Margaret B. Denning, president India W. C. T. U., who will be remembered as one of the speakers at the recent National W. C. T. U. Convention, on January 23 sailed with her husband for India, to resume her work.

AMONG THE STATES

It is currently reported in Denver that one real estate firm has sold eight farms to saloon keepers within the past thirty days. This does not look like hard times.

That the liquor business is on the decline in the state of New York is the opinion of Commissioner of Excise William Farley, who declares in his report recently submitted to the legislature, that since the passage of the law limiting saloons to one to every 750 of population, 1,018 saloons have quit business and 407 towns have voted dry.

In one West Virginia town it is reported they ordered a new automobile police patrol just before the prohibition law went into effect. It was not delivered for some weeks and after seeing the result of prohibition they cancelled the order, saying that the old horse-drawn vehicle could do all the work necessary.

Federal troops have been recalled from the strike districts of Colorado and saloons are open again, as the time covered by the order of the governor has expired. However, the Colorado Fuel and Iron company, which owns the coal mines in one district, has decided to have no saloons in its camps and has ordered all saloon-keepers to move out.

"Among the blessings for which the people of this section should devoutly thank the Giver of All Good at this season of rejoicing is prohibition," writes the editor of the Columbia (Tenn.) Herald. "It has been a veritable God-send to this community. The man, no matter how influential or respectable he may be, who would suggest the return of the saloon to Maury county now would receive scant consideration."

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

SUPERINTENDENTS

MEDICAL TEMPERANCE

MRS. MARTHA M. ALLEN, Forest Hills, L. I., New York

Pennsylvania was the banner state in this department last year. Tompkins county, New York, sent the best report of any county in the nation, in the matter of distribution of literature and study of the books on alcohol recommended by the department. The city of Ithaca is in this county and deserves much of the credit for this fine showing. The superintendent is Mrs. Bertha Noxon of Ithaca. Chautauqua county, New York, has an excellent superintendent in Miss Wilcox of Fredonia. Miss Wilcox did the most thorough work last year ever done by any superintendent of this department.

New leaflets are "Nerve Specialists and Insanity Experts Denounce Alcohol," "Alcohol Baths," both 25 cents per 100; "Should Pledged Abstainers Use Alcoholic Liquors as Medicine?", "How Drunkards are Made in the Home," and "Medicated Wines, an Easy Road to Drunkenness," all 35 cents per 100. The first named leaflet is also in poster form at five cents each. There are now six department posters, all of which are very helpful in the fight against alcohol.

Copies of the new Plan of Work with a program for a department meeting and with hints for work, together with a leaflet showing the objects of this department and results of its agitation, were sent to all state superintendents in November, for all local unions except to those superintendents not heard from for some time. If any superintendent has not received her quota of these free helps, will she kindly let me know soon? I wish now to thank those who have acknowledged the receipt of the free literature.

The prizes for 1915 are listed in the new Plan of Work. Any union not having received a copy of this Plan should write to her state superintendent for it.

Some states are doing fine work in this department, while others are doing little or nothing. The truths which this department brings to the people will do much to aid in making sentiment for prohibition if the unions are alert to make use of them. The department leaflets should be widely distributed in Sunday schools, granges, among working men, among physicians, nurses, druggists, ministers, editors, teachers, etc. Selections from them should be copied into local papers wherever possible.

There are some medical men at present who are seemingly in league with the liquor traffic. These men are writing articles in favor of alcoholic liquors used moderately, and are denouncing prohibition. The W. C. T. U. cannot afford to ignore the influence of such men, and should be prompt to encourage non-alcoholic physicians to write and speak against such dangerous teaching on the part of supposed health authorities. It is wise to forestall such alcoholic propaganda by educating in the truths of this department all who can be reached through the press, the poster or the leaflet. The two books recommended by this department should be loaned to doctors and ministers, and be placed in libraries, and studied in unions. These books are "Alcohol and the Human Body," by Sir Victor Horsley, price 50 cents, and "Alcohol, a Dangerous and Unnecessary Medicine," price $1.25. Questions upon each book have been prepared to aid in the study by the unions, price five cents.

Every union should have at least the sample package of leaflets of this department with over fifty leaflets and pamphlets, price only 30 cents. From this package selection can be made for leaflets to distribute. In sending money orders to me have them made out to Flushing or Forest Hills, or New York City, not to Long Island, as that is an island, not a city.

Harper's Weekly and the New York Tribune are both publishing valuable articles on patent medicines this winter. Samuel Hopkins Adams, author of "The Great American Fraud," says of Sanatogen in the Tribune, "Medically considered, Sanatogen has no value which cottage cheese does not possess. So far as its curative claims go, the modest refection from the dairy would be a perfect substitute. . . . Cottage cheese costs 10 cents a pound. Sanatogen costs $4.54 a pound." If these articles contain anything that this department has not already published I will bring it to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL later.

MEN'S MEDAL CONTEST

On the occasion of a matrons' contest held last fall the rumor was started that the men would like an opportunity to recite for a medal. Accordingly the local superintendent interviewed four prominent men of the town, each of whom promised to enter the contest and to secure a friend who would do likewise. In a few days' time a class of eight men was organized, their selections chosen and study begun. The men ranged in age from thirty to fifty and represented the following trades and professions: Farmer, teacher, doctor, lawyer, banker, pharmacist, carpenter and mayor. The medal went to the teacher, but the contest met with such favor that it was repeated a week later at a country school house and the carpenter was awarded the medal.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE NOTES

The National W. C. T. U. is to be represented at the International Lord's Day Congress (of which President Woodrow Wilson is honorary chairman) to be held next July in connection with the Panama-Pacific Exposition. "So great is the demand for a revised application of the principles of Sabbath observance to the changed conditions of modern life," writes Mrs. Susan Ostrom, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Sabbath Observance, in a circular letter to her state superintendents, "that dozens of Sabbath organizations have sprung up here and abroad, and this great conference will bring together the best speakers and thinkers of the world on this great subject which confronts civilization today."

The W. C. T. U. representatives are Mrs. Sara J. Dorr, president of Northern California W. C. T. U., and Mrs. A. C. Marsters of Roseburg, Oregon.

Sunday will be observed hereafter in the republic of Panama instead of being merely a continuation of the work-a-day week. The national assembly has passed a law which makes it illegal, punishable by a heavy fine, for shops to be open on Sunday as has hitherto been the case. The new law went into effect on December 1.

A bill asking for a woman's reformatory will be introduced into the 1915 legislature of Missouri by the St. Louis Woman's Protective League, of which Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, a National W. C. T. U. superintendent, is president. The movement is supported by the Missouri Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the World's Purity Congress, the Missouri Convention of Charities and Correction, the St. Louis Committee of One Hundred for the Suppression of Commercialized Vice, the Kansas City Committee of One Hundred for the Suppression of Vice, and the St. Louis Woman's Council.

NATION-WIDE OBSERVANCE OF JANUARY 14, NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION AMENDMENT DAY

UNIVERSAL ADOPTION OF RESOLUTION IN FAVOR OF AMENDMENT

In the observance of January 14 by the Lexington (Ky.) union one feature of interest was the report of the state university students who attended the students' prohibition conference at Topeka the last of December. A splendid audience greeted the various speakers, all of whom were of considerable local prominence. Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., gave a graphic history of the prohibition fight at the National capital and a report of the hearing on the Hobson Amendment, December 22.

The meeting of the Boston (Mass.) W. C. T. U., held at the state headquarters, was attended by members from Suffolk, Norfolk and Middlesex counties, Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson, president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., presiding. Children marched to the building, singing on the way and at the meeting.

The Holly (Mich.) W. C. T. U. was fortunate in securing as one of its speakers for National Constitutional Prohibition Day, James Schermerhorn, editor of the Detroit Times, one of the pioneer papers in the movement to eliminate from its columns all liquor advertisements, and said to be the only Detroit newspaper which has taken this stand. He spoke on "Why the Detroit Times Went Dry." In every available place in the Methodist church where the meeting was held, "Old Glory" was displayed, proclaiming the lofty sentiments of which it is an emblem —purity, love and valor. A chorus of women led in the singing of "It's a Long Way to Prohibition" and "A Saloonless Nation in 1920." At this meeting was fired the first gun in a campaign to make the county of Oakland, in which Holly is located, prohibition territory.

An original feature introduced into the services held by the W. C. T. U. of Ruston, La., the home city of the state president, Mrs. A. C. McKinney, was the use of dodgers headed:

"Going Out of Business. Who? The Liquor Dealers of America. Entire Stock Must Be Closed Out Before January 1, 1920. Come to Hear How It is to Be Accomplished."

Another innovation was the introduction of a new version of the prohibition song, sung to the tune of "Tipperary." The verse which follows is one of three:

"Up in mighty Washington a Congressman, one day,
Got up a 'resolution,' put the enemy at bay;
Saying how our Constitution should so amended be,
That forever from the demon drink our country shall be free"

The St. Louis (Mo.) W. C. T. U. Federation observed National Constitutional Prohibition Day with prayer services. Among those who took part in the program were Mrs. E.B. Ingalls, National superintendent of Anti-Narcotics, and Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner, National general secretary of the Young People's Branch. Several clergymen, among whom was the son of Mrs. H. Magill, an officer in the W. C. T. U., participated with prayers and addresses. Topics pertaining to National Constitutional Prohibition were the themes of all the speakers.

January 14, 1915, in Lincoln, Neb., was an epoch-making day in the history of state and National Constitutional Prohibition. The federation of the six unions —Lincoln, University Place, Bethany, Capitol, College View, and Frances Willard—participated in the day of prayer, each having a period of time assigned to it. Each union arranged a program of a high order. Ministers from all parts of the city participated, and spoke as if filled with the Spirit. Six lay members also spoke, one of them being the state president, Mrs. M. M. Claflin, who emphasized the prohibition victory gained recently in Congress. A college professor talked upon "The Law of Prayer," which he said was "just as certain as the law of gravitation." He gave five great principles, the acceptance and use of which would bring the petitioner power in God's service. One minister spoke on "God's Business"—the temperance movement. Another pastor expressed himself as believing that the constant work of the women and men, through Christ, would bring about the banishment of the liquor traffic. A layman spoke on "The Future of the Liquor Business" and referred to the wonderful advance prohibition has made, and the change in attitude toward it of the great dailies, the business world, and even the political world. "While half of the nations of the world are waging war against each other," said one speaker, "the women and some of the men of another great nation are finding time to gather together to consider the best plans for waging war against the greatest foe in the world." Dwelling on "The Power of Prayer," a minister paid tribute to his mother as an earnest, loyal white ribboner, and to the W. C. T. U., praising the spirit of prayer that actuates the organization. A member of the legislature was the last speaker and urged his hearers to push forward toward the ultimate overthrow of the liquor traffic.

National Constitutional Prohibition Day was observed by the W. C. T. U. of Waverly, N. Y., in connection with the observance of its twenty-seventh anniversary as a W. C. T. U. organization. Earnest, fervent prayers for the success of both statewide and National Prohibition were offered.

The white ribboners of Lexington, Ill., January 14, enjoyed a program carried out without a "hitch." The pastors of all the churches and the editor of one of the papers, who took part, expressed themselves as very proud of the opportunity to participate in a meeting in the interests of National Constitutional Prohibition.

In Parma, Mo., the children were a chief factor in the observance of National Constitutional Prohibition Day. With songs and rally cries they let everybody know that the liquor traffic is going.

January 14 was a day of unusual interest in Madisonville, Ky., where the W. C. T. U. had made thorough preparations for the observance of the occasion. Ministers, lawyers, members of the W. C. T. U. and others participated heartily in the program. Christian co-operation in working against the liquor traffic was the keynote of the day.

The program for National Constitutional Prohibition Day was carried out enthusiastically by the W. C. T. U. of Huntington, Ind.

The local union of Middletown, Md., rallied the temperance forces for a rousing observance of January 14.

The five unions of Oil City, Pa., united in the observance of January 14, Mrs. Alice R. McWilliams, president of the Oil City union, presiding at the all-day meeting.

RIFLING THE TILL—A BUSINESS PROBLEM

What would you do if you found your clerk rifling the cash drawer? What would you do if you discovered that your business manager was spending $7 for every one he added to your business?

Well, your cash drawer is being rifled. Your business servant is spending $7 to get one.

John Barleycorn is rifling the cash drawer. He is your servant because he has a written contract signed by your agent—your business manager—Uncle Sam.

And that business manager, good fellow though he is, is playing the dunderhead with your funds. He is making $330,000,000 a year for you out of the liquor traffic and he is paying out to the liquor traffic a bounty of $2,300,000,000 a year, not to speak of the fact that John Barleycorn is all the time smashing the windows, overturning the furniture, and messing up the place.

You are a business man, so what are you going to do about it? It's a business problem.—Portland (Me.) Evening Express.

THREE REASONS.

Each With Two Legs and Ten Fingers

A Boston woman, who is a fond mother, writes an amusing article about her experience feeding her boys.

Among other things, she says: "Three chubby, rosy-cheeked boys, Bob, Jack, and Dick, respectively, are three of our reasons for using and recommending the food, Grape-Nuts, for these youngsters have been fed on Grape-Nuts since infancy, and often between meals when other children would have been given candy.

"I gave a package of Grape-Nuts to a neighbor, whose 3-year-old child was a weazened little thing, ill half the time. The little tot ate the Grape-Nuts and cream greedily and the mother continued the good work, and it was not long before a truly wonderful change manifested itself in the child's face and body. The results were remarkable, even for Grape-Nuts.

"Both husband and I use Grape-Nuts every day and keep strong and well and have three of the finest, healthiest boys you can find in a day's march."

Many mothers instead of destroying the children's stomachs with candy and cake give the youngsters a handful of Grape-Nuts when they are begging for something in the way of sweets. The result is soon shown in greatly increased health, strength and mental activity.

CHARACTERS

Hostess, Mrs. Brown, Miss May, Mrs. L., Mrs. H. President, Mrs. Gay, Mrs. A., Mrs. F., Mrs. Y., Mrs Z., Miss Stowe, Sister Tate, Mrs. C., Mrs. O., Mrs. M

SCENE I

Before Taking

Scene: A cottage parlor with chairs, tables, etc., arranged for a public meeting. Hostess and Miss Stowe seated in room.

(Enter PRESIDENT, hurriedly.)

PRES.
Well, well, my dear,
The only one here?
And it's a half hour late
Or very near.

I took a nap,
Had a mishap,
('Tis just my fate)
And lost my wrap.

Here comes Miss May
And Mrs. A.
With Sister Tate
And Mrs. Gay.

(Enter ladies in groups of three or four. While the hostess receives and seats them, conversation begins.)

MRS. A. (sinking wearily into a chair.)
Oh dear, I'm tired as tired can be!
I rose this morn at half past three.
Been going since without a stop,
And now I am about to drop.
First I must wash and then must sweep,
Bake and get dinner—I could weep—
Then wash up every dish and plate,
I have good reasons for being late.

MRS. BROWN.
Talk about work, I'll tell you clear
There's hardly been a day this year
That I've sat down to read a line
Because I'm going all the time.
Aid and committee, club and lodge,
Not one of them I ever dodge.
Oh, how I wish that all could see
How much such work depends on me.

(Enter MRS. C.)

MRS. C.
There are pretty happenings in this place!
I heard just now that Mr. Grace
And Mrs. True were acting queer.
Yes, heard it straight on my way here!
And a blind tiger has a station
Just inside the corporation.
And Sunday ball we have to face
And next look for an auto race.
And children run at night too free
In alleys dark where none can see.
What are our departments all about—
They ought to put these things to rout.
Say, I just wish I had the time
I'd help to clean the town of grime.

SISTER TATE (feebly)
Yes, I'd help too, if I were well,
But how I suffer none can tell;
I take four kinds of tablets straight,
Four tonics, too, and that makes eight.
In spite of all I'm pale and thin,
To go all day I can't begin.
But my heart is in the work,
If I were well I wouldn't shirk.

PRES. (calling the house to order with the gavel)
The secretary's absent
And so her place to fill
I'll call on Mary Stowe,
If she so kindly will.
(Miss Stowe takes seat at table.)
Does no one have the minutes
Or secretary's book?
We must omit the roll-call
And to the business look.
Reports from the departments
Are due, I think, today.
Mrs. F., for Flower Mission
Have you anything to say?

MRS. F. (who is whispering to her neighbor over her tatting)
Oh, I forgot!
But like as not
I can recall it on the spot. (meditating)
Miss Stowe for me
Made fifty-three
Bouquets, and one from me.
That's all I've done
And I for one
Think the work is well begun.

PRES.
Now Health and Heredity.

MRS. H.
I'm just too busy quite.
Though I've nothing to report,
The department is all right.

PRES. (looking about the room):
Are other ladies present
Who are department heads?
Mrs. M. for Mercy.

MRS. M.
I've three stray kittens fed.

PRES.
No more reports to offer?
What is there then, Miss Stowe,
That calls for our attention
Ere we adjourn and go?

MISS STOWE.
There's nothing but the program
In charge of Mrs. Brown,
On "How to make our union
A helper to the town."

MRS. BROWN.
It left my mind
Until I came.
But be so kind
Each one to name
One thing to have
To prove our worth—
Our town to save,
And home and hearth.
Begin Miss Stowe.

MISS STOWE.
An L. T. L.

MRS. BROWN.
Now we all know
That would be well.

MRS. Z.
To give young mothers kindly greeting
We ought to have a Mothers' Meeting.

MRS. M.
Let's loose the horses' reins.

MRS. A.
Burn every cigaret.

MRS. GAY.
And use our woman's brains
Some better laws to get.

HOSTESS.
Let's stop the Sunday ball.

MRS. F.
The curfew law enforce.

SISTER TATE.
And kill blind tigers all
And every other curse.

MRS. C. (enthusiastically.)
I move that a committee
Appointed by the Chair,
Arrange a big revival
And plan the whole affair.

(Nods of approval and cries of "consent" by the ladies.)

PRES.
I'll name Miss Stowe for chairman,
She does these things so well,
And for the other members
Have Mrs. M. and L.

MRS. M. (quickly)
No, don't ask me,
It can not be.
Ask Mrs. Gay or Mrs. Z.

(Mrs. Gay and Mrs. Z. shake their heads emphatically.)

MRS. L.
No use am I,
So I won't try,
Ask Mrs. H. or Mrs. Y.

(Mrs. H. and Y. shake their heads.)

PRES.
Well, Mary Stowe will work, I know.
Perhaps you'll help her, Mrs. O.

MRS. O.
I know I won't have any time,
But I don't want to shirk.
I reckon you can take my name
If she'll do all the work.

PRES.
And now from this committee
We hope results to learn.
If there is nothing farther
We now will all adjourn.

(Ladies rise and as conversation begins, Miss Stowe claps her hands for attention.)

MISS STOWE.
Ladies, I would like to speak.
I think our "circulation's" weak,
We need to take, lest it prove chronic,
THE UNION SIGNAL for a tonic.

(While speaking, she distributes copies of THE SIGNAL. The ladies glance at them carelessly at first, then look interested and absorbed. Finally all subscribe.)

SCENE II.

After Taking

Scene: Same as first. One year after. President in Chair. Ladies each hold a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL.

PRES.
We'll hear from the committee
We named a year ago
To plan a big revival.
Will you report, Miss Stowe?

MISS STOWE.
At prayer before the Father's throne
We asked that all His will be done,
And through His grace we found the way
That led us up to victory.
Our UNION SIGNALS searched we through
To find what was the first to do,
And as we told each helpful plan
The great revival there began.
Forth flashed, lit by our peerless paper,
A thousand lights from its one taper.
The Monthly Campaign number then
Was sent to all the business men,
Voters, lawyers, doctors, preachers;
The Young Crusader to the teachers.
Leaflets and tracts soon followed on;
To many thousands they have gone.
Our library for books applied,
And gladly we the call supplied.
Its kindness, too, has made us able
To place our papers on its table.
Unchallenged facts the public read,
And work began where light was spread.
At last it seemed the time had come
To free our town of all its rum;
Our marshalled forces all came out,
And made it dry without a doubt.
In all our work I'm very sure
Our best tools were our literature.
Our superintendents' zeal and zest
Merit that they should tell the rest.

PRES.
The report is gratifying.
The time will now be spent
By superintendents reviewing
The year's accomplishment.

(The president calls each department in turn.)

PRES.
Superintendent of Literature.

MRS. L. (rising)
My report is very long
If given in detail,
But can be comprehended
In "Five thousand pounds of mail."
(Mrs. L. takes her seat.)

PRES.
Why, Mrs. L., pray tell us more,
How did you come,
What have you done
With such a weighty store?

MRS. L. (rising)
The Union gave me "ten"
For the departments' use,
Each had its package then
Without the least excuse.
Inspired by these supplies,
Departments ordered more.
How well they energize
I never knew before.
So thick and fast were orders sent
I hardly knew how much was spent.

TEMPERANCE PROGRESS ROUND THE WORLD

IN THE WAKE OF PROHIBITION IN RUSSIA

"The Russian peasants have been accustomed to speak always of 'Black Monday,' for they usually come home sodden, stupid and depressed after a day in the rum shops," remarked Mr. Henry W. Hiller, representative for Tiffany & Co. of New York, who for thirty-one years has spent half of each year in Russia. "On pay day," continued Mr. Hiller, "the wives who came—so underfed, so badly clothed—to wheedle from their husbands part of their earnings to buy food for the children, usually came too late—all gone.

"Now, this marvelous change has swept over Russia like a cyclone—with the noise left out. It is wonderful. The men come to work cheerful, sober. And the women—as I met them on the streets a great burden was gradually lifted from me. They ceased coming after their husband's pay; and as the weeks wore on, they and their children began to look—well, as if they had had a meal—two meals—finally three meals a day.

"This is the outward and visible sign of the change—a change from a people starving, hopeless, inefficient, slaves to drink, to a people well-nourished, industrious, regenerated, the result of less than three months under this regime."

NEW USES FOR ALCOHOL

The government of Russia announces that it has set aside a considerable sum of money for the purpose of organizing an international competition for the discovery of new technical methods of utilizing industrial alcohol. Prizes amounting to over $50,000 will be awarded. Russia is now a prohibition nation, and discoveries, which are likely to be made as a result of this competition will go far toward providing for the utilization of alcohol which heretofore has been used in the business of making drunkards.

ABSINTHE BARRED IN AFRICA

An official decree is reported to have been promulgated extending to the French colonies in Africa the prohibition of the sale and consumption of absinthe and kindred drinks at present being enforced in France.

PEACE DEMONSTRATION

The Santa Claus Christmas Ship produced great enthusiasm in England. Miss Harriet M. Johnson, World's W. C. T. U. superintendent of the Relation of Temperance to Labor, who recently told the members of a Liverpool Band of Hope about it, makes this reference to a little demonstration which took place immediately after her remarks:

"I showed the children the flags—the Stars and Stripes and the white Peace Flag with the 'star of hope' on it. Then three little girls in white, one of whom carried the American Flag, another the Union Jack and a third the Flag of Peace, stepped upon the platform. 'Britannia' walked across to shake hands with 'America,' to whom she made a nice speech of thanks. 'America' responded, mentioning the hundred years which have passed since the treaty of Ghent went into effect and speaking of the recent treaty providing that Great Britain and the United States will never fight each other again. 'Britannia' and 'America' then crossed flags and the third girl, pointing heavenward, reminded people that the angels are still singing 'Peace on earth, good-will to men.'"

HERE AND THERE

Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston, National superintendent of the Franchise department, was the speaker at an evening meeting of the Elmer (N. J.) union held in the Methodist church. Suffrage is a live question in New Jersey this year, as the legislature will vote for the second time on an amendment to the constitution of the state giving women the rights of franchise.

The "farthest north" union on the American continent, Dawson, Yukon territory, organized by Mrs. Lora S. La Mance in September, 1913, is flourishing. It is hundreds of miles from any other W. C. T. U. and is only about one hundred miles from the Arctic Circle. Mrs. Hazel Hibbard, the president, reports: "We are living, working and gaining new members. I believe we are doing a lot of good. Just now we are corresponding with the Ottawa (Canada) officials in regard to the observance of Sunday closing of saloons." Pretty plucky to invoke the aid of officials thirty-five hundred miles away to look after their North Pole communities.

Ketchikan (Alaska) W. C. T. U. has put in two more fountains on the public streets. It is also trying to determine what course to take in regard to that problem in all Alaska which most of all needs rightful solution—the house of prostitution.

WET CANTEEN ABOLISHED

The special correspondent of the Victoria (Australia) W. C. T. U. reports the abolition of the wet canteen in the camps of the expeditionary forces by the Australian Minister of Defense, Senator Pearce. She writes: "Congratulatory messages have been sent to him from all departments of temperance work. The house has since upheld his decision, although there was considerable opposition. The branches have done good work in providing clothes and comforts for our soldiers who have gone to the front, comfort bags being particularly useful."

At the recent convention of the Victoria W. C. T. U., held in Melbourne, the chair was taken by Mr. Finlayson, M. H. R., who urged the need of agitation and education in preparation for local option which will go into effect in 1917.

DAYS OF SALOON NUMBERED IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC, CANADA

Recently Cardinal Begin of Montreal, Canada, in an enthusiastic speech regarding the temperance cause in his diocese, made this gratifying statement:

"There is a population of about 400,000 in the diocese of Quebec and outside of the cities of Quebec and Levis there is not a single license for the sale of intoxicating liquors. There is in a word 'prohibition' all along the line. And what has been the effect of this prohibition policy? Our parishes are now as quiet and peaceful as a religious community. The people are prosperous and save their money, which formerly was spent in the saloon. In fact, there are very few cases of poverty and those existing in the city of Quebec are handled wisely. On the whole, peace and plenty reign throughout the territory, and as a matter of course, the people being prosperous, the education of the young is attended to."

MASSACHUSETTS CONGRESSMEN VOTED FOR HOBSON AMENDMENT

We inadvertently did an injustice to Congressmen Deitrick and Murray of Massachusetts in stating that the vote of their great state was solid against the Hobson amendment on the vote of December 22.

THE STORY OF A RUSSIAN PEASANT

CHRISTINE I. TINLING

(Lesson Story for Teachers and the Children)

Winter has come again, but in our cosy homes, with every comfort about us, we do not mind it at all. In Russia it is very different. The cold is far more intense and most of the people are too poor to make themselves comfortable. About nine out of ten belong to the peasant class, and they work very hard in the fields and earn but little. Their houses are mere huts, built of logs and thatched with straw. Sometimes sods of earth are piled up against the walls to keep the cold out. But poor and rough as they are, the gables are decorated with wood carving and the Russian peasant likes to invent designs to beautify his home.

Would you care to take a peep inside one of these huts? The floor is of earth and the ceiling so low that the taller members of the family cannot stand up straight. The small window cut in the thick logs does not let in much light. We see no chairs, but there are some uncomfortable wooden benches ranged along the walls. Also there are planks which serve as bedsteads. The chief article of furniture is the stove. It is the one thing the Russian cannot live without. It takes up about a quarter of the room. If a fire has just been lit you will not want to stay one minute, and you will wonder how the people can possibly breathe in such a place. There is no chimney and the smoke fills the tiny room and tries to find its way out through the chinks in the roof. It is true some peasants do nowadays build chimneys, but some of them still think the old way is warmer. They suffer dreadfully with their eyes in consequence of living in smoke, and some of them become quite blind.

The stove is useful in many different ways. Not only does it heat the hut and cook the food, but the soiled clothes are boiled in it and on top of it a bed is spread. There the old people or the sick ones sleep. Strangest of all, it is in the stove that each one takes his Saturday night bath. You see it must be a very different thing from an American stove. There is a cosy recess inside its door before you get to the actual fireplace. Into this alcove goes the one who wants a bath, carrying with him a pail of water and a broom with which to scrub himself. But he has no soap, for that is too expensive for poor peasants.

The meals are not such as you would like to eat. American boys and girls sometimes grumble over their food, and say they do not like this and they do not like that. If they could stay in a Russian hut for a week they would grumble no more. It is only now and then that the peasants have meat. Mostly they live on boiled cabbage and potatoes which they raise themselves. They also grow rye and make it into big hard loaves of black bread and eat it with curds and salt.

Though they have such poor coarse food, they have always managed to get strong drink. That is to say, they did so until lately. The chief Russian liquor is called vodka. The peasants have been so fond of it that they would get it when they could buy nothing else. Some of them even sold their huts and their little strip of land for drink. Then they had nothing left at all. After that they would beg for coppers and go into the liquor-shop and spend them on more drink.

The boys and girls of the Russian peasantry have a very poor chance of getting an education. Many villages have no school at all, and where there is one it is often hardly worth attending. A great many grown people can neither read nor write. Some cannot even understand the figures on the doors of houses, so pictures and signs are used on the stores instead of words in many places.

In a certain village where the people were very poor and the children had no school whatever, lived a boy named Michael. He did not want to grow up knowing nothing at all, so he taught himself to read from old newspapers and such stray books as he could borrow or beg. It was hard work to plod on all alone and to study in the noise of the one room where everybody lived and worked. Do you ever think what a grand thing it is to have such schools as we have in America, such beautiful buildings, fine playgrounds, large sunny rooms, kind teachers and interesting lesson books? If Michael had had all these how happy he would have been! As he had none of them he bravely made the best of what he could get.

Dead in the Russian Trenches
—Handy in Duluth News-Tribune

One day he was poring over an old book that he had borrowed and he came across something that surprised him. The writer said that vodka was a poisonous drink. This was very strange, Michael thought, since almost everybody drank it. He wondered if it could possibly be true. He decided to ask the doctor, because he knew more than most of the people in the village. So he watched for an opportunity, and before long it came. The doctor told him the book was quite right and vodka was certainly poisonous. From that day Michael made up his mind to work and fight against it.

As he grew older he saw more and more the harm that it was doing. One year there was a famine and the people were dying for want of bread. Some of them attacked the rich man's house and robbed and plundered it to get money to buy food. Michael noticed that those who did this were the very ones who had been wasting their own earnings in the vodka shops a short time before. He himself worked hard as a painter of houses. He saved his money and bought land with it, and by degrees he grew rich. At last he was made the mayor of the town where he had gone to live. He tried to put an end to vodka-selling altogether. Unfortunately the drink was sold by the Russian government and they made a great deal of money out of it. Our American government makes money out of it, too, and that is one reason why we have not yet obtained National Prohibition.

Michael Tchelisheff (but never mind his last name because it is too hard) proposed a plan to the people of his town. He said, "Let us ask the government to close the vodka shops and let us offer to pay them out of our own pockets all the money they would lose." The men of the town agreed to this and sent in their request, but the government would not grant it. Other towns attempted the same thing, but they had no better luck than Michael.

Little by little this good man rose to fame and power until he became a member of the Russian parliament, which is called the Duma. There again he worked for temperance and tried to get a law passed, giving the people of the towns the right to shut the vodka shops. It seemed likely that he would be successful, for his bill passed the house that corresponds with our House of Representatives. But it got no further for there were those higher up who did not want it to become a law. They feared that the government would lose a great deal of money if the people voted out the liquor shops. They did not stop to think that strong drink always costs a country a great deal more than it brings in. They quite forgot about the jails and almshouses and lunatic asylums and orphanages that had to be built on account of the harm done by liquor.

However, happily, the greatest man in Russia at last began to think about these things. The Czar went on a trip to visit his people and see how the poorer ones were getting along. He was very much struck with their sad condition and he saw that much of it was due to the drink habit. One day Michael had a talk with him about all this and he reminded the Czar that the people who rebelled against him and made trouble in the country usually planned their wicked deeds in a saloon. The Czar thought over it more and more.

No doubt he talked about it, too, to many of the wise men in his empire. Michael was just one among several who helped him to find the remedy that was needed. I don't know how many more there were.

Last summer the great war broke out. The Czar called his army together and because he wanted to have sober and capable men to do the fighting he ordered that every vodka shop should be closed. The policemen locked up all the spirits and set a seal upon the doors and no one could get any more liquor. It was expected that the saloons would open in a little while. However, every one seemed much happier and better off after they were closed. People had more food to eat and nicer clothes to wear and they even put money away in the banks. Though the war caused much trouble and expense, and is still doing so, millions more dollars were put into the savings bank than had been placed there in the same length of time when the liquor was being sold. So the Czar has never reopened the vodka shops, and there are thousands of people in Russia and the rest of the world who hope and pray that he never will.

NO HALF-WAY MEASURE FOR MINNESOTA

"It's a long way from Petrograd to St. Paul, but it is goodby to local and county option and all other makeshift measures in Minnesota," remarked Miss Rozette Hendrix, president Minnesota W. C. T. U., at a banquet of the state temperance organizations held recently in St. Paul. Resolutions were adopted calling upon Senator Lobeck and Representative Anderson, who spoke on the occasion, to introduce a bill prohibiting the manufacture, sale and transportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes within the state. This bill has since been introduced.

THEY MEANT BUSINESS

Violations of the liquor law had become offensive in Clark, Mo., the home town of Mrs. Nelle Burger, president of the state W. C. T. U., and on Sunday, January 17, she called a citizens' mass meeting and placed the matter squarely upon the hearts of the men and women. Fifty men, the best citizens in the town, stepped right out of their seats and marched down the aisle to be organized into a law enforcement league and quicker than the names could be taken a fund of $200 was raised as a guarantee that they meant business. Twenty-four women responded to Mrs. Burger's appeal to join the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the number is daily increasing.

IT'S A SHORT WAY TO PROHIBITION

By MRS. W. F. CRAFTS

It's a short way to prohibition
It's the right way to go.
It's a sure way to bring salvation
To the greatest land I know.
Let's all stick together
Let this be our cry
It's a short, short way to prohibition
And our Nation will go dry.

TEMPERANCE PROGRESS AMONG THE COLORED PEOPLE

(Excerpts from Address of Rosetta E. Lawson, Delivered at Service of Interdenominational Missionary Union)

The following encouraging statement of temperance progress among the colored people reached us too late for the Frances Willard Memorial Fund number, but it is recommended for use on the programs for February 17.—EDITOR.

The women of my race are awake to the fact that 10,000,000 people (about one-tenth of the population of this country) must be no insignificant factor in our battle for home protection. The use of alcoholic beverages at private social gatherings among us has become a thing of the past. At fairs, picnics and open air meetings alcoholic liquors have been eliminated and on Sunday school and church excursions by boat, it is always stipulated that the bar be closed. Women in many of our churches furnish the grapes and prepare the grape juice as an opening wedge to securing the use of unfermented wine at the Lord's Supper, and at weddings wine is seldom offered.

Ministers in our churches gladly arrange for presenting our work to the people. Not long ago the presiding officer, Rev. Z. D. Lewis of Richmond, Va., at a mass meeting of the Virginia Baptist state convention held in the great auditorium at Richmond, where were assembled 4,500 people, made place upon his crowded program for the National organizer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union who had come into the city on the closing day, in order that she might have an opportunity to present before the Baptist ministers of the state the work which she represented.

The men of my race are not known as brewers and distillers, nor are they in any large numbers keepers of saloons.

In the District of Columbia, where I have noticed the saloons reduced year by year from 1,215 to about 300, and where about 10,000 colored people live, there have scarcely been found a dozen of the number owned, controlled and run as a business, at any one stage, by colored men. The battle is waged with no less vigor, however, by us, because we women realize that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and in order to offset the influence of the demoralizing saloon so often established in localities where colored people reside, there is constant need that the people be instructed and enlightened regarding the laws necessary for their protection.

So we are reaching out to them and helping them through mothers' meetings, Parent-Teacher Associations, L. T. L.'s, medal contests, bands of mercy, social meetings and other agencies—coming to the rescue of our people from the curse of rum, from the cravings of an appetite, for the beginning of which they are not responsible; and exerting our best efforts to bring to the harvest home of the National W. C. T. U. Convention of 1920 a Saloonless Nation.

We realize that we are a weak link in the great social chain of this nation, and also that no chain is stronger than its weakest link. There is much we can do to help lift up the standard in our war against this insidious foe, and we earnestly pray that God may open the way for many more of our women to have part in hastening the day when "the way of the wicked shall be turned upside down."

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can be Strong, Vigorous — full of Life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Clear Skin.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can increase or reduce your weight.

I no longer need to say what "I can do" but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 65,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.

What My Pupils Say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion, it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me. Last year I weighed 216 lbs., this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver. I can breathe now, too. It is surprising how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 lbs. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses and my catarrh is so much better. Isn't that good?"

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My interesting book tells how to stand and walk correctly and contains other information of vital interest to women. You are welcome to it. Write for it. It is FREE. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend. I have had a wonderful experience and I'd like to tell you about it. I am at my desk daily from 8 until 5.

BEFORE AND AFTER TAKING

To school and Sunday school,
Convention, institute,
I offered "temperance tools"
Selecting each to suit.
A public meeting, too,
Gave opening very fine,
Before the speaker came,
To drop a temperance line.
And here and there, with many a prayer,
I've scattered leaflets everywhere.

PRES.
Anti-Narcotics.

MISS A.
Tobacco pledges signed,
Five hundred eighty-nine,
And cigarets no more
Are sold in any store.
Two lectures by most learned sages,
And literature six thousand pages.

PRES.
Scientific Temperance.

MRS. C.
The plan I used that brought most fruits
Was lectures at the institutes.
I offered then the Contest prize,
And fifty tried for it—they're wise.
This made a call for literature,
Which I supplied, you may be sure.
I lost all count—it went so fast—
Ten thousand pages was the last.

PRES.
Health and Heredity.

MRS. H.
Twelve meetings on eugenics,
Ten on heredity,
Drills in calisthenics,
And swatters for the fly.
In all I used eight thousand tracts
To tell the public healthful facts.

PRES.
Sunday School.

MISS MAY. (displays pledge flag.)
Our Sunday schools have made this flag
Of pledges signed by every member.
The temperance work has seen no drag
From January to December.
We keep the subject to the fore
In good supplies of literature.

PRES.
Flower Mission.

MRS. F.
My posies sweet have brought a treat
Of sunshine bright and fair;
To rich and poor have been a cure
For hearts o'ercome with care.
Tied with our bow, the texts, you know,
Have gone with every flower.
Two thousand sent, that was my stent,
And fifteen hundred more.

PRES.
Mercy.

MRS. M.
My report is neither flat nor dull
Though seeming incompatible.
And it will fill you full of shocks
Because it is a paradox.
While striving dry the town to get
I did my best to make it wet.
Remove we mountains, if persistent,
And you won't think me inconsistent
When you behold our temperance fountain
Set in the square. That was my mountain.
The dedication is to be
Tomorrow afternoon at three.
Come one and all and take a drink—
My treat! You'll feel refreshed, I think.
A temperance sentiment in each cup
You'll find when you have filled it up.

WEEK OF EXCITEMENT AT BOTH ENDS OF CAPITOL—FILIBUSTER TO FIGHT SHIP PURCHASE BILL—MAY OVERRIDE PRESIDENT'S VETO OF IMMIGRATION BILL—SEPARATE BILL FOR DISTRICT PROHIBITION AMENDMENT—PEACE FORUM WOULD UNITE PEACE ORGANIZATIONS—WIRE CARRIES PRESIDENT'S COMPLIMENTS TO SAN FRANCISCO EXPOSITION MANAGEMENT

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS. National W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D.C.

This has been a week of excitement at both ends of the Capitol. January 15, the Senate resolved itself into continuous session, since which it has simply taken recess, and last night, Friday, January 29, was in session all night. This filibuster is being carried on by the Republican members of the Senate, who are united in fighting the ship-purchase bill. Speechmaking is the order of the day. As was stated last week, Senator Burton of Ohio, who retires from the Senate March 4, led in an address consuming three days, since which time other Senators have filled in the time. Senator Gallinger, who is past the threescore and ten mark in point of age, spoke for seven hours consecutively, and again last night in the "wee sma' hours" was holding forth with unabated vigor. Both sides, in order to keep a quorum, are present, but mainly in adjoining cloak rooms. Yesterday the roll was called repeatedly, Senators coming into the chamber long enough to respond to their names, but immediately flocking back, and the Senator speaking addressed virtually an empty chamber, a scattering few Republicans remaining to give him support.

When either Senate or House is in session, the flag floats over that end of the Capitol building; so the flag has remained unfurled over the Senate end since January 15. When such men as Root, Lodge, Burton, and Gallinger organize a filibuster, and give its operation their personal attention, it may well be characterized a filibuster that will pretty nearly accomplish its purpose.

The immigration bill with the "literacy test" passed by both Houses went to the President, to be returned with his veto, together with a well-phrased message which argued that the "literacy test" would "all but close entirely the gates of asylum which have hitherto remained open in America to the politically oppressed from the rest of the world." The principal reason given by the President for setting his will against that of Congress, aside from his personal convictions, was that the American people had never passed upon the issue involved, and he asks the question, "Has any political party ever avowed a policy of restriction in this fundamental matter, gone to the country on it, and been commissioned to control its legislation?"

May Override President's Veto of Immigration Bill

Leaders of the House and Senate are preparing to override the President's veto, and are arranging for a vote in the House some time next week, thus answering in the affirmative the question put to them by the President. They say party platforms "had declared for stricter immigration laws," and that the people themselves "had spoken through their direct representatives in House and Senate." Three times has an immigration bill containing a restrictive literacy test been vetoed, first by President Cleveland, next by President Taft, and now by President Wilson.

Yesterday, January 29, the debate on the Naval Appropriation bill was on in the House, and continued from eleven in the morning until eleven at night. Both the "big navy" men and the "little navy" men had their say, and the battle waxed hotter and hotter.

This morning the House convened at eleven o'clock, and the debate continued under the five-minute rule during the day. The cry for a "big navy" seems to be in the ascendency. The naval committee, in its report to the House, carried a measure, asking for the building of twenty-three vessels, viz., two battleships, at a cost of $14,750,000; seventeen submarines, not to exceed $500,000 each; a hospital ship, at $2,500,000, etc., the bill carrying approximately $148,500,000.

It was further proposed by the committee that one-half the submarines be built on the Pacific Coast, provided they can be built there as cheaply as upon the Atlantic Coast. It has been said by those favoring a big navy, that the United States "should be prepared not for war, but against war."

Separate Bill for District Prohibition Amendment.

Senator Sheppard has introduced as a separate bill the prohibition amendment he offered to the District appropriation bill. It was referred to the District committee. There is no chance of consideration during this session, but Mr. Sheppard will press it when the Senate reconvenes.

The special committee to investigate the excise board of the District has been given full authority to set its machinery in motion. The contingent expense committee reported favorably as to the funds, and the Senate immediately adopted the resolution providing for the investigation. Senator Hitchcock, who is busy with other duties, requested to be excused from serving on this committee. The Vice-President did not fill the vacancy yesterday. Senator Sheppard, chairman of the committee, said yesterday that he would call the committee together at once and arrange for beginning the inquiry.

Dr. John Wesley Hill, president of the International Peace Forum, has been in Washington in the interests of an international peace propaganda. The national committee is to be composed of such men as David Starr Jordan, James Brown Scott, Charles W. Fairbanks, John Hays Hammond, William H. Taft and others. Negotiations are now going on with countries neutral in the war, with the view to making the committee an international one.

Peace Forum Aims to Unite Peace Organizations

The Peace Forum is hoping to unite all the peace organizations of the United States—of the world, if possible—under one head, and the conversion of the armies and navies of the world into a great international police force, at the disposal of a Supreme court of the nations for the enforcement of its decrees, giving the Supreme court the power to arrest the commerce of any recalcitrant country. The plan is to memorialize Congress to invite the great Peace Congress, which was proposed at The Hague, to meet here at the close of the European war.

President Wilson this week gave recognition to the first transcontinental telephone service by talking directly to San Francisco, President Moore of the Panama-Pacific exposition, being at the other end of the line. At different cities along the line, however, the conversation was overheard with deep interest. Prominent officials of the telephone company were listening on the line to the San Francisco conversation, and the President afterward addressed them.

Wire Carries President's Compliments to Exposition Management

He complimented Mr. Moore on the early opening of the transcontinental line and on the fine prospects for the exposition, which he said he was hopeful of seeing when Congress adjourns. He conveyed greetings to the management, the conversation being distinct at both ends. It is said that it would take four hours for a man's voice, unaided (granting the possibility of such titanic lungs) to travel to San Francisco through the air. On the wires it takes less than one-fifteenth of a second.

Up to now the longest telephone in the world was between New York and Denver, but this line is 1,300 miles better, and again this country has the longest line in the world. The transcontinental service is expected to be opened to the public about March 1. It will cost $20.70 for a person in New York to talk three minutes to San Francisco, or vice versa.

The executive committee of the Temperance Commission of Church Federation met in Washington this week to arrange for a nation-wide pledge-signing campaign. Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, is greatly interested in the matter of pledge signing, and will, without doubt, be a strong ally in this direction. Recently Mr. Bryan was speaking to a company of 5,000 young men, and before closing urged total abstinence, asking how many would sign such a pledge with him, and 4,000 hands were raised.

Board of Education Studies Moving Picture Machine

Members of the Washington board of education devoted a large part of the monthly meeting recently to the study of the moving picture machine which it is proposed to introduce into the public schools as a means of assisting in the teaching of history, geography, physiology, and other subjects. At the conclusion of the business meeting, a moving picture machine was brought into the room by representatives of the Washington Post, which has offered to furnish machines and films for the use of the schools, and a number of educational pictures were shown. Ernest L. Thurston, superintendent, has expressed himself in favor of the machines.

Big Brewing Company Goes Into Bankruptcy

"LIQUOR BUSINESS HAS FALLEN OFF MORE THAN 35 PER CENT" SAYS BREWER

"It is a matter of general knowledge among brewers that the liquor business in the United States has fallen off more than thirty-five per cent within the last year," William H. Boetter, treasurer of the Ernst Tosetti Brewing Company, is reported to have said in explaining the failure of the company. On January 26 an involuntary petition in bankruptcy against the Tosetti Company was filed in the United States District Court. The liabilities of the company are said to be $200,000. "We will be happy to get fifty cents on the dollar," stated the attorney representing the creditors, when asked as to the assets.

The treasurer of the brewing concern stated that the rapid change in public sentiment in Illinois was responsible for the situation. "Women getting the ballot in Illinois and other states probably has something to do with the decrease in the demand for brewers' products," he remarked, "and public sentiment is changing rapidly."

Russia's Savings Increase As Result of Prohibition

A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Petrograd, says M. Kharitonoff, comptroller of the Russian treasury, speaking before the Duma budget committee January 25, declared that owing to the great increase in the national savings, due to prohibition, the extraordinary outlay occasioned by the war had caused no great suffering as yet in Russia.

As proof of this, M. Kharitonoff said the national savings in December, 1913, which amounted to 700,000 rubles ($350,000) had increased to 29,100,000 rubles ($14,550,000) in December, 1914. He added that the total savings for 1913 amounted to 34,000,000 rubles ($17,000,000), as compared with 84,000,000 rubles ($42,000,000) for 1914. This is given on the authority of a special correspondent to the Chicago Tribune.

LEGISLATIVE NEWS

Iowa

Senator Joseph H. Allen has introduced in the Iowa senate a constitutional amendment providing for equal suffrage. This amendment was adopted by the thirty-fifth general assembly and was referred to the thirty-sixth general assembly. Owing to the large pledges for the amendment in both the senate and the house the adoption seems certain.

Texas

A prohibitionist has been chosen as speaker of the lower house of the Texas legislature.

A joint resolution has been introduced in the legislature providing for a division of the state. The western portion which contains only one wet city, El Paso, wishes to become a separate prohibition state. If the resolution passes the legislature it will go to a vote of the people on July 1.

New Mexico

Resolutions in favor of the submission of constitutional amendments providing for both statewide prohibition and woman suffrage were, on January 21, introduced in the New Mexico legislature.

Tennessee

The lower house of the Tennessee legislature sent a unanimous vote of thanks to the Tennessee members of the House of Representatives for their vote in favor of the Hobson Resolution.

Washington

Governor Lister of Washington, in his annual message to the legislature, urged the appropriation of $50,000 to enforce the prohibition law.

South Carolina

A bill has passed the lower house of the legislature providing for a referendum to the people of the question of statewide prohibition.

Arkansas

A prohibition bill has been introduced in the upper house of the state legislature providing for an act to prevent county judges and town and city councils from issuing licenses to any firm, corporation, company or individual to manufacture or sell intoxicating liquors of any kind.

Utah

Debate, and vote on reference, of a prohibition bill in the state senate indicates that a statewide prohibition law will be enacted. The bill which was introduced by Senator Wootten, prohibits the manufacture, sale or keeping of any preparation that contains more than one-half of one per cent alcohol.

STATEWIDE PROHIBITION BILL FOR SOUTH CAROLINA

The South Carolina house of representatives on January 29 passed a bill authorizing a referendum next September on statewide prohibition. The measure now goes to the senate, where it is expected it will receive favorable action. The senate committee has reported favorably on the measure.

WEST VIRGINIA LEGISLATURE FOR SUBMISSION OF SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT TO VOTERS

The legislature of West Virginia, on January 26, voted to submit to the people at the next election an amendment to the constitution providing for woman suffrage. The measure passed the senate with only one opposing vote, and the house of delegates with only six votes against it.

PENNSYLVANIA MANUFACTURING PLANT CURTAILS "PERSONAL LIBERTY" OF EMPLOYES

S. J. Shiner & Sons, owners of the largest manufacturing plant in Milton, Pa., and employing more than 800 men, on January 22, followed the lead of the American Car and Foundry Company and the Milton Manufacturing Company in shutting off intoxicating liquor from men who work there by posting a notice promising instant discharge. The order says in part:

"It is a pronounced fact that indulgence in liquor is a menace to business interests, causing men to become careless and indifferent to the proper use of machinery, tools and equipment. This abuse will not be tolerated any longer, and the management will drop such persons from the payroll without notice.

"We have also decided that all persons signing liquor license petitions to the Northumberland county court to grant licenses to persons doing business in Milton must present a written petition to the court to have their names removed. Failure to do this will be taken to mean that these men, by their neglect to comply herewith, have automatically handed their notices to the management that they have quit our employ and we will immediately set about to fill such vacancy."

LIQUOR DRINKING A MISDEMEANOR IN TOPEKA

The liquor interests are spending money freely and extravagantly in an effort to discredit all statements made by residents in prohibition territory as to the enforcement of the law and the benefits resulting therefrom. Very recently they paid for a half page advertisement in a Chicago newspaper, to give publicity to a statement that arrests for drunkenness in Topeka in 1914 numbered 681. The Chicago liquor interests "inquire to know" how such reports are to be reconciled with the claims that prohibition is enforced in Kansas. The Topeka (Kas.) Capital (published by Arthur Capper, the newly elected governor of Kansas) replies to the charge in a spirited editorial, from which we quote:

"The arrests on the charge, 'drunk and disorderly' in Topeka during 1914 were 53. The arrests in Chicago for 'disorderly conduct' in 1914 were 54,738. Chicago's 'disorderly conduct' and Topeka's 'drunk and disorderly' are synonymous, and the actual conditions are fairly well illustrated by the two figures—53 arrests in Topeka; 54,738 in Chicago.

"Mayor Cofran and Chief of Police Ross make the statement that nine-tenths of the arrests for drunkenness in Topeka would not be made in Kansas City or Chicago, where a person is arrested for drunkenness only when he becomes a public nuisance by reason either of disorderly conduct or because totally unable to navigate.

"In Topeka Police Judge Huron has adopted a rule of extreme strenuosity in requiring police to arrest anybody who exhibits any symptoms of having taken a drink of liquor. The police judge by his ipse dixit has made liquor drinking a misdemeanor in this city which tells the story and explains the large number of arrests on the technical charge of drunkenness, as compared with the small number of arrests, 53 in a year, on the ground of disorderliness

"As a matter of fact, there is a minimum of drunkenness in Topeka. We believe that Mayor Cofran is well within bounds in stating as he stated to The Capital, that Topeka is freer from both drunkenness and drinking today than it has ever been.

"The facts about Topeka are that this town is closed up as near 'tight as a drum' so far as selling and buying and drinking liquor are concerned, as any town of 50,000 can be made so long as liquor is manufactured for sale. There is so little drinking in Topeka that Judge Huron's drastic rule is 'stood for.' It wouldn't be in any town where prohibition is not radically enforced."

CAN WE AFFORD IT?

ECONOMICAL LOSS OF FIFTEEN BILLION CHARGED TO LIQUOR TRAFFIC BY CONGRESSMAN DICK T. MORGAN OF OKLAHOMA

Asserting that the very magnitude of the liquor traffic, the immense amount of capital invested and men employed is the strongest argument for National Prohibition, Congressman Morgan of Oklahoma, in his speech in the lower House of Congress on December 22, showed the economical loss involved in a continuance of the traffic. He said in part:

Power of the Liquor Industry

The liquor business has grown to immense proportions. It represents great wealth. It employs an army of men. It supports a multitude of people. Its power extends in every direction. It dominates business, permeates society, controls politics, and its gigantic sway molds the tone of the press and influences the attitude of even the church.

Some conception of its mighty influence may be gathered from the wealth it controls, the men it employs, the wages it pays, and the number of people it supports. Seven hundred and seventy-two million dollars in capital are invested in plants and equipment for the manufacture of distilled, malt and vinous liquors. Even a larger amount is probably invested by retail and wholesale establishments for the sale and distribution of the product. These liquor-manufacturing establishments have an annual output in excess of two and a quarter billions of gallons. At wholesale prices these liquors are worth $600,000,000. At retail the consumers pay therefor over $2,000,000,000. As a people we consume annually 22.66 gallons of intoxicating liquors per capita. There are at least 250,000 persons employed directly in the business. More than 1,000,000 of our population are supported by this business. In salaries and wages the liquor-manufacturing establishments pay out annually $70,000,000. Add to this the profits of the saloon keepers, the wages paid to bartenders and others supported directly by the liquor traffic, and we have a grand total of more than $250,000,000 distributed annually through this business.

Its Contribution to Government Expenses

But there is something even more startling than this. In the last fiscal year the Federal, state, county, and municipal governments collected over $325,000,000 in taxes from the business; $245,000,000 went to the Federal Government, $21,000,000 to the states, $6,600,000 to the counties, and $52,000,000 to incorporated towns and cities having a population of 2,500 and over. Through the increased tax placed on beer and other intoxicating liquors by the emergency revenue act, the business this year will pay for the support of our various governments not less than $400,000,000. Last year the Federal Government collected thirty-three per cent of its ordinary revenue from the liquor business, and by reason of the increased tax the amount this year will be over forty per cent.

But this liquor business does something else. To support this vast business, to pay dividends on the capital invested therein, to pay $250,000,000 annually in salaries and wages and profits to the people engaged therein and employed thereby, and to contribute annually $400,000,000 in taxes for the support of our various governments; to do all this it is necessary that 1,000,000 of our people shall be drunkards, that 4,000,000 of them shall be heavy drinkers, and that 19,000,000 of them shall be regular moderate drinkers, and that the country at large shall suffer an economic loss estimated at $15,000,000,000.

What These Statistics Mean

What do these figures mean? What do they teach? What do they prove? What significance shall be given them in reaching a conclusion on the question before us?

Those who oppose this resolution point to these statistics—to the capital invested, to the men employed, to the wages paid, to the revenue received—as arguments against the adoption of this resolution.

To my mind they prove directly the reverse. It is almost universally admitted that the liquor business is the greatest evil in existence; that it is the greatest source of crime, immorality, disease, idleness, poverty, and national waste and that it is highly detrimental and injurious to the social, economic, and moral welfare of our citizens.

If the liquor business be an evil, then the greater its magnitude, the more is the necessity that the National Government shall interfere and aid in its suppression.

Annihilate this Traffic

If the liquor business be a source of crime, immorality, disease, idleness, poverty, and waste, then to contemplate the vast millions of money invested therein, the hundreds of thousands of men employed in its prosecution, and the hundreds of millions of dollars in wages and profits distributed thereby only emphasizes and reinforces the appeal to the National Government for aid and assistance in annihilating the business.

If the liquor business is not a legitimate business and is deteriorating the physical, intellectual, and moral character of our citizenship, this is an unanswerable argument why neither the federal, state, county, nor municipal governments should make the business the chief source of their revenue.

The future generation is in our hands. The boys and girls of today will be the brains and sinew of tomorrow. Let us make them familiar with the scientific fact that alcohol is destructive to sinew and brain.

IDAHO'S LEGISLATURE

ALMOST UNANIMOUS IN VOTE ON SUBMISSION OF PROHIBITION AMENDMENT

"Idaho Dry in 1916!" is a perfectly safe prophecy. All three political parties having declared in favor of statewide prohibition, the Governor having strongly recommended it and both houses of the legislature having passed a measure submitting the question to the voters, there seems almost no doubt that the people will vote to outlaw the liquor traffic. Prohibitionists in the state confidently declare that the amendment is certain to be adopted by a majority of from 15,000 to 20,000.

The measure, which passed the house by a unanimous vote and the senate with only one opposing vote, provides for a submission of the amendment to the people at the general election in 1916. If adopted, it will go into effect May 1, 1917.

Only one man in the legislature—Senator Enoch W. Whitcomb of Salem—voted against the bill. He comes from a county that is notoriously wet.

There has been introduced in the legislature a bill providing for statutory prohibition, to go into effect January 1, 1916, the same date that the neighboring states of Washington and Oregon become dry, thus preventing the outlawed liquor dealers of these two states moving across into Idaho. This measure, also, was strongly recommended by Governor Alexander.

DEATH TO THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

GOVERNOR ALEXANDER OF IDAHO URGES PASSAGE OF TWO STRONG PROHIBITION MEASURES IN MESSAGE TO LEGISLATURE

I am proud, as a citizen of Idaho, to be able to say that the cause of temperance and sobriety has made such strides among our people that the day has arrived when the licensed saloon has no longer a right to existence in our state. There is no longer any ground to stand upon in defense of the dispensing of alcoholic liquors by consent of the state. Local option had its day, but that day is past. What the people now demand from us is the absolute destruction of the liquor business. I therefore recommend that you pass the necessary legislation to submit to the qualified voters of the state at the general election in 1916 a constitutional amendment to be voted upon, that will prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor in this state forever in any manner, shape or form. The proposed amendment should be so drawn that no doubt shall arise as to its meaning—death to the liquor traffic. It should be self-executing upon its adoption so that no legislation may be required in the future to make it operative to the full intent of the voters.

Since the holding of the platform conventions of the great political parties of this state wherein the principles of those parties were announced, new and unforeseen conditions have arisen which must be faced in the spirit of wisdom and statesmanship, and as the representative of the people of Idaho, I further advise you that more than a constitutional amendment is required of us. Our sister states of Washington and Oregon, on November 3, 1914, wrote into the organic law of those states the voice of the people prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages, on and after January 1, 1916. These states border upon Idaho and unless we take prompt action to protect our people, their homes and their young, Idaho will be made the rendezvous for the liquor traffic of these states. It will move over into our state, enter the body politic, and make of this state a place from which the traffic will be illegally carried on and liquor sold in violation of the laws of Oregon and Washington. To guard against such a calamity, I recommend that a law be passed at this session of the legislature, in addition to the submission of a constitutional amendment, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic beverages on and after January 1, 1916. This law should be as stringent as it can be made and should leave no doubt as to the meaning to abolish the liquor traffic from the state of Idaho. This law should further provide that no further local option elections may be held and that no licenses should be granted for the sale of alcoholic liquors as beverages, either at wholesale or retail, under any circumstances beyond the time said statutory prohibition shall become effective.

ORGANIZED LABOR AND THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

CHARLES STELZLE of New York, Sociologist, Writer and Labor Union Worker

Organized labor believes in better jobs for workingmen. The saloon takes away jobs and makes inferior workingmen.

Organized labor stands for efficiency. The saloon always makes the workingman less skillful.

Organized labor stands for higher wages. The saloon lowers the wages of the man who patronizes it. No man ever had his pay increased because his boss saw him in a saloon.

Organized labor is fighting to keep children in school and out of the factory. The saloon puts children into the factory and on to the streets.

Organized labor seeks to keep women in the home in the main. The saloon drives her into the industrial field as a competitor of men.

Organized labor stands for the home. The saloon disintegrates the home. —Toledo Blade

PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD BECAME DRY JANUARY 30

From now on it will be impossible for anyone to get a drink anywhere on the Pennsylvania system. For some time there have been only two bars in the Pennsylvania railroad stations and those were at the New York station and in the Broad Street station, Philadelphia. The license in the New York station does not expire for some months, but it has been transferred, and the bar was closed on January 30.

The railroad began its campaign against liquor some years ago when an order was issued to employes warning them to avoid saloons and threatening the men with discharge if they drank while on duty.

In 1912 another step was taken when the railroad ordered the abolition of intoxicants from its trains. From July 16 of that year it has been impossible to get a drink on any train.

In Kansas there are 131 towns of 1,000 population, which own electric light plants, water and sewer systems, splendid sidewalks and public schools without a single cent of revenue from the liquor traffic. In Missouri there are scores of towns of from 1,000 to 4,000 population with open saloons paying a high license where they have no electric light plants, no water or sewer system, and poor sidewalks.

In the panic of 1907 Missouri, with all her big banks, was unable to send one penny to the East. Kansas banks sent $50,000,000.

Kansas spends $38,000,000 less per year for intoxicants than does Missouri. This explains the prosperity of Kansas.

ONE HUNDRED YEAR ASSETS

A NEW VOCABULARY IN MISSIONS AND TEMPERANCE

DR. LOUISE C. PURINGTON, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Co-operation With Missionary Societies

"A thousand years in Thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night," is the language of Moses setting forth God's providence, human frailty, and the brevity of life. What must be in the Lord's sight the measure of time reckoned by us a hundred years? It seems like a great span of eternity as we glance backward and think for a moment of the great people like Livingstone, like the Brownings, Robert and Elizabeth; of great events like missionary centennials, as in India and, on the home side the organization of boards of foreign missions; the Peace movement; the Treaty of Ghent; the beginning of permanent peace between England and the United States, to be celebrated in 1915; the temperance movement, which had its inception in Connecticut and of which Lyman Beecher was the pioneer.

It almost seems as if all the great things in human history for humanity's civilization and uplift, had happened within one hundred years. We can talk around the world through the mystical language of the wireless, we can look into the depths of the stars, we can almost pierce heaven itself with our upward flights. The ratio of health has increased by methods of disease prevention, by pure food, sanitation, and by a new and almost inestimable hygienic régimé.

Unity in Christianity, international and interdenominational, is the most significant product of the century. Nations are members of over 150 international associations. Missions are being merged in China, India, Japan, co-operation is becoming the watchword abroad as well as at home, and men and women of vision are reaching higher ideals through glimpses of Christ's kingdom in its oneness and entirety.

The International Sunday School Association, Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. are products of the century.

One hundred years ago the Bible was printed in about sixty languages, now in five hundred languages and dialects.

One hundred years ago the British drove our missionaries from India—"a ship-load of devils is preferable to a ship-load of missionaries." Massachusetts, now a hot-bed of missions, "had no religion it could afford to export." Men and women with a longing to go, especially women, were denied a hearing before ecclesiastical bodies and condemned as going ahead of divine providence in this matter.

One hundred years ago there was no great educational movement basal to the coming of Christ's kingdom; no missionary schools, colleges, universities—only a stray foreign student in American colleges. Last year there were 2,084 from Asia, Africa, South America, Australia; there were no great gifts for missionary work—a "million for missions" was undreamed of. There was no Ellen M. Stone, prisoner for Christ's sake, to "storm and sweep the audience" as at the national council of Congregationalists in Kansas City she pleaded for Albania. "You paid $65,000 to save one woman; will you not do as much to save a nation?"

The missionary observances of the centennials of Judson, Livingstone, etc., especially emphasize the achievements in foreign lands; the messengers and the message; also pageants like "The World in Boston," "An Adventure of Faith," dramas of missionary progress reproducing the first "apostles to the East" and personifications of the nations.

Temperance Evolution

A century of temperance reform chronicles achievements equally great. One hundred years ago the use of alcoholic liquors was almost universal. The drinking was excessive at church meetings, ordinations, and the laying of the corner-stone, the societies providing the liquors. The side-boards were covered with decanters, bottles and drinking-glasses "looking and smelling like a grog shop; the smoke of the pipes was blinding."

One hundred years ago some battles had been fought and won on the traffic and thraldom of opium—"wars had been waged and a nation all but wrecked." A great moral question like the use of liquor and its twin—narcotics—slaying their victims annually to an extent beyond computation, never is in the forefront like immediate disasters not so formidable and far-reaching. "The Allies" at Shanghai, 1909, at The Hague, 1912, and at the final conference, 1913, occasioned the overthrow of a traffic debasing to conscience and reason and killing to both body and soul. England's right to continue the export of opium was maintained until the settlement of this question by these three conferences. And to this day the debauchery of a great nation might have been continued had it not been for the American occupation of the Philippines. But this is another story.

Dr. Benjamin Rush published in 1804 the first scientific warning against the use of ardent spirits; this produced but little effect. At last, in 1811, the Connecticut General Association (Congregational) at its meeting at Fairfield, appointed a committee to report measures for remedy at the next meeting of the association; Massachusetts, likewise. That same year, at local ordinations at Plymouth and Goshen, liquors were furnished and, as all could not drink at once, they waited their turn. One who was there testified that the sideboard had the air of a bar-room.

When the association met in 1812 and the committee reported, they were obliged to confess that the evil of intemperance was so great and people so lax in indulgence, they did not perceive that anything could be done. Immediately Rev. Lyman Beecher rose to protest; a committee was appointed and reported to the association resolutions vigorously denouncing the do-nothing policy—a paper Dr. Beecher regarded as the most important one he ever wrote.

"Had a foreign army invaded our land to plunder our property and take away our liberty, should we tamely bow to the yoke and give up without a struggle? If a band of assassins were scattering poison and filling the land with widows and orphans, would they be suffered, without molestation, to extend from year to year the work of death? If our streets swarmed with venomous reptiles and beasts of prey, would our children be bitten and torn to pieces before our eyes, and no effort made to expel these deadly intruders? But intemperance is that invading enemy preparing chains for us; intemperance is that band of assassins scattering poison and death; intemperance is that assemblage of reptiles and beasts of prey destroying in our streets the lambs of the flock before our eyes.

"To conclude, if we make a united exertion and fail of the good intended, nothing will be lost by the exertion; we can but die, and it will be glorious to perish in such an effort. But if, as we confidently expect, it shall please the God of our Fathers to give us the victory, we may secure to millions the blessings of the life that now is and of that which is to come."

TEMPERANCE PROGRESS ·ROUND THE WORLD

HOW ICELAND SECURED PROHIBITION

On January 1, 1915, national prohibition went into effect in Iceland. For many months preparations have been made for this event which will mean so much for the prosperity and happiness of the people of the island.

Iceland is a colony of Denmark, but it has a parliament of its own —the alting, composed of thirty-four members elected by the people, and six approved by the crown.

On January 12, 1900, the alting passed a bill prohibiting the manufacture of all alcoholic drinks, and after the matter had been voted on favorably by the people, on May 1, 1909, parliament passed a total prohibition bill.

The enemies of the measure hoped it would not receive the approval of the King of Denmark but when a deputation presented the bill to him, he is reported to have said:

"Few, if any, of my actions since I became King have given me more satisfaction than that of signing the prohibition law for Iceland, and if the parliament of Denmark will pass a similar law I shall be more willing yet to approve."

WAR AS TEMPERANCE REFORMER

A deadly blow has been struck at the drink curse in France by the publication of a decree prohibiting the sale of absinthe and kindred liquors—whether wholesale or retail—as also the opening of fresh houses for the sale of alcoholic liquors and spirits. At the beginning of the war the Minister of the Interior sent a circular note to the prefects of departments "inviting" them to suppress "by order" the sale of and traffic in absinthe and kindred liquors. Such orders could only have effect during the war. The new decrees have a final character as Parliament will be asked to ratify them. Thus the "green fiend" which social reformers unanimously regard as their most insidious and dangerous enemy in the struggle against the forces which undermine the nation's health and vigor is now doomed. Temperance advocates have repeatedly tried to prevail on Parliament to adopt such a measure, but the opposition of "the trade" has been too strong. The present war, terrible as it is, says a Daily News Paris correspondent, has been productive of a few blessings. The prohibition of absinthe is one of these.

Absinthe has already been officially banned in three other countries: Belgium, Holland, and Switzerland. Belgium, though few of her people had developed the absinthe habit, forbade the sale of the liquor as a preventive measure in 1905, Switzerland following suit in 1908, and Holland in 1910.

This revolutionary report adopted one June day in 1812, is among the earliest, prophetic of the great temperance reform. The results were beyond Lyman Beecher's most sanguine expectations. The church approved and liquor was banished from ecclesiastical meetings and its use in the home diminished; the legislature took favorable action, and a Society for Reformation of Morals was established. These energetic measures may be put down to the credit of Congregationalists in their inception. "From that time," says Dr. Beecher, "the movement went on, not only through New England, but marching through the world. Glory to God!"

The triumphs of the march may be enumerated as follows:

The organization of armies for the overthrow of the liquor traffic, chief among these the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; the formation of the Prohibition party; the mandates by great corporations forbidding their employes to drink, even to enter a saloon (this regulation in the matter of railroads alone adds over a million and a half men to the temperance ranks); the demand for total abstinence by life insurance companies, athletes, editors, and business men in general; the attitude of magazines and many newspapers in refusing liquor advertisements; the more than two generations of school children in the public schools of the United States, taught through the untiring efforts of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the evil effects of the use of alcoholics; the great army of allies—men, women and children, the church, the suffragists—helping toward the goal of National Constitutional Prohibition.

Within the century has occurred the launching of the World's W. C. T. U., that "bright, beautiful, incomparable event" which, in 1891, took place in Boston—the first international gathering of the temperance clans. Frances E. Willard, Lady Henry Somerset and Hannah Whitall Smith were all there, and of devout and honorable women there were not a few. The real birth of the World's W. C. T. U. was in 1883 in the heart and brain of Frances E. Willard.

Eighteen round-the-world missionaries have traversed the world since that date and many segments of missionary fields at home and abroad have received the consecrated touch, the lasting impress of devoted workers.

Unity at Last.

"That they all may be one" was Christ's last prayer for us. Whatever the adversities of this present time, the great World Congresses, Peace plans endorsed by thirty governments representing more than three-fourths of the globe, and empires opened to the gospel in all its phases afford unprecedented opportunities.

Queen Wilhelmina's message to the members of the Continuation Committee (Edinburg conference) at The Hague is representative of that in the hearts of other rulers and of the great majority of the human race.

"It is my earnest desire that the unity of all Christ's followers, members of His invisible fellowship, may be ever more and more deeply felt, and that our Saviour may stir our hearts to more and more fervent, united prayer."

The statements made in "Prosperity Statistics" on page 5 were furnished by Mrs. Lillian M. Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U.

In planning for your Frances Willard Memorial Day meetings, you will find the list of supplies given on page 16 very helpful.

The newly elected governor of Alabama will live to regret the day he missed the opportunity of his life by not signing the bill that frees Alabama from the legalized liquor traffic.

With the governor, the legislature, and the three political parties favoring statewide prohibition and the women possessed of franchise privileges, it seems perfectly safe to put a coat of white paint on the map of Idaho without waiting for the election in 1916.

West Virginia's law-makers having noted with appreciation the remarkable work done by the women in the recent statewide prohibition campaign, decided their help was needed in electing officials to enforce the prohibition law, and are taking prompt measures to give them full suffrage rights.

With two prosperous prohibition neighbors like North Carolina and Georgia, it was a foregone conclusion that South Carolina would follow the fashion of the day and take steps to outlaw the liquor traffic.

The illustration on page 6 is reproduced from one of a set of eight missionary charts, which can be purchased from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, for $1.00 per set.

STATES WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Georgia, Oklahoma, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, Virginia, Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Arizona, Alabama.

WHY NOT?

Notwithstanding the well-known beneficial effects of prohibition in towns, cities, counties and states where it has been tried, there are still those who blindly insist that should the liquor traffic be abolished the country would become bankrupt, business come to a standstill, the taxpayer be "taxed to death," and calamities swoop down upon us in clouds. None of these things have ever happened, but a certain number of pessimistic "gloomies" are quite sure they will happen as soon as prohibition becomes universal.

But the fact remains that we can never make legally right that which is morally wrong. It may be made lawful but not right, and in the end right must triumph.

To longer dally with the question is puerile, vicious, inexcusable and perilous. The voice of science declares against strong drink. The commercial world has placed the stamp of its disapproval upon it. Religion and morality have declared war against it. Experience demonstrates that its influence and effects are always and everywhere bad, and bad only, and there is no extenuating circumstance connected with it. The experience not of isolated localities only, but of entire states, proves beyond a doubt that strong drink can be entirely dispensed with, very much to the physical, moral and financial betterment of the people. Why should we longer resort to this or that makeshift instead of settling the question? Regulations do not regulate nor restrictions restrict. As long as strong drink is anywhere permitted to be manufactured the drink maker will trample every law under foot in the effort to sell the product. Why temporize while the traffic seeks to still further entrench itself in the cupidity of the morally blind, makes mad appeal to the vote-seeking politician, and meets partisanship with flaunting promise of bargain counter ballots on election day. The liquor traffic causes bodily injury, loss of health and mind to thousands, yea, millions of people; it causes moral turpitude, disintegration of moral fibre, loss of character, physical and moral degradation and ruin. It is obnoxious to the public welfare because it entails these results, and in so doing causes innumerable crimes; the destruction of countless homes and, according to the supreme court of Kansas, is always "a contagious peril to the peace and good order of society; it weakens, corrupts, debauches and slays human life and human character."

Ex-Governor Hanly of Indiana has said, "For three years I have witnessed an unending procession of women—mothers, daughters and wives—coming with broken hearts and in tears to the executive chamber to plead for clemency for loved ones who have transgressed the law and whose liberty the state has taken away. I have read hundreds of criminal records in my hotel, in my home, in the executive offices and on railway trains, and in eighty-five per cent of the cases the cause can be traced to the excessive use of intoxicating liquors."

The supreme court of Missouri has said, "The supreme principle of the common law is the public good." For the sake of the public good let law be invoked everywhere to destroy the greatest, most implacable enemy of the public good. Let prohibition of the liquor traffic be written into the organic law of the land before the year 1920 and let all the people say Amen and Amen!

FEELING THE PULSE OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

After claiming to have achieved at the November 3 elections two noteworthy victories for "personal liberty" one would naturally expect the liquor interests of the state of Ohio to be cheerful if not complacent over the situation. On the contrary, however, the Ohio correspondent of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular in the January 25 issue, writes in the following pessimistic fashion:

"The end of the first month of the new year finds the situation in Ohio anything but encouraging. The anti-liquor element is as active as ever, and having failed to destroy the licensed saloon at one blast last November in the shape of constitutional prohibition, has now settled down to a slower process of scuttling the ship by gnawing holes below the water line. In short, the enemies are in control of the statehouse, and they are also claiming the legislature. The election of a prohibition governor and a legislature he can control naturally brings all the dry patriots to the front with suggestions to further control and hamper the liquor traffic. The surest way to wreck the ship of state is to put blind prejudice at the wheel."

The state of mind of "the trade" in Pennsylvania, as pictured by the correspondent of Bonfort's undoubtedly represents the feelings of the liquor men in nearly every state. The keystone state correspondent says:

"The legislature is now in session and from now on until the adjournment the members of the trade will sit on the anxious bench fearing that inimical legislation may spring up from some unexpected source."

The editor of the Portland (Me.) Express suggests that every business man ought to have on the wall of his office a prohibition map of the United States. We suggest that at the same time he orders the map from the National W. C. T. U., he supply himself with a tube of white paint and a brush, so that each morning after reading the news of the latest prohibition victory, he may paint that particular part of the map white. This apparently is the only way to keep the map up-to-date, prohibition territory is increasing so rapidly.

NATIONAL REPORT

The National Report is ready and as there is only a limited number in stock National workers will kindly place their orders early. The Report is sent out for the cost of mailing—15 cents.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Instruction, Hartford, Wis., rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

PLANS FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION FOR FEBRUARY AND MARCH

That each local union be asked to hold a public meeting not later than March; an offering to be taken for the Campaign Fund, this money to be sent through regular channels to the state W. C. T. U. treasurer, who shall transmit one-half to the National treasurer, this fund to be known in both state and National as the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund.

That the Young People's Branches be urged to have a share in the campaign by adapting to their work plans proposed for the W. C. T. U. and by enlisting other young people to become active and intelligent workers.

In accordance with the above plan, envelopes have been prepared by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union for subscriptions to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund. These envelopes are to be furnished to the state at cost, to be sent by them free to every local union agreeing to place them in the hands of all members and as many others as possible, with the suggestion and hope that in March every local union send a contribution to this Fund, averaging ten cents per member. This money should be sent through the regular W. C. T. U. channels. Contributors of $1.00 or more will receive for one year the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL. The form of the pledge is as follows:

RACE SUICIDE

MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT, President W. Washington W. C. T. U.

There is a story of an impecunious man who married a rich wife. Soon after the ceremony the wife remarked: "We must now, my dear, consider carefully the ways and means." The newly made husband replied: "I was just thinking of that! Now, you furnish the means and I'll look after the ways." Much the same is being said to the womanhood of today by the powers that be. Women furnish the means to build a nation, the citizens without which the nation could not exist. Men provide the various and devious ways by which to destroy them. Not only upon the battlefields amid all the horrors of war do they go to destruction, but under the banner of peace the dread carnage goes on and on. When in our cities certain areas are tacitly dedicated to the destruction of our boys and girls by making indulgence in the most degrading vices safe, according to the standards of those who control the vice preserves; when money received from the sale of the virtue of our daughters and the honor of our sons percolates through various channels into the hands of those in authority as the price for protection from punishment for violation of law, and this thing goes on and on without fierce protest from all men not partners in such shame, is it not time that women refuse to bear children to be offered as a sacrifice upon the altar of vice and shame?

Why should women continue to give birth to children unless given every possible assurance that they will not be sacrificed to the lust and greed of men? Why should they continue to bring into the world children to populate the shambles of vice? Do you say that "no mother ever supposes her child will go that way?" Well as long as the shambles are tolerated, some mothers' children must go to supply them! You cannot tell —your daughter may be next—your son may soon be a victim. While painted vice openly flaunts itself along our streets and the emissaries of the vice traffic visit every rural district and haunt every place of amusement and avenue of travel, ingratiating themselves into the confidence of unsuspecting children that these may become their prey, and organized manhood does not rise in splendid might and thunder "This business shall stop," women have a right to say, "We will no longer furnish children to be thrown to the beasts of passion!"

The race suicide at which we most need to rail and shudder takes place when girls once pure and fair are exhibited in pens like beasts, their God-given beauty and charm made a thing of barter and sale; when instead of wearing the crown of honorable motherhood and nurturing a generation of noble men they become sources of contamination and disease coursing through the succeeding generations of those who yield to their fateful spell.

Women alone are not responsible for race suicide. Physicians tell us that much of this evil is due to the effects of the vices which are condoned and protected, while they plunder men and women of health, purity, happiness and hope, and rob the homes of their choicest jewels.

It is unspeakably infamous that under the Christian civilization of the twentieth century plague spots of vice are still permitted in so many towns and cities and a regularly conducted traffic in vice still goes on. Are the streets safe for your daughter? Are the traps set for your son?

LIQUOR REVENUE NOT NEEDED!

"Only last year there was expended in Raleigh, for the construction of residences, business institutions and public buildings, the stupendous sum of $1,459,221," declared Hon. M. L. Shipman, Commissioner of Labor for North Carolina, in a recent address. "And the beauty of it all is that not a dollar of this money was realized from either the sale or manufacture of intoxicating liquors. I am informed that the loss of revenue formerly received from the dispensary once in operation, here has long since been counteracted by a legitimate increase of taxable values."

LEGACY WITH ANTI-LIQUOR STRING

The filing for probate of the will of Charles Gordon Emery, a tobacco dealer of Watertown, N. Y., has brought to light the fact that there is an anti-liquor-anti-tobacco string tied to the legacy left his grandson, Charles Gordon Emery, second. The young man will receive the money only if he complies with the condition that he neither drinks nor smokes until he is thirty years old.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"AS THEY WALKED THEY TALKED"

MRS. S. R. GRAHAM CLARK

The words repeat themselves in our inmost heart—these words spoken of the two disciples on their way to Emmaus on the evening of that day of days centuries ago: "As they walked, they talked."

They could not help it. Neither can we. As we walk, we talk; as we work, we talk; as we meet socially for an afternoon call or accidentally for a moment on the street corner, we talk. And about what? Talk tells—on us and our fellows; counts, for time and—eternity. What do we talk about?

Some kind of talking bears upon it the stamp of God's approval. It is written of what was said by some who "spake often one to another," that "the Lord hearkened and heard," heard, not only because, perforce, He has to hear all the babel of voices and know all of the things—good and bad—said by His earth-children, but because He set out to hear, "hearkened," just the kind of "hearing" we covet when we have the ear of a friend. This old record states further concerning the words on that occasion, that "a book of remembrance was written" before God, to preserve what was said, for they that spoke "feared the Lord and thought upon His name."

We remember, too, in the case of the Emmaus disciples, who, as they walked, talked, that something in their conversation attracted a listener, One who joined their company and out of their fears and longings led them to facts and faith—set hope singing again in their souls. Ah, to so talk on every occasion, that we shall attract all good and holy fellowship!

As we walk we talk about what? The weather, the foibles and failures of acquaintances, the latest joke? Think of the opportunities we thus miss to scatter seeds of truth, to uplift and cheer, to aid every righteous cause! By the right use of these wayside opportunities what a harvest might be gathered, what holy impulses set in motion, what untold good accomplished. Talk about the wealth hidden in waste products! Compute, if you can, the marvelous values hidden in the by-the-way words of a single individual! Are we followers of Christ? Here we find numberless chances to say unobtrusively some true word of Him. We love our neighbor in spite of his imperfections. What an opportunity to add to the sum total of good will, rather than to haul into light his weakness. The world needs peace. Speak the peace-word. Are we friends of temperance, of prohibition? What opportunities present themselves in this way to help the cause. The reiteration of truth—the word spoken again and again—takes hold on the hearer unconsciously. He must steel himself against its influence or he will come to believe and accept it. What if every believer in National Prohibition in this country took advantage of this fact and spoke out of his convictions every day as freely, as easily, as much as a matter-of-course as if his subject were the weather or the business or political outlook? Would there not be an increase of prohibition sentiment in this country that would sweep all hindrances before it?

"As they walked, they talked." Not offensively, not attempting to thrust their opinions upon another, but in friendly, natural way saying the heart-word from the heart for the Master, the cause; for truth and humanity. As we walk let us so talk.

"What shall the harvest be?" Leave that to the Great Husbandman.

SUPERINTENDENTS

SCHOOL SAVINGS AND THRIFT

MRS. SARA LOUISA OBERHOLTZER

The School Savings Banks work, in which the W. C. T. U. has for twenty-five years been an active promoter, is now receiving its reward of acknowledged success. Massachusetts, New York and Minnesota have passed laws in regard to placing this practical thrift teaching in their public schools, Massachusetts making the instruction compulsory.

The school savings bank is admitted to be one of the most quiet and effective opponents of the liquor business. Almost all waste comes from ignorance and the lack of thrift, and the greatest known waste since the world began, except war, is the manufacture and the consumption of alcoholic liquors and the traffic in them. The grain and fruit which should be used for food is wasted by being converted into what is a menace to health and civilization. Liquor degrades the people and nations who traffic in it, wasting their time, energy, and moral understanding, and for those who consume it, it means the destruction of spiritual advancement and all that is finest, best and purest in human life.

It is to prevent waste, want and their illimitable accompaniments of crime and suffering, that we have asked that the children in the schools and in the homes should be systematically trained in saving small amounts of cash with a knowledge of the interest-bearing power and comfort-bringing power of this money that they may not fritter away thoughtlessly on cheap candy, cigarets and small extravagances that lead to habits of waste in the purchase of narcotics and drink, the pennies they possess or earn. Testimony from hundreds and hundreds of schools now using the school savings banks system proves daily the value and the effect of this practical thrift teaching.

The United States government, through its Bureau of Education, has just published a bulletin of thirty-four pages on School Savings Banks, written at the request of the United States Commissioner of Education by the World's and National W. C. T. U. superintendent of School Savings Banks and Thrift Teaching. It contains the latest statistics of the school savings of the children in the United States, a history of the work in this and other countries, an explanation of our method of collecting school savings, the opinions of educators, and much more that I hope may prove useful in the general advancement of this thrift teaching. The Bulletin is distributed by the Bureau of Education at Washington, D. C. Single copies sent free on application to it.

New figures are almost daily coming to the writer from different unions, schools and bankers. Bankers in Chicago, Ill., April 8, 1914, began establishing school savings banks in the public schools of the city, and by the close of the year they were collecting scholars' savings in forty-eight public schools; and 6399 boys and girls in these schools had deposited $5,340.90 to their bank credit.

The school savings system has recently been taken up in about fifty public schools in New York City. Nor is progress confined to large cities. From Hastings, Minn., a report just in for the first year shows the deposits of 271 pupils to be $1,430.66, an average of $5.28 per scholar, and Watertown, Conn., writes that 313 pupils have deposited $316.92; while Ephrata, Pa., has to the credit of 259, $2,750.69.

Parochial and private schools, also boys' clubs, are employing this helpful thrift teaching. In the St. Mary's school in Evanston, Ill., where the work was taken up in October, 1914, 196 pupils have deposited as their savings, $155.12.

Of the savings system introduced into the eleven Parker Cotton Mills in South Carolina, through our literature last year, Mr. L. D. Hollis of Greenville, manager of the company, writes: "The system is doing good, and seems to be of much interest to the children."

In the city high school of Columbia, S. C., where this thrift teaching was introduced last March, forty pupils deposited $50.45 in three months. The W. C. T. U. of Wappingers Falls, N. Y., placed the system in the public school just before the school term closed last spring and reports:

"Forty-four scholar depositors have saved $63.39 that might otherwise have been foolishly spent."

School savings banks were introduced into the North Troy, (Vt.) school by the superintendent this winter. Windsor, Conn., established it in ten public schools of that city. The local W. C. T. U. of Christfield, Md., placed the system in its schools and the local W. C. T. U. of Garden City, Minn., has had school savings banks put into the public school.

But lest I exceed the space allotted to a superintendent, I cannot give more of the good news. Will all of our good women who wish to aid in the increase of this thrift teaching, which makes for self-responsibility, pure, self-supporting lives and National Constitutional Prohibition, send a stamp for free literature.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK

MRS. STELLA B. IRVINE

The commission on Peace and Arbitration and the commission on Christian Education of the Federal Council of Churches of Christian America suggest that February 14 be observed as Peace Sunday, in celebration of one hundred years of peace between Great Britain and the United States. The anniversary program for use in the Sunday Schools has been prepared by Prof. Norman E. Richardson and may be used as an opening service. Copies may be secured from the Methodist Book Concern of Chicago and probably other Sunday school publishing houses will furnish it. Price $1 net per 100 with ten supplements free.

Your National superintendent is calling attention to this movement and most heartily endorses it, with the hope that our Sunday school workers will promote the plan in every way possible. Send for the literature of our Peace and International Arbitration department and make this Peace Sunday your opportunity to scatter the precious seed that will greatly help in our work for peace. Our National superintendent of the above department is Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, Winthrop Center, Maine. She will be glad to respond to your calls for help and suggestions. The literature may also be secured at our literature headquarters at Evanston, Illinois.

The news of the death of CAPTAIN EDWIN WRIGHT in action at Ypres, November 18, which has reached THE UNION SIGNAL through the English press, fills the hearts of white ribboners with sympathy for his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James W. Wright of Bedford. Mrs. Wright has long been a well beloved member of the B. W. T. A. and has many warm friends in America as well as in England.

DELAWARE'S LAW-MAKERS TO RECEIVE SIGNAL

Delaware white ribboners are paving the way for statewide prohibition by educating their law-makers in prohibition sentiment. They have ordered THE UNION SIGNAL to be sent to all of the members of their state legislature.

Mrs. Jennie Carr Pittman, vice-president-at-large of the Arkansas W. C. T. U., reports that the Prescott (Ark.) W. C. T. U. of which she is a member, sends THE UNION SIGNAL to the pastors of the churches, the superintendent of schools, to all the officers of the town, to the sheriff, his deputy and the constable.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

The Kentucky W. C. T. U. is planning to double its membership preparatory to entering upon a campaign for statewide prohibition.

At the regular quarterly meeting of the federation of Corning and Painted Post (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. it was voted to send the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL to eleven pastors of churches in both towns, also to help refurnish the Steuben county room at the Helen L. Bullock Industrial school in Elmira.

An unusually interesting mothers' meeting was held by the Fairview Park (Ind.) W. C. T. U. at the home of Mrs. Robert Gosnell. Of the fifty who were in attendance several signed the mothers' pledge, and the white ribbon was tied on the wrists of a number of children. Three new members joined the union.

The Lincolnville (Ind.) union was in no wise hampered in the celebration of National Constitutional Prohibition Day by the fact of its extreme youth, the union having been organized only last August. The meeting was well attended and new members were added to the union. The program of the day included singing by the children, a male quartet, and an address by the county president, Mrs. Josie Comstock.

The National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Day program was rendered by the Fitzgerald (Ga.) union in the evening that the men might share in the observance. Two leading attorneys of the city, one the newly elected city attorney, gave addresses. The music, which included selections by the orchestra of the Christian church and the solo, "Victory," was inspiring. At the regular meeting of this union in December it was voted to send the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL to the pastors of the seven churches of the town.

The Harrison-Doddridge (W. Va.) bicounty W. C. T. U. institute was held in Shinnston, Mrs. Ellen M. Cheuvront, county president, acting as instructor. This is one of a series of institutes planned by the executive committee. The zeal of the workers and the interest of those attending are ample testimony to the value of these institutes.

Mrs. T. Y. Murphy of Pine Bluff, Ark., is doing some "worth while" work along educational lines in her community—she recently sent in eighty-four subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union

EVANSTON ILLINOIS

The executive board of the New Jersey W. C. T. U. on January 20 met at Trenton with a full representation. An invitation to hold the next state convention at New Brunswick, Middlesex County, was accepted. Owing to the early date of the National Convention it was voted that the state convention should be held September 28-October 1. Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston, Rev. Florence Randolph, and Miss Rose Davison are to be the speakers. It was urged that New Jersey strive to come up to the standard set by the National W. C. T. U. for gain in membership.

It was voted to publish a suffrage edition of the state paper, The White Ribbon News, with an extra issue of 1,000 copies.

The Y. P. B. conference of the state is to be held at Plainfield, February 22, and the summer institute will occur at Ocean Grove, July 21-22.

The W. C. T. U. of Detroit, Mich., observed the day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition by a well arranged meeting in the Simpson M. E. church. The district president, Mrs. D. G. Jones, presided, and Mrs. Jennie E. Wilcox, the state Evangelistic superintendent, conducted the devotional services. Five denominations were represented by the pastors who participated in the program. One result of the meeting was an addition to the W. C. T. U. membership and many testified to the helpfulness of the occasion.

A W. C. T. U. worker of Montreal, Canada, Mrs. Isabella Scott, tells of the splendid use made of the leaflet entitled "A Good Substitute For Drink," published and sold by the National W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill. She says: "Just before World's Temperance Sunday we had about a dozen of the leading temperance grocers (you see we have the curse of the licensed grocery here) give a practical demonstration of the leaflet by exhibiting in their windows for an entire week the list of groceries named. Large explanatory cards were also used. The Catholic friends in St. Ann's parish, hearing of the exhibits through the newspapers, and the white ribboners themselves, followed out the idea with a view to the observance of their own special Father Matthew Day the next Sunday. Copies of the leaflet were distributed to every householder in the parish, which is in the most densely populated part of the city, and each attendant at the services of the church received a copy. At a young people's rally of the Montreal Christian Endeavor Society I exhibited all the National W. C. T. U. posters and had the large one, 'First man to be laid off,' etc., fastened to the wall. And thus the various denominations are falling into line. As Sir Francis Langelier, lieutenant governor of this province, once said: 'The question of prohibition is not one which concerns alone Catholic or Protestant, French or English, Jew or Gentile; it is a question of citizenship.'"

Miss Lillian Phelps, state lecturer for the New York W. C. T. U., spent a week in Seneca county in December, and lectured for nine unions. She spoke to crowded houses every night and held her audience wonderfully.

Mrs. Mary McArthur Tuttle

Mrs. Mary McArthur Tuttle is a daughter of Mrs. Judge Thompson of Hillsboro, Ohio, familiarly known as "Mother" Thompson. On the morning of that memorable day in December when Mrs. Thompson was seeking to know her duty in regard to participating in the movement afterwards known as the Temperance Crusade, Mary laid before her a Bible open at the 146th Psalm with the suggestion that in it her mother might find her "marching orders" for the work that lay before her. From that time forth this psalm was known as the Crusade Psalm.

OUR NATIONAL DISEASE
Caused by Coffee

Physicians know that drugs will not correct the evils caused by coffee and that the only remedy is to stop drinking it.

An Arkansas doctor says:

"I was a coffee drinker for many years and often thought that I could not do without it, but after years of suffering with our national malady, dyspepsia, I attributed it to the drinking of coffee, and after some thought, determined to use Postum for my morning drink.

"I had the Postum made carefully according to directions on the pkg. and found it just suited my taste.

"At first I used it only for breakfast, but I found myself getting so much better, that I had it at all meals, and I am pleased to say that I have been relieved of indigestion. I gained 19 pounds in 4 months and my general health is greatly improved.

"I must tell you of a young lady in Illinois. She had been in ill health for many years, the vital forces low, with but little pain. I wrote her of the good that Postum did me and advised her to try it.

"At the end of the year, she wrote me that she had gained 40 pounds in weight and felt like herself again."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

AT THEIR OWN GAME

W. D. BROWNING, Sebright, Cal.

"We are beaten," said Mary Warren, mournfully.

"Looks like it," agreed Vance Putnam, her sweetheart.

"Rockville went wet by an almost two to one vote, and I counted so much on the women's vote," said Mary, disappointedly.

"The women voted all right, God bless them," said Vance, warmly, "and don't you fret, Mary, our ancestors lost the battle of Bunker Hill but just kept on fighting until they finally won."

"They had Americans to help them fight," said Mary, "but we haven't. Vance, do you know it was the foreign born workers in your father's quarries and my father's canneries that voted so heavily against our prohibition measure?"

"I know that and more," replied her companion. "I discovered, when it was too late to help matters, that the present city government when it found out that a prohibition amendment was bound to be voted on, ordered a number of streets improved and that practically every man that came to do this work, as well as the extra men that the work required my father to hire in the quarries, were taken in hand by the saloon men and their hired politicians, who saw to it that they registered and voted against the measure."

Mary's eyes flashed. "Couldn't they be arrested for that?" she exclaimed.

"I am afraid not," replied her lover. "It was all legal, at least nobody could prove that it wasn't."

"If persuading bad citizens to come to Rockville in order to gain their votes is legal, why not persuade some good ones to come with the same end in view?" questioned Mary.

"It might work," agreed Vance Putnam hopefully.

"Might! I will make it work," declared the girl with spirit. "I know that there are plenty of sober American men and women in the eastern and southern states that would be glad to come to California and work for the same wages these drunken foreigners do."

"The foreigners are steady workers and some of them would be all right if they had the right associations," maintained Vance, "still I think your idea of introducing a few American born laborers of the better class among them, a good one, that is, if you can find them."

"I will find them," promised Mary, enthusiastically. "We will start on this scheme at once, and by the time another city election comes round we will be ready to beat the saloon politicians at their own game." Mary at once procured pen and paper, and while the victorious saloon element was celebrating its triumph in bacchanalian revelry, the two young reformers were busily writing to the heads of temperance organizations, and various other societies throughout the eastern and southern states which have for their purpose the betterment of humanity. Steady work at good wages in the quarries and cannery was promised. A few requisites were positively insisted upon—the applicants must be industrious and sober and they must be men and women with families. Mary wanted to stipulate that all applicants should be American born, but Vance pointed out that a sober worker of any other nationality would really exert more influence for good among those of his own kind. "Besides, we Americans were all foreigners once," he explained, "and we want to give the others a chance."

"It's the single laborers that live in the cheap boarding houses who mainly support Rockville's thirty-five saloons and wineries, and furnish the saloon vote," Vance declared.

"I am afraid some of the single women who work in the cannery are nearly as bad as the men," said Mary, "and I agree with you that families are what we want."

It was several months before the first strangers who were to be the vanguard of this new movement, arrived. They were mostly young couples from the south and east, with a baby in arms, in most cases, or two or three shy youngsters clinging to them.

"O you little family, you are the hope of our nation," said Vance, when he watched the first of these groups alight at the Rockville station. He and Mary at once took the newcomers in charge. Vance helped the men to find suitable houses and instructed them about the work, while Mary saw that the women became acquainted with the right kind of people.

The first of the new arrivals gave satisfaction and others were sent for. "Some of those southern chaps may not use quite as much brute force as the foreigners," said Vance, "but they use their heads more, and three of them will often load a car of rock more quickly than can three Italians or Greeks. And another thing that I pointed out to father is that we are gainers in not having to pay for injuries caused by accidents. Father has always been generous in this particular and while I would not wish him to be otherwise, it continually irritates me to see the recklessness and carelessness of laborers either partially under the influence of drink or stupid from the effects of a previous debauch. It's a wonder to me that not more of them are injured. In the last two months there have been five such accidents among old hands while the newcomers, in spite of their unfamiliarity with the work, have never so much as mashed a finger.

The careful and methodical way in which the new laborers handled their work as contrasted with the careless and inefficient labors of the drunken, sodden Italians and Greeks was so marked that the elder Putnam became interested in the young folks' scheme and even advanced money at times to enable some deserving family to come west. If there were women who wished work, Mary Warren saw to it that they were given a chance in her father's cannery, which like most such places in California, was busy nearly the entire year around canning some one of the almost countless varieties of fruit or vegetables that this marvelous state produces.

There had always been plenty of work at good wages for either sex in Rockville, but the thirty-five saloons and wineries had taken a heavy toll from the money paid for this work, so the little city was not prosperous, and the number of drunken brawls and other crimes directly traceable to liquor that occurred there, caused Rockville's sister cities to point to her as did they of old to Nazareth, as a place from which no good could come. But so gradually that few noticed it, the morals of the city began to change: there were more women and children, more homes, and fewer men living in cheap boarding houses, or hotels.

There was no decided or visible temperance crusade, and yet it became pretty well known that the Putnams preferred sober workmen who lived in their own homes to those that drank and boarded where liquor was sold.

The work at the quarries was rough and hard, and in days past Vance Putnam and his father had been forced to hire any one who seemed willing and able to perform the labor, but now Mary Warren, through active correspondence with eastern and southern societies, and individuals interested in the betterment of humanity, actually had a waiting list of desirable families who wished to come west, many of whom were working at similar work in the east at considerably less wages than the Putnams paid in their quarry. And so it happened that when the time approached for election and the pickled-in-alcohol politicians, and the saloon men, kept in office for that purpose, hoping to repeat their past tactics passed ordinances requiring the improvement of a number of streets, the Putnam quarry furnishing the crushed rock for the work, was also able to furnish the men to perform the extra labor, and the hordes of hard characters that the saloon men and their friends had lured to Rockville with the promise of good wages and plenty of whisky, found but little demand for their services; and though many of them were persuaded to register, the larger part of them drifted away before election time to the logging camps and shingle mills.

Election day came at last and, as before, the main issue at stake was whether the town was to be wet or dry. The workers on both sides were unusually active, but when the vote was finally counted it was found that the little city of Rockville had practically reversed its vote of two years before and gone dry by nearly two votes to one.

The extra workers whom the paid politicians of the saloon element had attempted to provide by luring them to Rockville with the promise of work, had been furnished from Mary Warren's waiting list, and she and Vance Putnam had seen to it that these newcomers had arrived in time to register and vote, and that they had done so.

The going dry of Rockville caused consternation in the ranks of the liquor interests and corresponding jubilation among the temperance workers of the entire state, and gave a new impetus to the statewide prohibition movement, which was then just beginning to be talked of.

When Vance Putnam, the new mayor of Rockville, points out to eastern visitors the prosperous condition of the little city, and states that there is not a saloon in its limits, he always gives his wife, who was once Mary Warren, full credit for the part she played in the city's regeneration. "She is a natural born politician," he boasts. "She beats the old time politicians at their own game."

HIS ADVICE

GERTRUDE STEVENS LEAVITT

"In the outer office there are two children who would like to see you, sir," John Strang's secretary said to him one afternoon.

"Beggars, most likely," said Mr. Strang, crossly. "By this time every clerk I have ought to know that I will not have beggars let loose here!"

The secretary smiled. "These are evidently not beggars," he explained. "They say they know you well and that if you are busy they wish to wait until you can talk to them. Shall I send them away or let them in?"

"Oh, let them come, I suppose," the man replied. As the children entered he was glad he had not sent them away for they proved to be the young son and daughter of his best and closest friend. Their home was in the suburbs of the great city and never before had they come unattended to the office section of the town.

"Well, well, Margaret and William, what on earth are you two youngsters doing down here, I should like to know," Mr. Strang at once asked.

Margaret looked at William and William looked at Margaret and finally the sturdy little girl answered.

"Dear Mr. Strang, we've come for advice."

Mr. Strang stared and smothered a laugh. If he had been asked for a pony or even an elephant—but advice! Into his private office many wise and great people had come asking for counsel, but none so young and so altogether alluring had ever been his clients before. But the faces of the children were so serious that in spite of himself the man sobered.

"Very well," said he. "I will try to do my best for you."

"Will it cost more than we can pay?" ventured little William. They say you are awfully rich and that people pay you big prices for advice. Margaret says she will give you a kiss and I will give you my new skis, that is," he added, glancing from his own small feet to the large ones of the man, "if you could use them."

"We won't worry about the pay, youngsters," laughed Mr. Strang. "I will not be too high in my charges. Now proceed. What do you wish me to help you about?"

"I'll tell you right away, sir," said Margaret. Somehow she did not feel at all afraid to open her heart to the great man whom she had always loved, but of whom she had stood a little in awe. The love light in his eyes burned brightly today and she felt she could take her troubles to him.

"Would you advise brother John to drink wine and beer and all the other things which mother thinks people ought to let alone?" she asked frankly and simply.

"What are you saying?" he cried. "Would I advise John, my namesake, to do anything his mother wishes him not to do? But go on, tell me more of this."

"It is like this," explained William. "Last night Margaret and I heard mother and John talking. We weren't listening but John was angry and excited and spoke so loudly that anyone could hear. Mother begged him not to take wine at the college dinners and the other places where he goes, and he just laughed at her and said he guessed he could do the same as Mr. Strang does, take it or let it alone. He said mother and father thought Mr. Strang was the best man in the world and he was not as fussy about some things as they were and—he was just going to follow him. He said a lot more but I forget, now."

"What did your mother say, William?", asked Mr. Strang.

"Oh, mother said you were, next to father, the finest man she knew except for one thing and she guessed you had not thought about that as much as she had, for you had no boys of your own, and she was sure that you really would not want to do anything which it wouldn't be safe for John or any other boy to do after you, and she asked John to go to you and ask your advice, for she said she knew what it would be and John was angry and he said he guessed not, he was a man now, or almost a man, and he could settle things for himself and could and would—" absolutely out of breath little William stopped.

Margaret took up the story.

"Mother cried, too, and said perhaps her big boy was not like you and she could not help worrying, and then William and I decided that if John would not come and ask you we would get the advice and give it to him and so we came."

John Strang was very silent for a while and then he said, gravely:

"You did well to come. I will see John tonight and give him the advice which from this hour I can honestly give to any boy, and that is, that every one is safer and better and stronger if he never uses any form of alcoholic drink."

The eyes of the children danced, and then Margaret said, wistfully, "Will the pay we thought of be enough?"

The strong man bent to the lips of the child and then turned to her brother.

"Keep your skis, William," he said, and instead give me a handshake with the promise which I also give to you, that we'll never in our lives, from this day forward, touch wine or beer or cider or any such thing."

The small hand of the child was laid in the strong hand of the man and Margaret snuggled close to brother and friend, and all three felt satisfied and happy.

CONNECTICUT MAKING PROHIBITION SENTIMENT RAPIDLY

W. C. T. U. GAINING IN MEMBERSHIP AND INFLUENCE

Special Correspondence

Immediately following the annual convention of the Connecticut W. C. T. U. the local unions began their varied activities. The white ribboners in many of the small towns annually give a reception to teachers and others connected with the educational system. These are very pleasant occasions and bring the purposes of the organization to the notice of those who might not otherwise know of its plan of work. Among the unions holding these receptions are Wethersfield, Warehouse Point, Windsor and Thompsonville. Windham county has enjoyed the services of Mrs. Emma Graves Dietrick, National organizer and lecturer, for a campaign of one week. It included public meetings, Bible readings, addresses to over a thousand school children, two institutes and many other things. Small wonder that the county is counting up its new members; it already has thirty-two with more coming! Willimantic used the "John Barleycorn" moving pictures as part of the work in its no-license campaign and has presented the book, "John Barleycorn," to the men's club of the First Congregational church and to the local Y. M. C. A. This union is continuing its excellent poster displays and is getting good results from efforts in that direction.

Hartford county inaugurated a poster campaign directly after the state convention. Mrs. Welles, the county president, furnished to each union sample posters for the first output, and arrangements are completed for changing the posters each month, a method which costs money—hence, food and rummage sales galore! With the assistance of the state, several new legions have been organized in the county. Forestville has a fine new legion of about fifty members with Mrs. John Hall as leader. A number of medal contests have already been held, the first one introduced by Hartford union being a fine success.

New Haven county white ribboners came together in annual convention December 1 at Wallingford. A profitable meeting is reported, with Mr. H. H. Spooner as the speaker of the evening. Westville held a "penny portion" supper, a novelty which proved so "drawing" that more suppers are to follow. New members are being secured in this county, which includes some of the most active unions of the state, notably Meriden, the one union that holds meetings each week.

Bridgeport union is the home of the state L. T. L. secretary, and this union mothers ten companies with a total membership of nearly 500 children. Recently the union kept "open house" for the legions, which include Hungarian, Italian, Swedish, Lithuanian and Jewish children. Each legion rendered a brief program and passed out to the lawn, where refreshments were served. Two hundred and forty-five children were in line. Following this exhibition another legion was organized with thirty-seven charter members.

A concerted effort is being made to secure new members and the unions very generally are reporting success. Hartford union has just ended a membership contest, the results of which will be known soon. Medal contests and prize essays are being utilized in securing new members. Altogether Connecticut is gaining not only in membership but in influence.

For some time the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad officials have prohibited all liquors in the dining cars on all routes. Quite recently an order went into effect prohibiting train men or porters from obtaining alcoholic liquors for patrons of the road. Now comes the report that bars in all the railroad stations on the line will be discontinued at the expiration of the licenses. Prohibition is fast becoming an economic factor in the affairs of corporations in Connecticut. Years of patient endeavor on the part of the W. C. T. U. have helped along this condition.

CHIPS FROM THE PINE TREE STATE

Special Correspondence

Maine unions are promptly responding to the call for 1,000 new members as apportioned to the state at the last National Convention. A new union has been organized at Vinalhaven by state field worker, Miss Esther Gilman, and a new Y. P. B. at Gardiner, by Mrs. W. E. Guild. An L. T. L. at Sandy Point, not hitherto reported, has been organized and is being "mothered" by Mrs. Sadie H. Bates.

In addition to Miss Gilman, the new state Y. P. B. secretary, Miss Esther Winchester, since her return from the Atlanta Convention, has been at work organizing both W's and Y's and helping in every way possible. It is a cause for heartfelt rejoicing that these and other young women have "come up to the help" of their older sisters.

The National Convention was splendidly reported by the state president, Mrs. Althea G. Quimby, at a reception given her by the Portland union at the Maine state headquarters. In Turner, Mrs. Quimby's home town, on January 13, another largely attended reception was given her. Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt was the guest of honor and spoke of the life and work of her mother, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, so long both state and National president. The state superintendent of Work among Lumbermen is happy because of larger opportunities for service through the Y. M. C. A. Woods secretary. Mr. Clarke has every facility given him by the large lumber companies for transportation to the territory in which he works, and can reach many more men than could Mrs. Bigney alone. He says he can use a ton or more of reading matter before spring and is glad to know that the W. C. T. U. can help secure it, as well as furnish comfort bags. Mr. Clarke gives "first aid" to sick or injured, and, if necessary, takes men to the Y. M. C. A. hospital at Greenville. He visits the various camps with lantern views and gramophone. (His address is A. B. Clarke, Woods Camp secretary, Care Y. M. C. A., Greenville Junction, Maine.)

National Constitutional Prohibition Day was widely observed. In Belfast the pastors took the topic for the mid-week prayer meeting. In the larger cities, meetings were held. In one little country town, where lives only one W. C. T. U. woman, the pastor and people helped, and two neighboring unions were invited to a picnic dinner and afternoon service. In the evening the Grange and Eastern Star assisted in the program. In all, four towns were represented.

However the newspapers may announce the vote in Congress on National Constitutional Prohibition as a defeat, those who have labored for it and who have been in the work for years, and can feel the pulse of things, know it is a victory, a harbinger of the good time coming in when the map will be all white by Federal enactment.

The institutes are good places in which to increase courage and knowledge of all our enterprises, and since the state convention several have been held, resulting in a gain of fellowship and membership. The organizing institute, as outlined by the state superintendent, is sure to be a good thing.

For a year or two the women have been securing signatures to the suffrage enrollment cards, and now the state superintendent issues a last call to the unions to at once secure all the names possible, as it is probable the subject will come before the legislature this winter. Whatever the outcome the discussion will be educative, and in the end equal voting privileges are certain to be given to the women.

TEXAS WORKING TOWARD STATE AND NATIONAL PROHIBITION

Special Correspondence

Texas W. C. T. U. is not discouraged but is going straight ahead towards statewide prohibition. Our defeat was simply a blessing delayed. We are "agitating, educating and organizing" for the future. We are still working, also for nationwide prohibition. Our new governor has taken his seat. He has declared his intention to veto all temperance legislation. We suppose that means "political peace and legislative rest," the great desire of our ex-governor. Our women rejoice in our brave, tried and trusted Senator Sheppard. In Texas phraseology, "We shore do admire him."

The Fort Worth W. C. T. U. held a splendid meeting in St. Paul's church, in celebration of National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Day. The devotionals were conducted by Mrs. Lou Prickett and Mrs. J. L. Jaccard had charge of the music. Among those who took part in the program were Mrs. Walton who led in prayer and Mrs. Goodman who made an excellent talk. Mrs. Curtis who was in the city making a flying visit to her parents gave an inspiring talk on the Hobson Amendment. She is keeping a list of those who favor the amendment and instructed us to keep them in mind. Among other things she mentioned a suffrage parade in which a banner was used which read, "Catching Up With China" and said we might have one inscribed, "Catching Up With Russia."

Rev. F. E. Gordon, pastor of the church, gave a fine talk. Two songs were contributed by a trio of singers from the Baptist Theological Seminary. Rev. Atticus Webb reviewed the progress of prohibition from the early beginnings to the present time. Probably the best thing was an account of the great meeting of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association at Topeka, Kansas, given by Mr. Everett Williams, a student at the Texas Christian University of Fort Worth, who was a delegate to it. Three thousand young people have pledged themselves to do personal work for the cause during their vacations. At the last meeting of the all day Federation of Missionary Societies the W. C. T. U. of Fort Worth was better represented than any other organization. Two beautiful letters of thanks for comfort bags from sailors on the battleship "Texas" were read recently at a meeting of the union. A W. C. T. U. exhibit is being planned for next month in co-operation with other local organizations and the State University in a week of "Home Economics" for northern Texas.

Austin union is preparing to hold a bazaar of salable articles. A postal card report of every meeting is sent to the state reporter and Mrs. Clara N. Murray, the local Press superintendent, never fails to put on record the union's achievements.

Terrell has engaged the services of Mrs. Curtis. She will deliver a lecture before the high school and Mrs. T. P. Davis, the president of the union, is planning to present a large framed picture of Miss Willard to the school. The portrait of our sainted leader is to be found in a great many of the schools of Texas.

The state W. C. T. U. has joined a school of Missions recently organized, which will meet annually. Mrs. Curtis will have definite time and theme each morning and is to be the speaker at a Sunday evening mass meeting.

Miss Todd is in Texas speaking on equal suffrage. She will be in the state a month and will visit Corsicana, Tyler and other points. She spoke in Dallas recently. Everywhere she is receiving much attention and has good audiences.

Our state convention will convene in Houston the last week in April. Mrs. Curtis will visit as many unions as possible before that time.

Will You Come Home Sober, Papa?

A NEW TEMPERANCE SONG BY REV. J. C. HARRISON

of the ALABAMA CONFERENCE. This is one of the best Temperance songs written in years. Its beautiful story of a young girl's plea to her father is really a Temperance sermon, while its melody is one of the sweetest ever written. Ask your music dealer for it, or send 10c to the publisher. P. J. Howley Music Co., 102 West 42nd Street, New York. Special rates on quantities to Societies or Temperance Organizations.

VIRGINIA VITALITIES

Special Correspondence

This is the season of Institutes for the Virginia county unions. The state president is in the field much of the time conducting these schools of methods and reports very successful institutes.

The state mid-year executive will be held in Petersburg about February 20.

Miss Christine I. Tinling, National lecturer, is afield in Virginia this month, pushing her special work in the larger schools. Radford, Salem and Roanoke have already had the benefit of her services and others will be visited according to schedule. Miss Tinling goes to New Jersey at the close of her engagement here, but will return on February 24 to represent the W. C. T. U. at the state Anti-Saloon League meeting in Richmond.

The Isle of Wight county W. C. T. U. has engaged Mrs. Lillian A. Shepherd for a series of stereopticon lectures, to be given the latter part of this month.

Mrs. S. Hortense Ropp, Virginia's eloquent campaign orator, has been ill for several weeks but is said to be convalescent. She will not, however, be in the field again this winter.

Mrs. Mary C. Newton, National organizer and Virginia's pioneer speaker, is spending the winter in Florida, where, reports say, she is boosting "statewide."

The Norfolk county W. C. T. U. held a most instructive institute in conjunction with its quarterly convention. Several of the unions are pushing Mothers' meetings in connection with the Juvenile Court movement which is being agitated in the city.

James City county unions held public meetings on Thanksgiving day with "community feasts" and speaking as special features. The meeting at Jamestown (of Capt. John Smith fame) was addressed by Mrs. Helen H. Green who later spoke on "The Abstinent Community" before the Civic League. Norge, a Scandinavian settlement that boasts one of the best unions in mid-western Virginia, gave a turkey dinner that was attended by nearly 100 members and friends.

Henrico county secured the state secretary, Mrs. Lillian A. Shepherd, who gave a fine National Convention report at its last convention. Several other counties have used this report and have pronounced it the best they have ever heard.

Miss Georgia McKean, editor of the Virginia Call, who has been ill for some time, is giving her usual prompt attention to the state paper.

STRONG WORDS OF CALIFORNIA GRAND JURY

One of the members of the recent Los Angeles grand jury was Mr. Stephen H. Taft, husband of the superintendent of Christian Citizenship for the Southern California W. C. T. U. Mr. Taft, who is hale and hearty in his ninetieth year, is probably the oldest man who ever sat on a grand jury. He has been a staunch prohibitionist all his life and he was a member of the committee on juvenile court delinquency, county hospital and farm which ascertained that from 75 to 90 per cent of the inmates of these institutions were there because of alcoholic liquors. The report of the grand jury was as follows: "With reference to the relation of the drink habit to public welfare the jury says that reports coming to its various committees whose investigations pertained to the dependent, delinquent and criminal classes, emphasize anew the recognized fact that the liquor traffic and its resulting drunkenness and demoralization are the largest factors in swelling the number of these classes and entailing upon society an onerous burden of taxation resulting therefrom. This consideration, with the loss of human efficiency and the debasement of manhood and womanhood involved, should press home to the public conscience the inquiry as to what can be done for the curtailment and extinction of the evil. We recognize that this is a difficult problem which cannot be settled by pronunciamentos, and we endorse no hobby and recommend no partisan scheme on this line, but we commend the question to the serious thought and considerate action of every citizen, in the hope that steady and speedy progress may be made toward the right solution of a problem so vital to the interests of society and the welfare of the nation."

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can be Strong, Vigorous — full of Life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Clear Skin.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can increase or reduce your weight.

I no longer need to say what "I can do" but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 70,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.

What My Pupils Say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion, it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me. Last year I weighed 216 lbs., this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver. I can breathe now, too. It is surprising how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 lbs. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses and my catarrh is so much better. Isn't that good?"

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My interesting book tells how to stand and walk correctly and contains other information of vital interest to women. You are welcome to it. Write for it. It is FREE. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend. I have had a wonderful experience and I'd like to tell you about it. I am at my desk daily from 8 until 5.

A PHYSIOLOGICAL AND SOCIOLOGICAL MENACE

Important evidence with regard to liquor and the public health was brought before the committee on the regulation of the liquor traffic in the District of Columbia by Professor Irving Fisher of Yale University. Prof. Fisher showed—

That the lowering of the death-rate in London has been exactly parallel to the lowered consumption of liquor in that city.

That the lessening of liquor consumption in Sweden has been followed by a remarkable lowering of its already low death-rate.

That alcohol, even in moderate quantity, actually lessens efficiency, mental and physical.

That alcohol greatly increases the susceptibility to disease.

That alcohol is an important cause of insanity.

That alcohol lessens the average length of life, as shown by the reports of insurance companies and friendly societies.

That alcohol increases poverty.

These are the findings of cold science, not the testimony of anti-alcohol enthusiasts.

Latest Legislative Victories

ARKANSAS

Statewide prohibition bill passes both houses of the Arkansas legislature. Resolution providing for submission of woman suffrage amendment also adopted by legislature.

NEW YORK

The resolution providing for submission of the woman suffrage amendment, which had already passed the 1913 legislature, last week was adopted by both houses of the New York legislature. The question will go to the voters of the state at the next general election.

TENNESSEE

Favorable action taken by the house and senate of the Tennessee legislature on woman suffrage resolution. Before submission the question must be referred to another legislature.

MASSACHUSETTS

Bill calling for referendum to the people of amendment providing for equal suffrage passed the senate of the Massachusetts legislature by a vote of 33 to 3.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

SENATE WORKS NIGHTS ON SHIP-PURCHASE BILL—ELECTION EXPENDITURES BEING INVESTIGATED—SENATE SUB-COMMITTEE REPORTS FAVORABLY ON SHEPPARD-HOBSON AMENDMENT—SPEAKER CLARK ENFORCES RULE AGAINST SMOKING IN THE HOUSE.

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D.C.

This week has been one of turmoil in Congress. In the House, the Naval bill held right of way, except on Thursday, when the Immigration bill, with the President's veto, was taken up, and occupied the attention of the House until evening. Party lines were completely lost sight of, Republicans standing with the President, and ardent Democrats denouncing his veto. Speeches were in order the entire day, the vote being taken at 5:30; total voting, 397; necessary two-thirds majority, 266; votes cast for passing over veto, 261; for sustaining veto, 136. So the vote to pass over the President's veto was lost by five votes. The vote was announced amid great excitement.

The Naval bill, too, has occasioned great excitement in the House, the "big navy" men, with every possible effort, laboring for the largest appropriation possible, while the "little navy" men were equally zealous in urging economy. As yet no decision has been reached.

Senate Works Nights on Ship-Purchase Bill

The Senate is still in the throes of distress over the Ship-purchase bill, although the filibuster of the Republicans has been broken. On Monday, seven Democrats supported the motion to recommit the administration Ship-purchase bill, which has occasioned the bitterest feeling on the part of their brother Democrats.

During the week feeling has grown more and more bitter, and apparently has driven more deeply the wedge that promises to disrupt the Democratic party. Sessions run on into the evening, time of adjournment for the day being left to the condition of things, and, evening after evening, the bright lighting of the dome of the Capitol, and the still brighter lights in the cupola, show the people for miles around that Congress is still in session. Some of the sessions extend into the "wee sma hours," or until the coming of a new day. Cots were ordered in committee rooms, and even the President's room was invaded for the use of wearied Senators.

The White House is still confident that the Ship-purchase bill will go through the Senate, and ridicules the idea that the administration, if the bill becomes a law, will purchase ships, the validity of which is in question, or which will bring trouble.

Election Expenditures Being Investigated

The Senate committee on privileges and elections is in session for the investigation of expenditures in contests for the election of United States Senators in at least five states.

The defeated candidate in Pennsylvania charges that large sums of money were expended in the campaign in that state, which resulted in the election of Senator Penrose.

Captain Hobson has charged that he was defeated by the expenditure of a large fund collected by liquor men in all sections of the country. These charges and other statements bearing upon campaign expenses in Alabama will be submitted to the committee.

Representative Knowland, the Republican candidate for Senator from California, contends that he was defeated by the liquor interests because of his vote for the Webb-Kenyon bill.

The activity of the liquor interests will also be urged as the basis of investigation of the campaign in Indiana. As a result of disclosure of conditions in that state, several political workers have been indicted, and office-holders removed.

Wholesale trafficking in postoffices, and other Federal patronage, will figure in the charges of corruption in South Dakota.

Senate Sub-Committee Reports Favorably Sheppard-Hobson Amendment

The Sheppard-Hobson amendment was reported favorably by the Senate subcommittee to the full judiciary committee, but, owing to the peculiar conditions existing in the Senate requiring the presence of every Senator, no meeting up to this time has been called by the chairman.

The Senate committee to investigate the charges made by Senator Jones against the District of Columbia excise board, and also to investigate the manner in which the Excise law is enforced in the District, has been delayed in its proceedings, but Senator Sheppard, who is chairman, assured me this morning that the committee would be called at the very earliest opportunity. Two members resigned, and others had to be chosen. The committee consists now of Senator Sheppard, Texas; Dillingham, Vermont, Saulsbury, Delaware; Hughes, New Jersey; Jones, Washington.

Speaker Clark Enforces Rule Against Smoking in the House

Speaker Clark, late yesterday afternoon, scolded his colleagues, as a schoolmaster chides errant children, because some of the House members were violating the rules by smoking in the Chamber. The Speaker, a strict observer of the House rules in every sense of the word, rose upon the rostrum, gavel in hand, at the close of a vote on one of the bills, and said: "Before taking up the next bill, the Chair desires to make a statement. The rules of the House prohibit smoking inside this hall. Complaint has been made more than once about the violation of this rule. There is plenty of space outside for gentlemen to smoke, and while the Chair is about it, he will suggest it is a good thing for members to keep their feet down from the tops of seats." Hereafter it will be a bold Congressman who will dare to rest his feet on the seat in front of him, or bring a lighted cigar or pipe into the House Chamber.

Liquor Dealers Call for Compensation

The twenty-second annual conference of the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Association has been in session in Washington this week. The resolutions adopted call for compensation for those whose business may be brought to an end by the voting for prohibition by the people of any community, declare that National Prohibition would be a curtailment of the sovereign rights of the individual state, that it would outlaw a recognized and lawful business, that the liquor trade exists only in response to the demands of the American people for its products, that Congress should at once withdraw the appropriation of $40,000 made for the Non-Alcoholic Congress, to be held in this country during the present year, etc.

Representative Bartholdt of Missouri made an appeal for personal liberty at the closing session, adding that the inception of the National movement against liquor dealing is a subterfuge of "trusts and trust magnates" to divert the public mind from their own interests, and center it on the question of prohibition.

First Report of Infant Mortality by Federal Children's Bureau

The first report of its study of infan mortality has been made public by th Federal Children's Bureau. It was base on conditions found by the Bureau's ir vestigators in Johnstown, Pa.

While it carefully avoids conclusion the report points out that in the poore sections of Johnstown the death rat was 271 per 1,000 babies, or more tha five times that in the best residenti sections of the city.

Babies whose fathers earned $10 week or less, the report says, died at tl rate of 256 per 1,000, while those who fathers earned $25 or more a week di at the rate of 84 per 1,000.

Artificially fed babies died at a mu more rapid rate than breast-fed babi Only 46.6 babies per 1,000 died und one year of age, when breast-fed for least three months, as against 165.8 1,000 who died when fed with artific foods.

Where mothers were employed a la part of the time in heavy work bab died at a more rapid rate. In one gr of nineteen mothers whose babies died, fifteen had been keeping lodg In houses where water had to be tained from outside, the death rate found to be 198 per 1,000, as against per 1,000 in houses where water supplied by pipes.

ARKANSAS SIXTEENTH PROHIBITION STATE

LAW GOES INTO EFFECT JANUARY 1, 1916

On January 1, 1916, Arkansas becomes a prohibition state. On February 1, the lower house of the legislature by a vote of 74 to 22 passed a bill providing for statewide prohibition, and on February 5, the measure was passed by the senate by a vote of 33 to 2. The house bill provided for its going into effect on June 1, 1915, and as amended by the senate the date is fixed at January 1, 1916. The measure as amended has been concurred in by the house. Governor Hays, in his recent inaugural address, strongly recommended the passage of this law.

Suffrage Resolution Adopted

On the same day that the house acted on the prohibition bill, the senate by a vote of 23 to 12 adopted a woman suffrage resolution, which at a special night session on February 5, by a vote of 51 to 19 was approved by the vote of the lower house.

NEW YORK SUFFRAGISTS TAKEN BY SURPRISE

Only One Present When Vote Was Taken in Senate

Without opposition the woman suffrage resolution passed the assembly of the New York legislature on February 3 by a vote of 114 to 0, and on February 5, by a vote of 34 to 0, was adopted by the senate. The measure having already been favorably acted upon by a previous legislature now goes to the people at the next general election.

The suffragists of the state had planned to attend in large numbers on February 9, when the resolution was scheduled for passage in the senate, but the action of that body was so unexpected that only one woman advocate of the cause is reported to have been present. This fortunate individual, according to the press, is Miss Alberta Hill, who had been in Albany arranging for the passage of the resolution, and lost no time in telephoning and telegraphing her coworkers when the event took place.

MR. BRYAN ASSAILS LIQUOR TRAFFIC IN INDIANAPOLIS SPEECH

Prophesying that victory for the woman suffrage movement was assured and stating it as his conviction that the Democratic party cannot afford to line up with the liquor trade, Secretary of State Bryan denounced John Barleycorn in a speech at a banquet of Democratic editors in Indianapolis, on the evening of February 4.

"I want to tell you Democratic editors that the Democratic party cannot afford to stand with the brewer and saloonkeeper as against woman suffrage," Mr. Bryan is reported to have said. "A man is known by the company he keeps, and I want to tell you now that the man who prefers the saloonkeeper's company to that of his wife will not be in the Democratic party long. If we are going to favor woman suffrage, we might as well go the whole hog and drive the saloon out of politics."

NEW JERSEY ASSEMBLY VOTES FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE

By a unanimous vote the lower house of the New Jersey legislature passed the joint resolution providing for a woman suffrage amendment, on February 1. The resolution now goes to the senate. Both houses passed the resolution last year, and in the event of the senate acting favorably upon it, the amendment will be submitted to the voters for ratification at the next general election. The principal speaker for the measure in the house was Assemblyman Peacock, who insisted that if women were qualified to hold more than a majority of the stock of the Pennsylvania railroad and to own thirty per cent of the real estate of New Jersey, he saw no reason why they should not be allowed to exercise the right of suffrage.

WHAT LINCOLN REALLY SAID

The righteous indignation of admirers of Abraham Lincoln has been frequently aroused by the use of his name by the liquor interests, as an advocate of their unholy traffic. Not long since a certain brewing company had the insolence to use a picture of Abraham Lincoln splitting rails to advertise a certain brand of beer, and during the recent statewide campaigns statements in favor of the liquor traffic, which purported to be quotations from his addresses, were displayed in posters or used in publicity articles.

> Let us make it as unfashionable to withhold our names from the temperance cause as for husbands to wear their wives' bonnets to church, and instances will be just as rare in the one case as the other.—Abraham Lincoln, Feb. 22, 1842.

Not only was Abraham Lincoln, the great-hearted friend of the people, a total abstainer, but he was an outspoken advocate of the cause. On September 29, 1863, he said, "When I was a young man I made temperance speeches and to this day I have never by my example belied what I then said." In the same speech he definitely allied himself with our cause when he said, "In the advocacy of the cause of temperance you have a friend and sympathizer in me," declaring it as his belief that "Intemperance is one of the greatest, if not the very greatest, of all evils among mankind."

Realizing the enormity of the evil which was threatening the very life of the nation he gave his approval to no half-way measures in eradicating it. On January 23, 1858, he urged, "Let every friend of temperance frown upon all efforts at regulating the cancer. Any license law, however stringent, must eventually increase the evil."

The vital importance of the great anti-liquor movement was often referred to by Mr. Lincoln. In a speech made by him on Washington's birthday, 1842, he said:

"What a noble ally this temperance resolution to the cause of political freedom; with such an aid its march cannot fail to be on and on, till every son of earth shall drink in rich fruition the sorrow-quenching draughts of perfect liberty." And again in the same speech, "If the relative grandeur of revolutions shall be estimated by the great amount of human misery they alleviate and the small amount they inflict, then indeed will this be the grandest the world shall ever have seen."

But the opponents of prohibition frequently say they admit that at an early period in his life Mr Lincoln did speak for temperance but in his maturer years he changed his mind, and they cite as proof that it was with his consent Congress passed an act providing for the raising of revenue from the liquor traffic. Those who were close to the great Emancipator during those trying days know that his soul rebelled against this action, and he consented to it only as a war necessity and upon the positive assurance of the leaders in Congress that as soon as the war was over the law would be repealed.

> The liquor seller who has been denounced as the only sinner has been only acting as their (the people's) authorized agent in filling the public treasury at the expense of the ruin of the liquor drinker, and the poverty and misery of his family.—Abraham Lincoln, Jan. 2, 1853.

One of the most convincing evidences of Mr. Lincoln's continued opposition to the drink traffic is given by his intimate friend, Major J. B. Merwin. On the very last day of the great President's earthly life, in a private conversation, Mr. Lincoln said to him:

"Merwin, we have cleared up a colossal job. Slavery is abolished. After reconstruction, the next great question will be the overthrow and suppression of the legalized liquor traffic, and you know my head and my heart, my hand and my purse will go into this contest for victory. In 1842, less than a quarter of a century ago, I predicted that the day would come, when there would be neither a slave nor a drunkard in the land. I have lived to see one prediction fulfilled. I hope to live to see the other"

LEGISLATIVE NEWS

North Dakota

The house and senate of the North Dakota legislature on February 5 passed the Everson resolution endorsing the Hobson amendment and commending Members of Congress from North Dakota for voting for the measure.

Indiana

On February 4, a statewide prohibition bill was introduced in the lower house of the Indiana legislature.

Massachusetts

A bill calling for a referendum to the people of an amendment providing for equal suffrage passed the senate of the Massachusetts legislature by vote of 33 to 3. The bill had passed the previous legislature and if adopted by the lower house goes to the people.

Tennessee

The house and senate of the Tennessee legislature have voted favorably on a woman suffrage resolution. Before submission to the people, the measure must pass another legislature.

Oregon

The lower house of the Oregon legislature, by a vote of fifty-eight to two, passed the Anderson bill, a measure defining and providing for the enforcement of the prohibition law.

Missouri

A bill has been introduced in the Missouri legislature by the Missouri W. C. T. U., authorizing cities containing 5,000 or more inhabitants to appoint women as members of the police force.

Another brewery has gone into bankruptcy! Creditors of the Tabor Brewing Company of Chicago have filed a petition in the United States District Court asking for a receiver. Liabilities are said to be nearly the amount of capitalization, $100,000. The failure coming only a week after the bankruptcy of the Tosetti Brewing Company of Chicago is significant.

A NOTABLE WEEK IN COLORADO

GOVERNOR, ATTORNEY GENERAL, SPEAKER OF HOUSE, AND JUDGE OF COURT OF APPEALS GUESTS AND SPEAKERS AT W. C. T. U. BANQUET

ANTOINETTE ARNOLD HAWLEY

"A Horse Show And What Came Of It," might not look well as a caption, but when one realizes that it meant reduced rates all over this big state, and, therefore, a possibility of getting a goodly number of white ribboners together in the early days of the legislature—one has a glimpse of its usefulness—outside of the stadium.

I noted first, of course, that all-day conference at headquarters where a splendid Montana young woman had her eyes opened to what she could do when she got back to her saloon-governed city; where a Kansas woman rejoiced our hearts with evidences of our work over the border; where women from successful unions modestly gave their unsuccessful sisters hints of how to do it, and where every department, almost, patted itself on the back as the factor in making prohibition converts.

Then the luncheon with wit and wisdom chasing each other around the long table, followed by a legislative evening full of enlightenment about "Our Bill" and our strong helpers in the Capitol; to say nothing of a live woman senator, who explained and courteously coveted our support for her bill, patterned after the Iowa "Abatement of Nuisances" law.

The next morning the out-of-towners spent looking after their members in the house and senate, but at noon the sixth annual legislative breakfast of the Central union, at the Auditorium Hotel, drew over two hundred to its festive tables. Why? Because for the first time in this state,—perhaps in any state,—the governor, the attorney general, the speaker of the house, and a judge of the court of appeals were guests and speakers at a W. C. T. U. banquet.

Our own great leader, Mrs. Hungerford, in forceful speech told of our long-time nation-wide legislative activities, and our new Jubilee song never seemed so jubilant as when sung by Mrs. Jessie V. Bond and that many-voiced chorus.

The next day a conference of local presidents at headquarters brought out illuminating facts and methods that could but be helpful to every one present, so we are sure this particular horse show will live forever.

Nor was this all. It having been rumored that a certain "good temperance senator" was blind to the many-sided virtues of white ribboners, it was decided to "show him." Hence a reception to the wives of state officers, legislators and supreme court judges was given in a lovely home, where the governor's wife, with a white ribbon on her pretty gown, and her sweet young face aglow, stood in line with the state officers to meet the guests from every part of the state.

One can, of course, imagine the white ribbons and roses, the flags and pennants, the refreshments and music, the snapshots of reporters, and the still hunt for members, but our (sanctified) pride in this culmination of the week's program—who shall tell it?

Prohibition Legislation in New York

Special Correspondence

At the meeting of the Allied Forces for Civic and Moral Betterment, held in New York City in January, it was decided to have introduced a bill for statewide prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes.

The bill was introduced in the senate by Hon. T. B. Wilson, and in the house by Hon. E. C. Gillette. It has been referred to the committee on taxation and retrenchment in the senate, and the excise committee in the house. A hearing will be granted and every effort made to secure a favorable report. There is an increasing sentiment in New York for pushing statewide prohibition, as a means of correlating the work for National Constitutional Prohibition.

Assemblyman M. E. Tallett has introduced in the assembly a bill requiring the daily reading of the Bible in all the public schools of the state. This bill has been reported to the assembly committee on education, and we shall do everything in our power to secure its passage.

Another bill to prohibit the sale of liquor in all third class cities where a college or university is located, in whole or in part, and which is supported wholly by the state, has been introduced. This bill will apply only under present conditions to the city of Ithaca, the seat of Cornell University.

Reform Measures Under Consideration By Oklahoma Legislature

MRS. ABBIE B. HILLERMAN, President Oklahoma W. C. T. U.

State headquarters were established in Oklahoma City during the legislative session, with Mrs. Cora D. Hammett, state corresponding secretary, in charge. I spent three weeks at the capital working for an up-to-date scientific temperance instruction law and for a bill raising the age of consent from fourteen to sixteen. The scientific temperance instruction measure passed the house and senate unanimously. The age of consent bill will come up for hearing soon. It is in the form of an amendment placing the age where it was before last session. An anti pool hall and billiard hall bill created consternation among the antis when it passed the house by a vote of 67 to 24. The war is on in the senate. Owners of large places of amusement are there to fight it. Many of these public places are joints as well. One day last week a shower of telegrams from churches, W. C. T. U.'s and other organizations and individuals, indicated the widespread interest in this bill. Mrs. Hammett and I appeared before the committee on appropriations in the interest of the state training school for girls. A suffrage resolution will probably be passed at this session submitting this question to a vote of the people. This is championed by the suffrage association, and the W. C. T. U. will gladly co-operate in the campaign. These and many other things have claimed our attention during the busy days at headquarters. We wish to acknowledge the courteous treatment on the part of the members of house and senate.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF DELAWARE LEGISLATURE LISTEN TO SUFFRAGE SPEECHES

Special Correspondence

The suffrage cause in Delaware is taking a step forward. Aside from headquarters in Wilmington, there have been headquarters opened in Dover, near the state house, where the legislature is now in session. Miss Mabel Vernon, who helped win the Nevada suffrage victory, is in charge at Dover. Mrs. Florence Bayard Hilles, daughter of the late Thomas F. Bayard, is to take a touring party of suffrage workers on a campaign through the state. Meetings are being held in every town in the state. The day the legislature opened a delegation of women came from Wilmington and were met at Dover station by another delegation, who formed a procession with band, flags and shields and decorated autos, and marched to the state house and thence to the new headquarters where speeches were made to a large crowd from the autos.

On January 21 the suffrage bill was granted a hearing, which was to have been before the revised statutes committee which had the bill in hand. But the crowd which gathered to hear the discussion was so large that the speaker of the house adjourned business to allow them to assemble in the house and the hearing was really before the whole body, as the senate also adjourned and many of the senators came over to hear the speeches.

Mrs. Martha Cranston, Delaware's pioneer suffragist, who has stood for twenty years as the superintendent of Franchise of the Delaware W. C. T. U., made the first speech, giving a brief history of the cause since 1869. The other speakers were Mrs. Lila Wilson Aron, Mrs. Florence Bayard Hilles, and Miss Mabel Vernon, who acted as chairman.

The speeches were received with applause from members of the house and senate, as well as the gallery. One could observe a great change in the sentiment in the last two years and men were free to admit that they believed each body had a majority in favor of the cause and that the bill would pass at this session.

Receptions are being held weekly in an effort to enlist uninterested women, especially the business girls and women. Some of the fashionable set are giving suffrage teas, and sentiment in favor of "votes for women" is being rapidly made.

STUDENTS OF UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH CAROLINA DECLARE FOR STATEWIDE PROHIBITION

In view of the fact that the question of statewide prohibition will probably come up for vote of the people of South Carolina during 1915, the lower house of the legislature already having taken favorable action, the attitude of the students of the state university is of interest. Resolutions recently adopted by the student body are in part as follows:

Whereas, we, the student body of the University of South Carolina, have had it brought to our official notice that there does now exist, and is operating in the state of South Carolina an organized movement looking to the establishment in the near future of statewide prohibition; and,

Whereas, we believe this movement to be for the moral, economic, and political uplift of the state and for the promotion of the welfare of its citizens; and,

Whereas, we feel that the University of South Carolina, in its capacity of a state institution and a center of learning and culture could ill afford to remain silent and impassive when a movement of such vital importance is confronting the people of our state, be it, therefore,

Resolved, that we, the student body of the University of South Carolina, do hereby go on record as favoring and endorsing the movement.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

"It is glorious to man a Lifeboat, but better to build a Lighthouse"

MRS. ROSS HAYES SCHACHNER, National General Secretary Young People's Branch, Evanston, Ill.

Value of Scientific Temperance Instruction in the Schools

PRESIDENT ANNA SNEED CAIRNS, Forest Park University, St. Louis, Missouri

Put yourself back, if you can, forty years ago when there was no scientific temperance teaching, though a few people like Frances E. Willard had grasped the scientific fact that wherever alcohol lurks there is danger. Beer and wine were only delightful kindergartens to the graduate school of whisky, gin, and brandy, and to the great mass of the American people beer was bread, a wholesome, nutritious drink that could hurt no one. Physicians prescribed it for nursing mothers, quite ignorant or careless that the innocent baby might draw drunkenness from its mother's bosom, and have its little brain hardened like a hard boiled egg before it had ever begun to think.

There was a general impression that whisky might be bad, if you took too much of it, but a morning toddy and an evening nightcap keyed one up for the day's work and the night's sleep, and a few sips between were not bad when a neighbor dropped in, only one should drink like a gentleman, and people scarcely noticed that when you were once sliding down hill it was impossible to stop in the middle and go back, and that the momentum of the slide would certainly land you in the gutter at its foot. The drunkard might be safely condemned, but the moderate drinker, who "could drink when he pleased and let it alone when he pleased," was patted on the back as a hale fellow well met.

But the keen-sighted eye of Frances Willard was not satisfied with simply seeing all these fallacies herself, nor was she satisfied with telling the scientific truth to the "grown-ups" who had been all their lives believing and acting upon the opposite of her scientific knowledge, until habit had chained them as tight as Prometheus to his mountain rock, and with the vulture most certainly preying upon their vitals. In this welter of ignorance how could even her persuasive silver tongue arrest the American people? So two great women put their heads together and devised a plan, which for comprehensive insight into the very nature and beginning of things has been unequaled, and which has the wisdom of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove in its very essence. "Let me teach the young child," says that master of efficiency, the Jesuit, "and I care not what you try to teach him later," so this wonderful thought dominated the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and it created its new department, "Scientific Teaching for the Young" in order that every child in school in America should have planted in its mind the scientific truth that there is danger in alcohol to the efficiency of the muscles, to the structure of the nerves and brain, to the heart action, to the delicate lining of the stomach, to the liver, and to the kidneys, and even more than all, to the life blood in which is the life itself. Teach that truth to the child and you have saved the nation. Scientific temperance teaching in every public school was won from first one benighted, whisky and beer-ridden legislature, and then another, and another, and another until every legislature in the Union had passed laws compelling the schools to teach the truth in regard to the effect of alcohol upon the body.

> Scientific knowledge imbedded in the child's brain and heart has become the rock foundation of prohibition, and will yet free our whole nation.

It seemed well to our legislators that every child in America should learn that Cape Severo Vostochnoi was known as the most northern point of Asia, though he would never sail amidst its dangerous currents and reefs, but it did not seem wise to these solons that he should know that the life current in his own little body could be ruined by the pleasant, neighborly man who kept the grog-shop next door. To take one instance: In Missouri, Mrs. Harriet Worthington, superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, carried up to the legislature a bill to teach the children, and what did we get? That if any parent desired to have his child taught in the public schools, the school was to teach that child, and no other—a bill so distorted from the original that its own author would not know it. But our W. C. T. U. women cared not for its wording, but rushed scientific teaching into every public school in Missouri, even including the public schools of St. Louis, with the Anheuser-Busch breweries gnashing their teeth at the escape from their clutches of the million children of Missouri.

A generation passes through the graded schools of America every six years, and now they are voters going to the polls to free their states. The educated millions of America learned in their youth the scientific danger of alcohol, however diluted, and can one wonder that they are voting out its manufacture, importation, exportation and sale?

Not in vain did the first little bands sing, "Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up." They have grown up, and they are voting. Scientific knowledge imbedded in the child's brain and heart has become the rock foundation of prohibition, and will yet free our whole nation. Thank God for sixteen states already delivered, and thirty-two determinedly headed that way, and for 197 Congressmen voting to submit National Constitutional Prohibition to the states. It is the Lord's doing, and it is marvelous in our eyes.

The College Young People's Branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union

BESSIE LATHE SCOVELL, College Y. P B. Secretary of Minnesota and Formerly National College Secretary

To make the work in colleges grow, we must have young women secretaries, going from college to college in each state, bringing the inspiration of the temperance work to the young women students. They must go again and again and be followed by a succession of speakers and workers. Whenever I see a great temperance gathering and hear and feel the inspiration of the prophetic utterances of men and women who are in the present-day struggle against the liquor traffic, I long for the young women in our colleges to be present and catch a gleam of the greatness of the work.

The W. C. T. U. must take particular pains to invite college young women to attend these great gatherings of temperance forces. If every state W. C. T. U. would send one college woman as a delegate to the state and National W. C. T. U. Conventions each year the interest in temperance among women in colleges would soon begin to grow. If at every college city gathering of the temperance clans, each member of the W. C. T. U. would invite a college girl to be her guest at the meeting or banquet, soon the daughters in colleges would take an interest in the temperance propaganda. This thought came to me at a great banquet at the Ryan Hotel, St. Paul, recently, when six or seven hundred men and women ate together and then listened to a program of toasts and music which certainly brought one up to date as to temperance progress. College men were there in large numbers, and the members of the Glee Club from the I. P. A. furnished stirring music and were given a toast to which they responded. Then I thought if we women of the W. C. T. U. had each laid hold of a college girl as the men had courted and loved their young men, there would be glowing life-interest on the part of our college women.

It is the seeing and hearing that make us all enthusiastic. How shall our college girls see and hear unless by invitation of some W. C. T. U. woman, who loves them and urges them to attend these great gatherings? The work in the beginning must be hand-picked. By and by the masses will come thronging. This message is to our W. C. T. U. members. The temperance work in colleges must not be neglected. It should be entrusted to your brightest and most winning young woman. She should have your moral and financial support. We must devote thought, prayer and energy to winning our college girls. It all means quicker, surer victory for the overthrow of the liquor traffic.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH MAKING STEADY PROGRESS

MRS. ROSS HAYES SCHACHNER

Because so much else that is well worth reading is to fill our columns this month, my message will be a brief one. But I must take time to say that I am rejoiced, as every one of you should be, at the Y. P. B. activities as manifested thus far this year. Nothing succeeds like success, they say, and so we should be succeeding wonderfully well during the coming months.

By all means do not forget that we are expecting big results from the month of April, the Y. P. B. campaign month, and big results require big efforts to make them possible. It is not too early now to begin those efforts. The March Y. P. B. edition of THE UNION SIGNAL will be our Y. P. B. Campaign edition, and April can not be a successful month unless those pages are widely read and circulated. Unless we can get our Y. P. B. editions into the hands of our young people they will not be the help we wish them to be, and we, therefore, ask every subscriber to THE SIGNAL when he or she has read the Y. P. B. edition to pass it on to a Y. P. B. member (with the hope of obtaining a subscription later) or to some young man or young woman who will be influenced thereby. It would be a splendid idea to put this college edition into all the colleges where it is hoped to do temperance work.

I trust no Branch will fail to observe in one way or another February 17, the heavenly birthday of Frances E. Willard, whose influence is alive today among young people everywhere.

COLLEGE WORK IN GEORGIA

MRS. LELLA A. DILLARD, College Secretary

My ideal on my first itinerary, as college secretary for Georgia, three years ago, was a Young People's Branch in every college where women and girls were being educated. I found, however, that some of the college presidents did not approve of adding another organization to those already existing. In such cases the best plan seemed to organize a temperance committee in the Y. W. and Y. M. C. A. with a general chairman. In this way practically all of the students would be reached when the regular time came for the temperance committee to prepare the program. This plan harmonized with school routine, so most of the colleges have adopted it. Of course dues go through the Y. W. C. A. channels, so while the work goes on most encouragingly it cannot be included in the report of Y. P. B. activities.

We are organized in seven of our ten colleges for women and girls, our two coeducational colleges, state normal school, Vashti school and Martha Berry Girls' School. Year books are sent to the chairmen of temperance committees in each college and school, and as far as practicable Y. P. B. plans are used. Our state paper is sent to each chairman, to the reading room, and to the college president; in this way we keep our state work before the school. THE UNION SIGNAL is either subscribed for, or some member of the local W. C. T. U. sends her copy to the reading room.

Pledge signing goes on among the students at every place; in the state Normal for the past two years every young man in the school has signed the pledge. Books are being collected for libraries. Last year "Alcohol and the Human Body" by Sir Victor Horsley was placed in all the libraries. Since the visit of Mrs. Edith Smith Davis last November there has been created a new interest in essay contests. At state normal school and Piedmont College (co-educational) the course of study recommended by the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association has recently been adopted. In Piedmont College credit is given for it in the sociology department.

Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Social Meetings and Red Letter Days, has prepared for the Young People's Branch a leaflet called "Evening Pastimes" (price 2 cents each; 50 cents per 100), which is full of delightful and helpful suggestions for the social hour. The new leaflet, "Hints for the Social Hour," compiled by the general secretary, is also designed to solve the problem of entertainment, and with these two there should be no lack of material for this phase of our work. Price of "Hints for the Social Hour," is 3 cents each; 75 cents per 100.

PROGRAM FOR FEBRUARY MEETING

Frances E. Willard Memorial

Song No. 23 (Y. P. B. Chorus Book)

Roll Call—Quotations from Frances E. Willard, using Flower Mission quotation cards, 25 cts. a hundred, or "What Frances E. Willard Said"

Reading from "The Life of Frances E. Willard"—introduction by Lady Henry Somerset.

Song No. 14 in honor of Miss Willard. (Chorus Book)

Reading from "Glimpses of Fifty Years" —pages 3-6, 18-25, 206-209 (or any other parts desired)

Reading—"Frances E. Willard and the Lamplighter"

As this is also the birthday month of Abraham Lincoln let some member speak on "Lincoln and Temperance."

A talk by a W. C. T. U. member on "Frances E. Willard as a Young Woman in the W. C. T. U." may be substituted for one of these numbers.

Solo (with chorus) No. 20 (Chorus Book)

(Ask that each member bring at least a penny for the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund and take the collection at this time.)

COLLEGE ACTIVITIES IN IOWA

The Morningside College Prohibition Association of Morningside College, Iowa, filed a petition with the faculty asking that a one-hour course in the study of prohibition be added to the college curriculum for the next semester. The petition was signed by twenty-three students. The course as proposed will be an extensive study into special phases of the problem. The association at Morningside College at present is making a study of the question through discussions at weekly meetings.

The Committee on Temperance Education of the Civic League of Johnson county, Iowa, has arranged with the librarian of the University Library for a shelf of books dealing with the liquor problem and all phases of the saloon question. The books have been collected and are now at the service of the people of the city and the county, who are invited to make use of this unusually large collection of standard works on the question. In addition to the larger volumes a large number of pamphlets are also available. Among the books selected are those by Horsley and Sturge. Truly, temperance education moves rapidly!

IMPORTANT

In order to avoid delays all orders for supplies should be sent direct to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., rather than to the general secretary. This, of course, does not refer to requests for help from the secretary.

NEWS FROM THE STATES

Pennsylvania Y. P. B. is sending its literature to all colleges and universities in the state.

Mrs. Fannie A. Drummond, state organizer for Ohio, has reported a Y. P. B. organized at St. Clairsville, O., with 138 members—forty-nine boys and eighty-nine girls, with Mr. Harry Christy as president. Among the members of the Branch are the superintendent of schools, who is a young university graduate, five high school teachers, the athletic coach, two grade teachers and a splendid crowd of young people. We think no Branch ever had a more auspicious beginning.

The New York Y. P. B.'s, looking forward to their 1915 convention, have adopted the following as their rally cry:

"Fulton! Fulton! 1915.
For Prohibition we are keen!
By 1920 we will shout
Saloons! Saloons! All gone out!"

Splendid reports are coming in almost daily of the efficient work done by Mrs. Linnie Carl, our western field secretary. With Mrs. Carl so ably assisting in the west and with Miss Mary Anderson, soon to start on an itinerary through the east, our 5,000 new members seem assured.

PRIZE ESSAY CONTEST

Through the generosity of a resident of Berkeley, Cal., the National Education Association is able to offer a prize of one thousand dollars for the best essay on "The Essential Place of Religion in Education," with an outline of a "Plan for Introducing Religious Teaching into the Public Schools." The essay must be in the possession of the secretary of the association by June 1, 1915. The award will be made at the time of the meeting of the International Congress of Education held under the auspices of the National Education Association in connection with the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at Oakland, Cal., August 16-28, 1915. Further particulars may be secured by addressing the secretary, Durand W. Springer, Ann Arbor, Mich. (N. E. A. Bulletin.)

The organization of a Y. P. B. of forty-two members is reported by Mrs. Jennie L. W. Rooke, president of the Rhode Island W. C. T. U., nearly two-thirds of the membership being young men students. Miss Mary F. W. Anderson will be in Rhode Island in April, and it is hoped that many young people will become interested in the work of the Young People's Branch.

Bitter Denunciation of the Liquor Traffic by Judge C. A. Pollock in Passing Sentence on Murderer

Still weak from his self-inflicted wound and assisted by a deputy sheriff on either side of him, Robert Hendrickson, wife murderer, walked from the district court room, recently, condemned to spend the remainder of his natural life in the penitentiary at Bismarck, North Dakota.

In passing sentence, Judge C. A. Pollock held the man who sold the liquor equally responsible for the murder and he delivered the most scathing denunciation against the liquor traffic ever heard in a North Dakota court.

Hendrickson waived all preliminary examination and appeared before Judge Pollock in the district court, knowing the hopelessness of his case and prepared to plead guilty to the horrid crime of taking the life of his wife and leaving a two-year-old son motherless and worse than fatherless.

Remarks of the Court

The remarks of Judge Pollock in pronouncing sentence upon Hendrickson were as follows:

"Divine and human law declare, Thou shalt not kill. You stand before the bar of justice confessing to having committed the revolting crime of murdering, in cold blood, the woman you promised to love, honor and protect. Another crime, that of attempted self destruction could justly be laid at your door. The innocent babe which came to bless your home has been robbed of a mother's tender care. You having plead guilty now await the sentence of an offended law.

"It is a solemn moment in the life of a court, when he is called upon to sit in judgment upon his fellow men. Murder and treason are kindred offenses. The one affects the individual, the other the state. Both alike are heinous and the penalty of death may be inflicted for either.

"Your only excuse in mitigation is that you were drunk when you committed the deed—a plea which can only be received to save you from the gallows.

Liquor Seller the Criminal

"I do not know, and, under the present state of our law, I never want to know, who sold you the liquor, under the influence of which you committed this unnatural crime. Let that man's conscience bring such remorse that its energizing power will never let go, until the largest possible reparation be made.

"Whoever he was, and wherever he may be at this sad moment; whether his place of business is in the well adorned and highly decorated room, where tempting viands appeal to the taste; where sweet music delights the ear and lulls to sleep the reasoning faculties; or whether it was in the lowest, dirtiest, man-abandoned, God-forsaken and death-dealing charnel house of despair, where only abides thoughtless and sullen greed for gain, it matters not; before the bar of God, if not of man, he stands alike with you morally responsible for this horrible crime.

"The trouble is he is not here with you to receive a merited punishment.

"The statute says 'All persons concerned in the commission of a public offense, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid, or abet in its commission; or who by fraud, contrivance or force, occasion the drunkenness of another for the purpose of causing him to commit any crime, are principals in any crime so committed.'

"If your partner in this offense were here, he would plead by way of defense that he did not 'by fraud, contrivance or force' occasion your drunkenness—a plea which would have to be sustained.

"How much longer will the courts be deprived of authority to do complete justice between their fellow men? An enlightened and long suffering public will some day, and that very soon, rise in the majesty of its power, and demand that the legislature strike out the words 'by fraud, contrivance or force' and 'for the purpose of causing him to commit any crime,' and boldly declare that he who in any manner sells intoxicating liquor to another as a beverage, under the influence of which a crime, whether of murder or of some lesser offense is committed, is equally guilty as a principal in any crime so committed. Such a law would distribute the blame and place it upon all those responsible for the crime.

"The persons who, for business or other reasons, vote to permit the continuance of a traffic which robs men of their reason, increasing the liability of crime being committed, are in a measure responsible. Away with your mistaken notions of business necessity. It does not exist. Treason against the state stalks abroad in our midst. How much longer will the people permit both treason and murder in order that there may be continued a system of dealing with the liquor traffic which preys upon the appetites and passions of men?

"A quarter of a century ago the good people of our state dissolved partnership with the accursed license system. The state of Minnesota still permits the evil. Her splendid western city of Moorhead, well located for business and containing some of the best people on earth, seems blind to the great wrong of the traffic in rum. We must suffer because of their inability to see. Most of the persons sent to the penitentiary by this court would not be deprived of their liberty, and our state would not be burdened with heavy expense for their care, had they not gotten drunk in the saloons of Moorhead. The time has come when this iniquity should be banished forever. You, who will suffer all your life because of your misdeed, may unconsciously by your act arouse public sentiment to the end that such offenses will not be repeated and that their contributing cause will be removed. It is devoutly to be wished that such will be the case.

"The sentence and judgment of the law is that you, Robert Hendrickson, be confined in the penitentiary at Bismarck at hard labor for and during the remainder of your natural life. Let judgment be entered accordingly."

Mr. Bryan's Pledge-Signing Campaign

Not long ago Hon. William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State, visited the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, and urged upon the students the signing of a total abstinence pledge. This was signed by hundreds of boys. Later Mr. Bryan, through his paper, The Commoner, appealed to the boys of other states to take the pledge. We give below the pledge and letter of Mr. Bryan.

Boys, Will You Sign the Pledge With Me?

A pledge of total abstinence is being signed by a host of boys in Michigan—why not the boys of other states as well? A book will be opened at The Commoner office, wherein will be entered the names and addresses of those who sign this pledge with me. Cut out the pledge, paste it on a piece of paper and sign it. Lay the pledge away that you may have it as a reminder of the decision you have made, but send a postal card to The Commoner, stating that you have signed it, and giving your age and address. If you do not care to state your age, use the word "adult," instead of giving the number of years. Receipt of these pledges will be acknowledged by publication in The Commoner in which only the name and address will be given. Ask others to sign with you—secure as many signatures as possible—and thus be the means of spreading the influence of the pledge. Those who abstain from drink do good not only to themselves, but to those also who are encouraged by their example.

W. J. BRYAN.

TOTAL ABSTINENCE PLEDGE

We, the undersigned, promise, God helping us, never to use intoxicating liquors as a beverage.

MARCH WITH US TO VICTORY!

We thank you, dear comrades of our Young People's Branch, for your enthusiastic response to the marvellous opportunities for present-day temperance service. We are glad you share the thrill of the victories now rewarding the steadfast, self-sacrificing toil of the past. We are sure you rejoice to be active workers today—this electric, twentieth century "today"—rejoice to be lifters in the mighty task of upholding and enforcing temperance laws already secured, and to be eager seekers for conquests new. May we all be privileged to participate in the triumphant flag-raising on the heights of National Constitutional Prohibition!

"Educate, agitate, organize," must ever be our gleaming watchwords of success. The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union earnestly urges young men and young women everywhere to sign the total abstinence pledge and to join the vigorous ranks of our Young People's Branch. God speed your work, dear younger brothers and sisters—your work, our work, God's work—for a clear brain, a protected home, a redeemed nation.

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

Y. P. B. PROGRAM MATERIAL

We give in this issue, for use in the month of April, Y. P. B. program material, prepared by Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner, National general secretary of the Young People's Branch. It was decided to publish this material in THE UNION SIGNAL instead of issuing it in leaflet form, as stated in the Year Book. Wide publicity should be given this special College Y. P. B. number of the official paper. Send for extra copies at the special price of 100 for $1.50, and distribute among the young folks of your community.

One-third of the forty-eight states of the Union now have statewide prohibition. Sixteen states—and Idaho—is really the proper way to say it.

When signing the total abstinence pledge, as suggested by the National W. C. T. U. President, why not add, "and I pledge my loyal service to promote the cause of state and National prohibition."

The students of the Northwestern University, located in Evanston, Ill., the home of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union and of three of the National officers, have during the past six months had their attention frequently called to the intimate relationship between true patriotism and prohibition. When a state goes "dry"—as seven have done recently—"Old Glory" floats from between the trees in front of Rest Cottage, and few are the students passing who do not salute the colors and then stop to read the news of a prohibition victory. As a thought-arrester and a sentiment-maker, we recommend this fashion of announcing our victories to every W. C. T. U. which maintains headquarters.

SUFFRAGE'S SUCCESSFUL STRIDES

Who was it said that when the war broke out, it would show up the fundamental fallacy of woman suffrage, and would demonstrate beyond dispute that force lay at the foundation of society and that those who could not exert it, had no fundamental right to a direct share in society's ultimate decisions? For six months the war has been going on; the newspapers are full of it; it is the chief topic of conversation; every battle fought seems to prove that armed force is necessary to protect the nations, and yet—apparently the cause of woman suffrage was never so popular as it is today. During the past two weeks two state legislatures, West Virginia and New York, have almost unanimously approved of the submission of the question to the people, and three other state legislatures, New Jersey and Massachusetts, and Tennessee, have acted favorably upon the question.

The Chicago Herald puts it well when it says, "The physical force argument for exclusive male suffrage has about played out. The great demonstration has come and it has left the country not only unconvinced but half inclined to believe that woman suffrage might possibly have helped avert a lot of trouble."

VOLUNTEERS WANTED

"To the colleges we must look for our leaders, in our great war against the Great Destroyer," said Congressman Richmond P. Hobson some time ago. That the young people in our institutions of learning are responding to the call of our great reform is evidenced by the interest shown in the young people's societies of the churches, by the remarkable convention of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association recently held at Topeka, Kansas, and by the varied and valuable activities of the Young People's Branch. The Christian youth of our land are finding in the prohibition movement the moral equivalent of war, the opportunity to develop the latent militancy that prompts every young person to "go forth to war" against some of the outcrying evil forces of the day; to buckle on his armor and prove his soldierly qualities in some really "worth while" battle for humanity. Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, in his address at the national convention of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, put this matter in a definite, practical form when he suggested that to meet the challenge of the liquor traffic the college student of today can train himself for great usefulness and power in at least two directions. One of the fields open to him is journalism—and when one recalls what the brave "knights of the quill" of the past twenty-five years have been able to accomplish for the cause of prohibition, one wonders why the calling does not appeal to more educated young men. The other, says Dr. Sheldon, is politics, and he points out that only a few more men were needed in Congress to carry the Hobson Amendment.

Certain it is that the men and women who are to win the final victory in the nation and in the world not only over the liquor traffic but every form of iniquity and vice are the young people of today, and it is vital to the success of the great reform movements that they be speedily enlisted as soldiers in our righteous war.

EDITORIAL JOTTINGS

The fashionable pastime among lawmakers this winter is passing suffrage resolutions and enacting "dry" laws. The popular recreation for the coming summer months will undoubtedly be campaigning for "votes for women" and prohibition.

If in doubt what to use for your UNION SIGNAL Day (March 1) meeting, refer to list of supplies in the first column of page 15. When ordering, do not fail to ask for a copy of "What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said." Price 50 cents.

The situation in Arkansas seems auspicious for a successful enforcement of the newly enacted prohibition law. In the larger part of the state the liquor traffic has been outlawed for some years, the statewide measure passed both houses by a large majority, and Governor Hays in his recent inaugural address announced himself as enthusiastically in favor of such a law.

The legislator who is not now having long, long thoughts, and deep, deep convictions on the prohibition and woman suffrage questions is destined to fill an early political grave.

Have you a copy of "The Life of Frances E. Willard?" You will find it indispensable in preparing program for your February 17 Memorial meeting. Order from National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill. Price $1.50.

"FOR SALE"

MRS. KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON, President Massachusetts W. C. T. U.

The power of the forces of evil to deceive "the very elect" was never more manifest than in the interpretation we frequently hear of the words "for sale" in the Sheppard-Hobson Resolution. Temperance men and women, even white ribbon women, are being influenced by the subtle logic—or lack of logic, which was displayed by the opponents of the measure in that famous debate on December 22.

It is not strange that the enemies of prohibition should say that the passage of this Amendment would increase the manufacture of alcoholic liquors. We were quite prepared for that attack. It is wholly in line with the old "Prohibition does not prohibit" argument. What we were not prepared for was to have some of the most ardent and devoted in our own ranks led away by so simple and so well-worn a device. Let us examine the claim for a moment.

Our Representatives tell us that the insertion of the words "for sale" will make possible a distillery or a brewery in every home if the Sheppard-Hobson bill should become the constitutional law of the land. They affirm with a solemnity which must be a severe strain on their sense of humor that moonshining will become a favorite American pastime and drunkenness will increase by leaps and bounds when once this Amendment shall have passed the several states.

In our childhood there was a favorite phrase and gesture used often by slangy little boys when an attempt had been made to impose upon their credulity. Pointing significantly to their right eye they were wont to say: "Do you see anything green?" Somehow we feel that that gesture and those words might well express the attitude of the American people towards these new prophets of ill.

Do we not know that just such dire forebodings have met every measure of real reform since time began? What was the argument from which there could be no appeal in the old anti-slavery days? "Would you want your sister to marry a 'nigger'?" That was the end of all controversy. The man who had delivered that powerful argument was supposed to have demolished the whole ammunition of his opponent and was free to retire in triumph from the field.

To just that limbo of argument through reductio ad absurdam this special device of the adversary will speedily be consigned. Let no white ribboner give one moment's credence to the folly. We know that the chief, if not the sole danger of alcohol, lies in its sale. We know that the open door of the saloon, and not the still in a private house, is the temptation which lures our young men down to death. We know that the greed which thrusts the traffic upon the people is a far greater menace than lurking appetite. We know, too, that appetite is born and bred in the places where "sale" is made legal. Our own experience and our own common sense teach us these things. It is our solemn duty in this crisis to "hold fast that we have" and to pass on our light, without wavering, to others.

GROWING UNPOPULARITY OF LIQUOR ADVERTISING

That one-fourth of the daily newspapers of America refuse to accept liquor advertising is the conclusion reached by the Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal church as a result of an investigation made by it.

An inquiry addressed to the 2,160 daily newspapers on the question brought replies from only 679. Of these 520 stated they would accept no advertising of whisky, beer or other alcoholic liquors. A large number of the remaining 159 will accept only advertising of beer.

Three hundred and sixty of these papers declare themselves to be editorial advocates of National Prohibition, while 200 of them oppose. Three hundred and sixty favor state prohibition, with only 193 opposing; 397 favor local prohibition, with only 176 in opposition.

A very large number of newspapers declare their editorial columns are neutral on the liquor question, while a surprising number of papers which accept liquor advertising assert that they are in favor of National Prohibition. The growing tendency to bar liquor advertisements is also made apparent by the announcement of many that they have recently adopted that policy. The case of the Indiana Times, of Indianapolis, which took this stand on January 1 is typical. In answer to the question, "Do you editorially favor National Prohibition?" a great New York newspaper significantly says, "We have not as yet," and another large paper which accepts whisky advertising declares: "We have never taken a definite stand, but expect in a few weeks to come out for state and National Prohibition." Quite a number say that they are taking no new liquor advertising, but are filling old contracts. Many say, "We do not solicit advertising of whisky or beer, but if the copy is not objectionable we accept it." Several complain that their policy in regard to liquor advertising is not sufficiently appreciated by church people. Quite a number say, "We are only waiting for public opinion to swing in favor of prohibition"; others call special attention to the fact that their columns are open to the temperance people, although editorially they are neutral. A great many editors seize the occasion to point out that only education can bring about a state of mind which will make National Prohibition effective, and they declare that sufficient educational work has not yet been done. Some take advertising of whisky only when they consider it medicinal; others point to the fact that they bar even patent medicines with a large proportion of alcohol. Some ask double price for liquor advertisements. The number who declare that the elimination of liquor advertising pays financially is quite large. One West Virginia paper says, "Prohibition in this state has helped the newspaper business just as it has all other business."

Almost without exception the newspaper men, whether or not they favor it, express their belief that National Prohibition is coming.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. CLARA P. WHITE, Volga, Iowa, one of the "Old Guard" who did valiant service in the early days of the W. C. T. U. in Iowa. For thirty-six years she was a member of the organization; she served as district president for fifteen years, and as UNION SIGNAL correspondent for Iowa for twenty years.

MRS. MARGARET L. DAM, Holyoke, Mass., an honored member of the local union. Mrs. Dam had nearly reached her ninety-first birthday and until within a few years had been an active member of the union which she joined in 1884.

MRS. MARY S. BARROWS, Farmington, Ill., for twenty-five years secretary of the local union. She was an untiring worker and an inspiration to those associated with her.

ANNE WHITNEY

DR. LOUISE C. PURINGTON

On January 25 a name synonymous of Boston's best and having a close link in W. C. T. U. associations was numbered with "The Immortals"—Anne Whitney, the sculptor.

It is safe to say that she never exercised her plastic art on a more interesting patient (!) than Frances Willard or perhaps one whom it would be more difficult to embody in marble. The "activities undreamed of" to which she has passed were always shining in her radiant face even in its rapt expression of repose.

"The Listener" of the Boston Transcript in a beautiful estimate of Miss Whitney, relates the following, too good to forget in what is now woman's day: Four public statues in Boston attest her skill as artist:

"The Samuel Adams in Dock Square, the Charles Sumner in Harvard Square, the Leif Ericsson in Commonwealth avenue, and the Harriet Martineau at Wellesley College, which was lately destroyed by fire. Concerning the first-named, which is a replica of the Samuel Adams in the Capitol at Washington, the good story is told of an English art-critic visiting Boston, who had been declaiming against the restless ambitiousness of American women and their failure to make good their pretensions, especially in art, referring to the Adams at Washington as an example of the virile strength which women's sculpture could never hope to attain. It is historical fact, however, that the Sumner now in Harvard Square was first pronounced the winner in the competition of models for it, and then denied the award because the sculptor was a woman. A public subscription subsequently rebuked this gross injustice."

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

SUPERINTENDENTS

W. C. T. U. INSTITUTES

MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS

While any time of the year is opportune for holding institutes, the spring seems to lend itself best to systematic, aggressive, well-planned work in this department. Midway between state conventions, the spring institutes awaken renewed interest in the specific plans of the year and give an added impetus to department work. In some states the mid-year county convention has given way to the institute, much to the profit of all concerned. Reports of work done are necessary and indispensable but before they can show the tremendous force of the organization the unions must study the departments, thus getting a broad conception and a deep conviction of their utility in solving the problems of the day, and must secure active co-operation of the superintendents in the local unions, for the local union is always the unit of power. To bring about such results is the aim of the institute.

It is not too much to hope that every local union in the country, either singly or in a group of two or three nearby unions, will hold an institute this year, fill out the report blank, which will be furnished by the state superintendent, and return as soon as the institute is over.

Does any one complain that there is a sameness about the institute program, that it gets into a rut? There is no necessity for this. With over forty departments to study, with special problems each year to be faced, with state and national campaigns for prohibition on hand, there is opportunity for the widest range of subjects. Specialists may be found in almost any community who can present new ideas: some physician capable of discussing topics in the line of medical temperance, eugenics or euthenics; teachers who can furnish information concerning the effects of tobacco or alcohol on physical and mental development; lawyers who may give new light on existing laws and their enforcement; preachers who keep abreast of all reform movements for social betterment, not to speak of our own white ribbon specialists who are unexcelled in furnishing food for thought and stimulation to action along our lines of work.

Many of our departments in their various phases and possibilities might profitably be studied for an entire day With but one institute a year, beyond which few unions reach, many will feel that more than one department must be brought to the front. See to it that the very best use is made of every minute of time. Let none go to waste.

Advertise in every way your ingenuity can devise. The department leaflet, "Successful Publicity," will give you some idea. You can use as an invitation the leaflet, "What is a W. C. T. U. Institute?", which has space at the end for writing in the time and place of the meeting.

Use the "Superintendents' Manual" in which the plans of work of all the departments are set forth. "Suggestive Topics for Institutes" and "The Campaign Institute and Topics" will help you in the preparation of your programs. Consult your state superintendent. She will have many helpful suggestions.

Mrs. Fannie B. Damon of Maine is making a specialty of holding institutes in communities where no union exists, with the purpose of organizing. A union born under such auspicious circumstances should start life full-fledged and ready for action. The plan is well worth trying in other states.

A gold medal will be given to the state superintendent who holds the largest number of medal contests in proportion to the number of institutes held this year.

Remember "Efficiency in Service" is the motto of this department. "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

3187 Arcade Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

WORK AMONG SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

The amount of money spent by the department of Work among Soldiers and Sailors during the year 1914 was $977.62 and not $8,977.62, as was stated, through a typographical error, in the Annual Report. Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of the department, asks that all orders for the literature of her department be sent to Miss Viola Spencer, Florence, N. J.

MEDAL CONTESTS

ADELIA E. CARMAN

The past year marks a new epoch in the medal contest work. More interest was developed than ever before, consequently more contests were held. Especially was this true of the states working for National Constitutional Prohibition. Altogether twenty-seven states made a decided increase.

There is a demand for an L. T. L. Reciter, and as more contests were held by this Branch the past year than ever before, we will soon publish one. Send in short, spicy selections in verse or prose to be used in it. Later we expect to publish a contest book for adults using up-to-date material. Will state superintendents of Peace and Arbitration and of Anti-Narcotics please send to me material for readings? As an incentive I offer a prize of $10 for the best orations, either compiled or original, on any phase of National Constitutional Prohibition, providing I receive twenty-five that are accepted by the committee. The selections must not be compiled from material already in the books.

The following prizes will be awarded by the National superintendent of Medal Contests:

To the state superintendent whose state holds the largest number of contests in proportion to membership, 100 Recitation Books.

To the state superintendent, whose state holds the largest number of high grade contests, in proportion to membership, the silk flag.

To the county superintendent whose county holds the largest number of contests in proportion to membership, fifty Recitation Books.

To the local superintendent who holds the largest number of contests, twenty-five Recitation Books.

To the state superintendent sending in the most concise and varied report, a gold Honor Star.

The new leaflet, "The Medal Contest Catechism," will be invaluable for use in newly organized unions. Another leaflet, "Why I Hold Medal Contests," is for churches and Sunday schools. I have copies of the new popular song, "I Did Not Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier." This may be used in all contests, especially in Peace contests. The price is ten cents, two cents for postage. There is no better way to interest the public than through a well arranged contest, and as it is an assured fact that contests make prohibition voters, a pre-election program will be published in THE UNION SIGNAL, the contest to be held on March 6, or an evening during the week previous to election. This movement for a concerted action in the contest department has been approved by several states. Contests at Institutes are being urged by the National superintendent of that department.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

SUGGESTIVE PROGRAMS FOR APRIL—THE Y. P. B. CAMPAIGN MONTH

REMEMBER:

That the third prize offered by the National W. C. T. U. to the Y. P. B.—$10 in UNION SIGNAL subscriptions—is to be awarded the state securing the largest number of paid-up members during the month of April (names for subscriptions to be furnished by the state secretary), and that the National general secretary will award suitable prizes to the county Y. P. B. secretary organizing the most new Branches during the month and to the individual member anywhere in the United States securing, during the month, the most new paid-up members. It is desired, so far as possible, that the Birthday Post Cards to be secured from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House be used in sending the names of new members to the National secretary in order that they may be used for demonstration purposes, but if these are not used the names must at least be certified by the local treasurer and reported before May 15.

That "I Won One" buttons should be presented at or before the end of the month to all who have gained new members during the month—a button for each member gained. Price, 3 cents each; 2 for 5 cents; in lots of 25 or more, 1 cent each.

That a collection for the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund, the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund, or the Y. P. B. Missionary Fund should be taken at each meeting.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP MASS MEETING

(Sunday afternoon or evening preferably)

Song—"Coronation"
Scripture—Jer. 51:1-9
Song—"My Country, 'Tis of Thee"
Three-minute greetings from pastor of church, from each of the young people's societies represented (including Y. P. B.), and member of the W. C. T. U.
Song—"The Fight Is On"
"Personal Responsibility for Present-Day Evils," ten-minute addresses by a member of Y. P. B. and a member of another young people's society
Quartette—"A Saloonless Nation in 1920."
"The Responsibility of Christian Societies Regarding Present Evils," fifteen-minute address by a pastor
Song—"Onward, Christian Soldiers"
"The Value of Pledge Signing," a brief talk, quoting prominent men and women, and making an appeal for pledge signers
Reading and adoption of resolution endorsing Sheppard-Hobson amendment for National Constitutional Prohibition
Song—"Stand Up for Jesus" Collection

FRANCES J. BARNES MEETING

On or near April 14 it would be well for the W. C. T. U. and Y. P. B. to hold a joint meeting. At this time, have read the messages of National Officers, Mrs. Barnes and others from the March Y. P. B. Edition of UNION SIGNAL, also the life sketch of Mrs. Barnes. There should follow a talk from the W. C. T. U. president or a member on "Why We Need the Young People in the Campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition," and a response from the Y. P. B. president or a member on "Our Aims." Intersperse program with good music and follow with social hour.

APRIL JUBILEE

In connection with the last meeting in the month or at a special meeting for that purpose sing Nos. 52, 38 and 8 from Chorus Book in celebration of the month's efforts, then while singing "Bringing in the Sheaves," let each member who has obtained new members deposit in a basket on the table the cards bearing names of the members, or, if cards have been sent in, slips of paper bearing names, and the president or local secretary should present the "I Won One" buttons. The cards if handed in at this time should then be mailed to the general secretary. Let each member respond to "How I Gained My New Members," or "What I Did to Make April a Big Month." Follow with social hour. The buttons may be presented at any of the public meetings suggested above.

Any of the Y. P. B. playlets, or the cantata: "A Saloonless Nation in 1920," would be suitable for public programs. (Price, 10 cents.)

HINTS TO THE Y. P. B.'S

What is worth doing at all is worth doing well. Talk about your meetings; talk about April, the Y. P. B. Campaign Month; April 14, the Y. P. B. Red Letter Day; advertise the meetings by announcements from pulpits, by posters in public places, by dodgers scattered over the community, and, best of all, by personal invitation.

Decorate hall or church with Y. P. B. and "Liquor Traffic Must Go" pennants, with W. C. T. U. posters and with flags. Always have on hand an abundance of pledge cards and good literature carefully selected. It would be well to have one person in charge of leaflets, to be distributed to young men, one in charge of those for young women and one for the general leaflets. Careful account should be kept of the amount distributed, also of the amount distributed individually by members during April and a report made at the end of the month to the state secretary.

Put as much time as possible on the preparation of these programs and let each participant be well prepared.

In all or any of these meetings Branches will, of course, consult and advise with the local W. C. T. U. and it would be well to call into co-operation any of the Christian young people's societies, particularly for the Christian Citizenship meeting.

Helps for the above programs may be obtained of National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., but a goodly number of the "Birthday Post Cards," "I Won One" buttons, song leaflets, pledge cards and Chorus Books should be ordered separately and in ample time for use at meetings, etc.

FRESHMAN CLASS MUST SIGN PLEDGE

The entire freshman law class of the University of Missouri at Columbia is reported to have been asked to take the pledge against ever again attending a "beer party." Until this promise is forthcoming from the individual students, President A. Ross Hill has announced they will attend classes "on probation." Under this condition any slight infraction of rules or lack of attention will be considered a grave offense. The president's demand for a pledge was a sequel to a "beer party" given by a number of the freshman law students at a dance hall in Columbia during the Christmas holidays.

MRS. McDONALD CHOSEN S. T. I. LECTURER

EDITH SMITH DAVIS

Mrs. Almena Parker McDonald, president Cook county (Ill.) W. C. T. U., has been chosen a National lecturer of the department of Scientific Temperance instruction. Mrs. McDonald's training has been such as to peculiarly fit her for this position. As a child she was deeply interested in the temperance cause through the work of her father, Casper Bruce Parker, and her mother, Almyra Smith Parker. The latter led the Crusade movement in Lincoln, Nebraska, and organized the first Woman's Christian Temperance Union there. Mrs. McDonald, in addition to her strong interest in temperance, has the training of the schools, having spent two years in the state university of Nebraska and three years in Northwestern University in Illinois. Of her work in the Cumnock School of Oratory, Mr. Cumnock says: "Mrs. Almena Parker McDonald was graduated from this department of the university. She is a gifted reader, and in my opinion is competent to please any audience before which she may appear. I confidently recommend her to lecture committees or any organization desiring a refined and pleasing entertainment."

She has also had the training of a teacher and understands a teacher's needs and difficulties. As a lecturer on the nature and effects of narcotics, we bespeak for her a hearty welcome in public school institutes, in summer-schools and in colleges, normals and training-schools. Twelve years ago John Sobieski said of her, "Mrs. McDonald is a bright and deservedly popular lecturer. Very few can equal her in her art as a reader. Her pleasing personality makes her a big success."

SENSE ABOUT FOOD

Facts Worth Knowing

It is a serious question sometimes to know just what to eat when a person's stomach is out of order and most foods cause trouble.

Grape-Nuts food can be taken at any time with the certainty that it will digest. Actual experience of people is valuable to anyone interested.

A Terre Haute woman writes: "I had suffered with indigestion for about four years, ever since an attack of typhoid fever, and at times could eat nothing but the very lightest food, and then suffer so with my stomach I would wish I never had to eat anything.

"I was urged to try Grape-Nuts and since using it I do not have to starve myself any more, but I can eat it at any time and feel nourished and satisfied, dyspepsia is a thing of the past, and I am now strong and well.

"My husband also had an experience with Grape-Nuts. He wa very weak and sickly one spring, and could not attend to his work. He was put under the doctor's care but medicine did not seem to do him any good until he began to leave off ordinary food and use Grape-Nuts. It was surprising to see the change in him. He grew better right off, and naturally he has none but words of praise for Grape-Nuts.

"Our boy thinks he cannot eat a meal without Grape-Nuts, and he learns so fast at school that his teacher comments on it. I am satisfied that it is because of the great nourishing elements in Grape-Nuts."

This mother is right. Grape-Nuts food is a certain and remarkable rebuilder of body, nerves and brain.

"There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

MAX O'BRIEN'S VALENTINE

GRACE BOTELER SANDERS, Jamestown, Ohio

No one at Deadman's Gulch had ever heard of St. Valentine's Day, at least if any had, it must have been in the far-away past of the graybeards who had once possessed happy homes which they had left because of greed for gold or the committing of some unpardonable sin. The town was only a mining camp high up in the Rocky Mountains and was tenanted by men who kept store, or office, or saloon.

There were few who ever left the Gulch except by the hand of death. Not many had money enough to pay their way to another port. Pete Beier, the saloonist, was the town boss and woe unto the man who offended him. A cynic, who was a wag as well, and who possessed the good sense to keep enough cents for a railroad ticket, brought old Pete's wrath down upon his head. The wag decamped but when he left he swung over the door a placard which was not discovered until he was thousands of miles away.

Pete was rheumatic and almost blind. When Gentleman George galloped up to the saloon the following Sunday, he squinted one eye curiously at the sign. There was a large crowd at the saloon. Sunday meant only additional carousing and George had come with the intention of taking part in the "good time," but the contrast between the metal sign which old Pete had bought in Denver and the one which the wag had hung was so great as to make George rise in his stirrups and pull off his sombrero to wipe his moist forehead.

"Ho! ho!" he shouted just as a party of men who were "three sheets in the wind" sauntered out. "You fellows look like you'd lost both. Ho! ho! ho!"

The leader of the gang, Big Max, from the silver mine, who was not so badly under the influence of liquor as were the others, opened wide his popping grey eyes. He followed Gentleman George's finger to the metal sign which had swung there ever since Beier's arrival.

"Pete's Place!" read Max sarcastically. "Come in and take a good drink with the boys!" At first he saw nothing else. The wag with an eye to business and a hope that the placard would remain for some time, had made it of cardboard of exactly the same color as its weather-beaten background, but as Max looked, a vagrant wind rushed over the mountain and across the commons. It caught the little card and fairly shook it at Big Max. He blinked a time or two before he deciphered the curious letters. When he realized their import, he wheeled abruptly and made for the door, head down. The text was too plain: "He who enters here, bids good-by to both coin and character."

The words touched Max in a sensitive place, for he had received his pay check a week ago and had come to Pete's Place to have it cashed that he might send a part to the wife and children who still remained in the home town because he never had money enough to bring them to the Gulch. He had only intended to take one drink with the boys, but that one bad set his brain on fire. He was mad for another. Many a man before the coming of Big Max had awakened penniless from a week's orgy with aching head and heart and had openly accused Pete of doping the liquor that he might get their cash. Old Pete never lost his temper at these accusations. Usually he rested his fat hands upon his white-aproned sides and laughed loudly.

Pete had been a Cincinnati bartender in his earlier days. Although he had existed twenty years in Deadman's Gulch and accumulated enough money to pay for a house on "The Avenue," he had not forgotten the niceties of the life of the city which had made him a favorite there. His aprons were immaculate and smoothly ironed and everything about his place was carefully prepared for the reception of those poor fellows who knew no home except the filthy camp with its poorly cooked food. Often when they galloped down the trail cold and hungry, Pete's Place, brilliantly illuminated, gleamed out of the darkness and lured them in as a lamp in summer coaxes the candle-fly to its doom. Pete, in his white apron, his red face beaming, usually met them at the door with outstretched hands. Although the fire-place was always filled with logs which had seasoned for a summer beneath the blazing sun, Pete would bawl out:

"Throw on another log, Billy, the gentleman's cold. Jim, toss up a good hot eggnog. Nothing like it to warm a feller on a cold night. I reckon that wind most cut you in two when you rode over the mountain. Lots of fellers is glad to see old Pete's place tonight. I don't see what you 'uns would do without it."

Disgusted, disheartened Max mentally rehearsed the program as he staggered back into the saloon and seated himself at a table. If Pete noticed the man, he paid no attention and continued the merry little by-play with which he had so often pleased his guests.

Max saw it all for the first time as a matter of business and thrust his hands into his empty pockets and scowled again. He could not remember one thing that had transpired in this eventful week, except the swift melting away of the two hundred dollars which he had earned so dearly. Max covered his face with his great hands. The wife and children must wait again. For a long time he sat there thinking. "There's a plenty of truth in your sign!" he remarked suddenly to old Pete who had come up behind him.

The saloonist thought Max had forgotten his ill humor. "That's right. It's a good place to meet the boys!" he said. "It's a regular hotel. You been here for a week, old boy, and got all the drinks you wanted with board and lodging thrown in, but that's all right. Old Pete likes to make things pleasant for the boys and—"

"I could have boarded at the 'Waldorf Astoria' for what I paid you this week!" interrupted Big Max, fierce anger smoldering in his eyes. "I had two hundred dollars and now I haven't a cent." Pete struck the gong loudly as if by accident. Max knew he had done it to keep the other men from hearing the accusation.

"I didn't mean your old sign," Max continued quietly. "I was talking about your new one."

"There ain't no new sign, you fool!" declared Pete in a torrent of rage, for now that his patron's money was gone and his brain clear, Beier was afraid of what the man might say. "If you're seeing things you'd better git out."

Max did not take the hint but old Pete grabbed him by the coat collar and with hand and foot managed to eject him from the warm room. At the door Max stumbled and fell, but he rose again and shook his fist in the old man's face as he delivered this parting shot:

"It's just as your sign says, a man does lose coin and character when he goes into your place. If ever I come here again you can strike me dead."

Old Pete shrugged his shoulders. He had heard such declarations before. They were usually followed by greater excesses. Max had been no exception to this rule. The saloonist watched him staggering through the snow and gazed involuntarily at the sign which had been his pride. Another breeze came and set the placard dangling. "There is something over that door. What in the mischief is it?" shivered Peter adjusting his glasses. Laboriously he read the inscription.

Gentleman George, who had not dismounted from his horse, shrugged his shoulders and laughed. "Just a bit of truth," he said, reading it aloud slowly and impressively. Old Pete stood stock still until the significance of the words filtered through his muddled brain, when he fairly danced with rage.

"Tear it down. Tear it down, somebody, quick!" he commanded, jumping round and up like a jumping-jack as he frantically waved his hands. "Who put that thing up? How long has it been there?"

"Quite a while, I guess!" remarked George mischievously.

"Why didn't somebody tell me?" cried the frantic old man.

George shrugged his shoulders, threw one leg over his mustang's back and, to the utter astonishment of old Beier, galloped away. The saloon-keeper called his servants, but one man was too short to reach the placard, and the other refused to mount the ladder which stood upon a sheet of ice. Pete called his customers, threatened, cajoled, ordered and entreated all to no purpose. It was only

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

Y. P. B. DEMONSTRATION

(Have officers on platform as in a regular meeting and members in seats reserved for them.)

Devotional Exercises (Use "In the Heart of Things," by Mrs. Mary E. Kuhl, 50 for 20 cents)

Roll Call—Current Events

Minutes of previous meeting

Reports of officers, superintendents and committees

If any superintendent has no particular report to make, she may read a leaflet bearing on that department, by permission of the chair, or urge members to greater activity along that line. For ten cents helps for any department may be secured from National W. C. T. U. Publishing House.

Unfinished Business

Here the President may bring up any plan or project which the Branch may have under advisement and have it discussed briefly and intelligently, pro and con. For instance: If you wish to establish a reading room for young people, have moving picture slides made giving temperance data, start a circulating library, place a drinking fountain, or do other commendable work and have not sufficient funds, this would be an excellent time to present the matter and perhaps secure help and co-operation. After sufficient discussion, someone may move to postpone the matter until the treasury is sufficiently replenished, or that a committee be appointed to look into the matter, or that it be referred to the finance committee for further action. The matter brought up should be something that the Branch really desires to accomplish.

New Business

Here any local law violation may be brought up and discussed, or a number of campaign posters may be displayed or those on the wall referred to and a discussion follow as to which could best be used locally.

If the Branch is making a "Trip to Seattle or to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters," have the map hung on the wall and let the conductor of each train make a report and move the trains to proper places, when each side may give rally cries, etc. The president should explain, for the benefit of visitors, concerning the trip and should also ask for new members. If members have already been secured, a welcome service may follow.

The president may then announce that nstead of a regular program or the Study Course a parliamentary drill will be conducted by ————, and a part or all of "Parliamentary Voices," by Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, be used. After being duly moved the meeting may be adourned and all present invited to remain for a social hour, when light refreshments may be served, and an effort be made to secure new members.

The meeting may be held in a church or invitations issued for a meeting in some home, not forgetting to mention the social hour. The exercises should be rehearsed as carefully as for any other entertainment, in order that the meeting may not lag and that it may be what it is intended to be—an instructive Y. P. B. demonstration.

TRIP TO SEATTLE OR TO NATIONAL W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS

Another Means of Reaching Our Goal—5,000 New Branch Members This Year

[If you are a Branch of the east or middle west (a section which takes in the north and south as well), let your destination for this trip be Seattle—the National W. C. T. U. convention city of 1915. If you are of the far west, let the destination be National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Evanston, Ill. If the trip is made to the latter point, which is in the middle section, or if the trip to Seattle is made from the middle states, the return trip may also be made, which will equalize the journey from all points.]

Points at which the train is to stop should be listed before the start, together with the number of miles each is located from the starting place. Interesting bits of information in connection with each stopping place may be given at each meeting by the conductor of the train, and thus add interest to the journey. The Branch is divided into two sides, each of which elects a conductor, engineer and fireman (other trainmen also if desired). The Y. P. B. president as division superintendent, is impartial, helping both sides. The trains may be named, for instance, The Y. P. B. Special, The Prohibition Whirlwind, The Challenge, etc. Each train under the direction of its crew starts for its destination at the same time and each member present at a meeting counts five miles, a visitor ten miles, a new member fifty miles, dues collected (each member) ten miles. At each meeting the conductor of the respective trains (whose duty it is to keep the record) tells just where each train is stationed, and how far it has traveled since last report. A map with a red line to indicate the route of the trains, blue dots for the stopping places and movable objects to represent the trains, hung on the wall at each meeting, will add much enthusiasm to the journey. Each passenger of each train calls upon his or her particular friends, explains our work and aims and asks each to become a member. After these have joined their friends are visited in the same manner. The passengers of the last train arriving either entertain the passengers of the "fast" train with a reception or banquet, or give a public entertainment at which time a collection may be taken for the Campaign Fund. The engineer and fireman, whose duty it is to keep the fire going and the train moving, should use all possible means to bring their train in ahead of the competing train.

From now until next September is allowed for the trip. Perhaps the very enterprising Branches may make both trips. One Branch under this plan is reported to have secured 130 new paid members.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PROHIBITION RALLY NO. 1

Songs from Y. P. B. Chorus Book, by chorus

Scripture—Isaiah 1:4-20; or a number of texts bearing on temperance and prohibition may be given out previously to young people

Prayer

Song—"The Time Is Now" (Song Leaflet)

Story of the Crusade—Let this be given by a young man or young woman dwelling on the part played by the son and daughter of Mother Thompson

Solo—"The Battle Song" (No. 68, Temperance Songster.) Have a line of young people (graduating in size from the tiniest child obtainable to the young people of the Branch) march in, singing chorus after last verse. They may sing the chorus after other verses in an ante-room of church, where they can be heard but not seen.

Voice of the States—Let each state be represented by a young woman, preferably dressed in white and carrying an umbrella covered with red, white and blue and having in large letters across front, "Colorado (or whatever the state may be) expects to stay dry." If desired each representative can give a word, sing a song or otherwise represent her state. Then let a young man dressed as Uncle Sam come in carrying a red, white and blue umbrella under his arm. When he reaches the platform he raises the umbrella on which are the words, "United States expects to be dry in 1920," and as he does so let chorus sing the chorus of "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," repeating it as the young people march off the platform. If desired, Uncle Sam may tell of the vote taken in House of Representatives on December 22 and any other up-to-date facts, and the chorus sings, "Help It On" as they march off the stage.

"The Outlook"—ten-minute address

Song—"A Song of Consecration" (Song leaflet)

Reading and adoption of resolution endorsing Sheppard-Hobson amendment

Appeal for pledge signers and members by a member

While cards are distributed and members secured sing No. 34 and "Helpers' Song" in Chorus Book

MICHIGAN ATHLETES FOR TEMPERANCE

"Varsity athletes at the University of Michigan have, as a body, taken a stand for temperance and clean living among students.

"Several years ago the fraternities, in the interest of good scholarship, united in an attempt to suppress the drink evil. Rules were adopted prohibiting the use of intoxicants in fraternity houses, and freshmen were forbidden to frequent saloons. A no-treat rule was also passed.

"Besides the reforms accomplished by the fraternities, the student body has been signally benefited by the good offices of the University Health Service in throwing light upon the inevitable penalties that follow in the wake of evil practices. As a result of these sane endeavors in the interest of physical and moral health, the drink habit among students has decreased 25 per cent annually during the last three or four years."

Says Mr. Lewis C. Reiman, '17 L., member of the football team: "Any practice that dissipates our energies and lowers our efficiency can mean only one thing—a lower standard of school work and athletics."

PROHIBITION STAND TAKEN BY HARVARD STUDENTS

The Boston (Mass.) Post of January 17 contained the following interesting article regarding the stand taken by Harvard students recently:

"A protest against the serving of beer at the annual banquet of the freshman class was made in an open letter to the Harvard Crimson by F. Treadwell Smith, one of the leading members of the senior class and a member of the Harvard chapter of the Phi Beta Kappa. The prohibitionists admit that their first attempt to shut off the supply of beer in the freshman class is only the first step in the campaign that is to sweep through all the classes and abolish beer at class meetings, smokers and the like. The Harvard Student Council, made up of the leading undergraduates and forming the most powerful student organization at Harvard, has been called upon to stop beer at the freshman banquet.

"An indication that the Harvard square tradesmen are fearful of the spread of the prohibition movement to the university is shown by the fact that one of the students' shops recently packed its show windows with beer steins of all sorts and announced a clearance sale of those articles. The merchant wishes to rid himself of all quaffing paraphernalia in case the millennium arrives and Harvard students swear off on beer."

What 15c Will Do

The little matter of 15c in stamps will bring you the Pathfinder for 13 weeks on trial. The Pathfinder is a nicely illustrated weekly published at the Nation's Capital, for the Nation; now in its 21st year of its reading success. The paper fills the bill without emptying the purse it costs but $1 a year. If you want to keep posted on what is going on in the world, at the least expense of time or money, this is your means. If you want a paper in your home that is sincere, reliable, entertaining, wholesome, the Pathfinder is yours. If you would appreciate a paper which gets everything clearly, fairly, briefly, here it is at last. Send only 15c to show that you might like such a paper, and we will send the Pathfinder on probation 13 weeks. The 15c does not cover cost, but we are glad to invest in New Friends. Or send $1 for full year; money back any time if not satisfied. Address Pathfinder, Bx T, Washington, D.C.

MAX O'BRIEN'S VALENTINE

when old drunken Jim tottered up to the door—out of which he had been thrown more than once—only when Jim had received a good drink with the promise of several more after the placard was burned, that Beier secured a man foolhardy enough to scale the dizzy height.

Jim was brave and daring only because the whisky made him so. He fell once. After another drink he made a second trial and secured the card, which Pete wrathfully stuck into the fire.

Thoroughly sobered, Max walked on through the snow. The night was dark but fanciful Max saw a million stars which arranged themselves into letters which spelled the words of Pete Beier's new sign—"Good-by to both coin and character."

As Max thrust his hands into his empty pockets he groaned aloud. The lights of the general store which also contained the postoffice loomed up before him. He stopped for a package of tobacco for which he did not offer to pay. As he stood by the stove, the store-keeper came out of the little cage marked "U. S. Mail." "Here's something for you!" he remarked, handing over two letters and a package.

Max trembled like a leaf. Letters were so few that he always associated them with trouble. He sat down by the stove and with his pen-knife cut the strings of the package. It contained the picture of a beautiful, curly-headed little girl—his niece. When he left twelve years ago Eunice had been a tot of three whom he had carried on his shoulder and tossed laughingly into the air. She was now fifteen years old. He unfolded the crisp sheet which contained her letter and began to read:

"Dear Uncle:—

"I wish you would come home. Aunt Annie cries and cries, and yesterday when some one spoke of her going to you she shook her head. 'Max'll never send the money, poor lad, and I know why,' she said. 'I'll never see him again. The home I'm going to is—heaven.' She isn't very strong.

"I know you mean all right by staying away so long and that you are piling up money so you can keep us in style when we get there."

Conscience-stricken Max, unmindful of curious eyes, groaned aloud. "I'm coming, too, for papa and mama are dead now, but if you don't come for us soon, there'll be no one to greet you, not even your little Eunice. Willie and Charley are both buried in one grave. Diphtheria took them away and little Annie went a week after."

The letter fell from Max O'Brien's shaking hands. All gone, his boys and girls, and he had not even known! Brokenly he resumed his reading. He must know the rest.

"We tried to telegraph you but couldn't and then we wrote, but since we had no answer, we supposed you did not get the letter. Aunt Annie and I are so lonely and sad since the children are gone. We only have a few pennies. It took all we had saved to pay the doctor and the undertaker. Come home, Uncle Max. It's only two weeks until Valentine's Day and your anniversary. Be Auntie's Valentine. Come.

"With much love,

"EUNICE."

Max retied the picture and put Eunice's letter in his pocket. Then he slowly read the delayed letter which told of the awful calamity. Never more would the children whom he loved more than his life run to meet him. The tears dripped down his weather-beaten cheeks as he thought of the day when he had started out to make a fortune that they might live as he wished them to do.

He had prospered at first in the wild new country, but after a while he had fallen in with bad company and had almost forgotten the dear ones who waited at home. While they suffered Pete Beier had benefited.

Like a ship without a rudder, Max had drifted so far from land that he could not even see a streak of blue sky. It had been twelve long years since he left home and started work in the mine. His body was racked and broken by dissipation and he was prematurely old. For all the years he had been away he had nothing to show but a piece of ground which was practically worthless. For the first time he realized that he had sold his birthright for a mess of tares. He dashed away the tears with his rough sleeve and silently left the store.

The moon had risen, bathing Pete's Place in misty light, but Max did not notice it. In fancy he walked with his dead. He hurried to the superintendent's home and slowly opened the gate. When he rang the bell the pretty young daughter, who reminded him of Annie, opened the door and showed him to the office.

The superintendent eyed him inquiringly. "I've had bad news," Max informed him, turning his hat in his shaking hand. "My children are dead. Their mother's not far behind them. I want to draw what money's coming so I can go home, and I'd like to sell you my piece of ground, Mr. Andrus. It isn't worth much, but I never expect to come back."

Because Andrew Andrus read between lines he answered a little more kindly than he would otherwise have done. "I am glad to hear that you have made that decision," he said sympathetically. "In regard to your ground, a mineralogist told me yesterday that he thinks it is rich in ore. I will pay all your wages, Max, and will give you in addition a check for five thousand dollars in payment of the land. I pity you, boy. Go and sin no more!"

The next day Max O'Brien set out on his long, lonely journey. Old Pete heard of the man's good fortune and sighed. "If I'd a-knowed I'd a treated him better last night!" he said to his wife, "and he wouldn't have gone. Sometimes I let my feelin's get the better of me."

Max, meanwhile, was far away. He stopped in the little city which was twenty miles from his native village, to buy some delicacies for his sick wife and he even bought a valentine for her and one for Eunice—a shimmer of lace and roses and satin. His wife's remembrance was a booklet of Valentine verses ornamented with lilies. Inside Max slyly tucked a bank book which contained a credit for five thousand dollars.

Noon of a cold, gloomy day had arrived when Max tiptoed up to the porch of the little house which he had left so hopefully twelve years ago, and looked in the window. His wife and Eunice were seated at a scantily spread table. Poverty enveloped everything and Max thought brokenly of the hours and dollars which he had wasted in Pete Beier's saloon. He turned the knob easily. Before the women saw him he called out: "Here's a Valentine, Annie!" and eagerly held out his arms. "I hope you'll be glad to see me."

Peace and plenty reigned in the little house after that. Max devoted his time to making his sick wife well and trying to atone for the past. He became a worker in the church and a fighter for the cause of the right. Conspicuous on the wall in the remodeled cottage hangs a signed temperance pledge. Framed with it is the motto which hung on Pete Beier's door, "He who enters here bids good-by to both coin and character," and Max loves to tell to both friend and foe the story of his reformation, which came about because of a pasteboard placard which a wag in a moment of anger hung over Pete Beier's door two weeks before Valentine's Day.

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can be Strong, Vigorous — full of Life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Clear Skin.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can increase or reduce your weight.

I no longer need to say what "I can do" but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 70,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.

What My Pupils Say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion, it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me. Last year I weighed 216 lbs., this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver. I can breathe now, too. It is surprising how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 lbs. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses and my catarrh is so much better. Isn't that good?"

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My interesting book tells how to stand and walk correctly and contains other information of vital interest to women. You are welcome to it. Write for it. It is FREE. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend. I have had a wonderful experience and I'd like to tell you about it. I am at my desk daily from 8 until 5.

A NEW TEMPERANCE SONG BY REV. J. C. HARRISON

of the ALABAMA CONFERENCE. This is one of the best Temperance songs written in years. Its beautiful story of a young girl's plea to her father is really a Temperance sermon, while its melody is one of the sweetest ever written. Ask your music dealer for it, or send 10c to the publisher. P. J. Howley Music Co., 102 West 42nd Street, New York. Special rates on quantities to Societies or Temperance Organizations.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILL.

Announcement has been made by the World's Purity Federation, with headquarters at La Crosse, Wisconsin, U. S. A., that the ninth international Purity Congress will be held this year July 18-24 at San Francisco, California, in connection with the Panama-Pacific-Universal Exposition.

The program to be carried out at this congress will include addresses by eminent reformers, scientists, educators, physicians, government officials, and religious workers, which together with the open discussions, debates and question periods, will cover every phase of the social and moral reform movement from the municipal, national and international viewpoints.

CAMPAIGN SUGGESTION

The laboring classes who do not attend church, but who wield such a power at election time, might be helped through moving picture shows. In El Centro, California, during the statewide campaign, three moving picture shows aided the "dry" campaign. One show carried the slides for nothing, another showed slides every night for the small sum of $4.00 per month. For a small amount the most effective posters can be made into slides. These picture shows also allowed five minute talks once a week besides putting on "John Barleycorn" and other effective temperance plays.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

UNPRECEDENTED PROTRACTED SESSION OF CONGRESS—JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE—INVESTIGATION OF SENATORIAL ELECTIONS DEFERRED—AGENTS OF DEPARTMENT OF LABOR VISIT CITIES IN INTEREST OF UNEMPLOYED—APPEAL FOR PROHIBITION IN HAWAIIAN ISLANDS—EXPERIMENT WITH AMERICAN FLAGS MADE FROM COTTON

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, Nat'l W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

As noted last week, the sub-committee of the Senate judiciary reported favorably to the full committee on the Hobson-Sheppard amendment. We have been hoping things would adjust themselves in the Senate, whereby this, with other measures, might be brought before them, but the filibuster regarding the ship purchase bill has held everything in abeyance, and now that there are less than three weeks of this Congress left, appropriation bills must, and probably will, receive the undivided attention of the Senate, but the fact that the amendment has been favorably reported to the committee will give prestige to the measure in the new Congress.

Never before in the history of the American Congress has there been such a protracted session as has been carried on in the Senate during the week just passed, and which lasted fifty-four hours and eleven minutes. The Senate wing of the Capitol looked like a huge hostelry to those who were permitted to glance within some of the large adjacent committee rooms.

Monday evening at 6:30, Senator Jones of Washington began speaking, and talked all night till 8:30 o'clock Tuesday morning. Beside him sat Senator Weeks of Massachusetts, his desk piled high with books and papers, prepared to relieve Mr. Jones, and these two kept watch during the night, with a few watchful members of the opposition warily protecting their interests. A majority of Senators left the Senate chamber and sought a modicum of rest, but were compelled twice during the night to visit the Senate in answer to a roll-call.

When the Senate roll was called Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock, every member of that body responded. This was the first time the full membership of the Senate has been present since the memorable fight in 1893, when Grover Cleveland put through the repeal of the purchase clause of the silver act, over the protest of the vigorous minority of his party.

Joint Resolution for Establishment of Peace Introduced

Senator La Follette of Wisconsin on Monday introduced in the Senate a joint resolution, "authorizing the President of the United States to convey to all neutral nations the desire of the government for an international conference for the purpose of promoting, by co-operation, and through its friendly offices, the early cessation of hostilites, and the establishment of peace among the warring nations of Europe." The President is authorized to appoint commissioners to represent the United States at any such conference, whether called by the United States or another nation. In case any such international peace conference shall be called by the United States, or any other nation, the sum of $25,000 shall be appropriated out of the treasury for the expenses of the representatives of the United States. This resolution was read and laid on the table, from whence it can be taken at any time for discussion and possible passage by the Senate, according to its rules.

How rejoiced the entire civilized world would be should such a peace conference be called, and lead to a cessation of hostilities among the warring factions of Europe! God give us peace.

February 12, the anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, was observed by the House of Representatives. The Gettysburg address was read by Representative Russell of Missouri, followed by personal reminiscences of the martyred President by Mr. Goulden of New York, and General Sherwood of Ohio, which were received with great applause.

Investigation of Senatorial Elections Deferred

Investigation of the recent senatorial elections in Pennsylvania and Illinois as proposed in a resolution by Senator Norris of Nebraska, to the effect that "the committee on privileges and elections should endeavor to ascertain the total amount of money expended in behalf of the various candidates for nomination and election, and the methods of collection and expenditure," is postponed, it having been decided to take no action during the present session, as it was the opinion of the committee that no investigation should be undertaken until the senatorial terms of the two men mentioned begin, which will be with the assembling of the Sixty-fourth Congress, either in regular or special session.

Again the meeting of the special committee appointed by the Senate to investigate the charges made against the excise board of the District of Columbia by Senator Jones was hindered by Senator Saulsbury of Delaware, declining to serve. The Vice-President left the matter in the hands of Senator Sheppard, who promised to use his best endeavor to fill the vacant place, and get a meeting of the committee in the near future.

Agents of Department of Labor to Visit Cities in Interest of Unemployed

Special agents of the Department of Labor have been sent to New York and other large cities in an effort to ascertain the number of men out of employment in each, and, if possible, the cause. One of these agents will have a conference in New York with Mayor Mitchel, in an effort to have the police of New York co-operate in making a census of the unemployed in that city.

Out of 1,500 unemployed men examined by a corps of investigators at the municipal lodging house in New York, four-fifths have been found employable and upward of 50 per cent were anxious for work, says a preliminary report in this investigation, issued by the commissioner of the department of charities. About one-fifth of the men were found so broken in health from various causes as to be unemployable, while a few others admitted to being vagrants by choice, and a third group were temporarily unfitted for labor, and needed treatment to restore them to normal health. "More than half of the entire number were physically able to work," the report continues. "From their own statements and those of their former employers, they are anxious to work."

Plans to meet the demand for labor in the agricultural states during the harvest season have been set on foot by Secretary Wilson. The agents of the Department of Labor will co-operate with local authorities in connection with the operation of the new employment bureau, and Mr. Wilson hopes to find employment on the farms for several hundred thousand men.

Appeal for Prohibition in Hawaiian Islands

Telling of kings who had signed away all their rights and lands while under the influence of intoxicants and of the injury thereby to the people under them, Mrs. Ellen A. Weaver, a life-long resident of Hawaii, declared in an address this week that unless something is done soon to prohibit the sale of intoxicants on the islands the Hawaiian people as a race will become extinct. Mrs. Weaver, who is a sister of the late General Samuel Chapman Armstrong, founder of Hampton Institute, delivered the address at a meeting and social of Chapin W. C. T. U., Washington, D. C. The effect of intoxicants on Hawaiians, whom she described as a lovable people but easily led, was similar, she said, to the effect on the Indians of North America. She said that after the native manufacture of intoxicants had been stopped through the influence of the missionaries of the early days the people of the islands had prospered and had given their children a good education. "Everything looked well until the liquor men came and began to exploit the liquor. Now the Hawaiians are being swept from the face of the earth."

Test American Flags Made From Cotton

Fearing a flag famine because belligerents will not permit exportation of wool bunting, the United States coast guard is experimenting with American flags made from cotton.

Heretofore all flags on United States revenue cutters and the 287 lighthouses in the Atlantic and Pacific have been flying the Stars and Stripes made out of English cloth. The present test is to determine whether American cotton will wear as well as wool.

Utah Senate Passes Prohibition Bill

After a prolonged and spirited debate the senate of the Utah legislature passed the Wootten statewide prohibition bill on the evening of February 11, by a vote of 15 to 2. It is regarded as certain that it will pass the house by a large majority, and if so the law will go into effect June, 1916. Since the election of June, 1911, the state of Utah has been largely dry.

French Chamber of Deputies Passes Bill Prohibiting Absinthe

May Prohibit All Alcoholic Liquors

The chamber of deputies on February 12 adopted the bill prohibiting the sale of absinthe.

Indemnities will be granted to manufacturers affected by the bill, and will be covered in a special act later. The bill also applies to Algeria and the colonies, and will be proposed for adoption by the protectorates.

The measure now goes to the senate.

"Only a Beginning"

During the debate on the bill Deputy Edouard Lachaud, a radical-republican, said: "Absinthe suppression is only the commencement. We will arrive at the suppression of all similar appetizers."

An amendment was offered making the prohibitive features of the bill apply also to alcohol and bitters, but it was withdrawn after the statement was made that this would be the object of a report by a special committee and that propositions tending to the suppression of all alcoholic extracts were being considered.

Letter of Appreciation To Czar of Russia

The wonderful transformation of the Russian people as the direct result of the prohibition of alcoholic liquors in the Czar's domains has been watched by the white ribboners of the United States with intense interest and deep thankfulness. The following letter, giving expression to these feelings, has been sent to the Czar by the President of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union:

To His Majesty,
The Czar of Russia.
Sir:

It is my high privilege on behalf of four hundred thousand women, members of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the United States, to extend to your Majesty, an expression of their profound gratitude for the far-seeing action of your Majesty in abolishing the liquor traffic in Russia.

This act of your Majesty is exerting a mighty influence for good in the United States of America and will prove an incalculable blessing to the whole world.

With great respect,
ANNA A. GORDON,
President

Michigan Has Official Reporter

The Michigan W. C. T. U. is to be congratulated on having a regular official reporter in the state legislature. Miss Nagler, who represents the W. C. T. U. as well as several other papers, was seated by regular appointment of the speaker of the house, with the same privileges as the reporters of the greatest papers of the state.

Prohibition Referendum Bill Passed by South Carolina Legislature

On September 14, 1915, the voters of the state of South Carolina are to decide on the question of statewide prohibition. On January 29 the house of representatives passed a bill authorizing a referendum, and on February 11, the measure was passed by the senate. The indications are that statewide prohibition will win by a large majority.

Of the forty-three counties of South Carolina, thirty-six are now under prohibition, while the remainder have dispensaries only in the principal cities, in most counties only in the county seat.

Des Moines' Eighty Saloons Must Close Their Doors

The city council of Des Moines, Iowa, on February 11, refused to grant the saloonkeepers a renewal of their licenses. This means that the eighty saloons of the city of Des Moines permanently closed their doors on the evening of Monday, February 15. On December 31, 1914, the council published an order that the saloons must be closed February 15. On February 11, the liquor men asked for an extension of time, pending the decision in the courts on a petition of consent.

Anti-Opium Protocol Signed

The protocol of the anti-opium convention of 1912, which aims at the suppression of the opium traffic and international traffic in cocaine and other noxious and habit-forming drugs, was signed at the Hague on February 12 (according to special cablegram to The Chicago Herald) by Henry Van Dyke, the American minister to the Netherlands; Tang Tsing Fou, the Chinese minister, and M. Loudon, the Netherlands minister of foreign affairs.

The affixing of their signatures to the protocol by these three diplomats puts the convention into immediate force for the signatory countries, which comprise approximately 475,000,000 inhabitants, China with an estimated population of 330,000,000; the United States, 100,000,000, and the Netherlands and her dependencies, 45,000,000.

Hopes More Will Sign

At the conclusion of the ceremony Mr. Van Dyke said:

"The terrible fact that this enormous war is in progress should not make civilized nations ignore things which operate for the welfare of mankind.

"The opium convention aims at putting a stop to the vicious trade in opium as an intoxicant, and at imposing the strictest regulation of the legitimate commerce in opium for purely medicinal purposes. I hope that the three nations which have taken the first definite step in this direction soon will be followed by many others."

The administration statewide prohibition bill containing provisions for the enforcement of the prohibition constitutional amendment adopted by the people of Colorado last fall, passed the senate February 9 and went to the house. The measure prohibits interstate and intrastate shipment of liquor for sale or gift, except for medicinal and sacramental purposes.

Iowa Celebrates Lincoln's Birthday by Prohibition Victory

The past week has been a memorable one for the state of Iowa. In addition to the action taken by the city council of Des Moines closing the doors of its eighty saloons, the senate of the state legislature celebrated Lincoln's birthday by passing two important measures.

By a vote of 39 to 10 it adopted a constitutional amendment providing for statewide prohibition, and afterwards by a vote of 27 to 20 passed a measure repealing the mulct law. This latter action was taken to make prohibition effective pending a vote of the people on the adoption of the constitutional amendment. Leaders of the prohibition forces claim there is little doubt of favorable action by the house.

Suffrage Victories in Four Legislatures

Pennsylvania, Iowa, North Dakota and Vermont Act on Suffrage Resolutions

IOWA

Less than twenty minutes' time was required, on February 13, for the senate of the Iowa legislature to adopt, by a vote of 38 to 11, a resolution submitting to the voters of the state, at the general election in 1916, a constitutional amendment providing for woman suffrage. The suffrage leaders are confident of a large majority in favor of the measure in the house.

PENNSYLVANIA

The Wilson woman suffrage resolution, amending the state constitution to permit women to vote, on February 9, passed the lower house of the Pennsylvania legislature by a vote of 130 to 71. When it passes the senate (as it is confidently expected it will do) it will then have passed two sessions of the legislature and will be submitted to the voters at the next general election. Governor Brumbaugh in his inaugural address strongly urged the adoption of the resolution.

VERMONT

On February 12, the senate of the Vermont legislature passed, without debate, a bill extending the franchise to women at town and city elections and for presidential electors.

NORTH DAKOTA

On February 13, the senate of the North Dakota legislature, by a vote of 31 to 14, adopted a resolution submitting a woman suffrage amendment to the people. The legislature of 1914 acted favorably upon this measure. If it passes the house it will be voted upon at the next general election.

THINK IT OVER!

"The United States Department of Labor states that 72 per cent of agriculturists, 79 per cent of manufacturers, 88 per cent of tradesmen, and 90 per cent of railroad officials discriminate against men who drink. What stronger arguments against the liquor habit could be produced? Think it over!"

This statement appears in the October number of The Mixer, a little efficiency monthly published by the Illinois Steel Company of Joliet, Ill.

HOW THEY ARE SECURING THEIR NEW MEMBERS

The state presidents are rapidly formulating plans to enable their respective states to meet the apportionment assigned them by the National W. C. T. U. in an effort to reach the coveted goal of 50,000 new members in 1915. Among the states which have courageously increased their quota are Massachusetts and Oregon, whose plans may prove helpful:

Massachusetts

Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson, President

1. We recommend the free use of Win One cards, also that a Win One button, to be sent out from state headquarters, be worn by every woman securing a bona fide, paid-up member to a local union. The woman securing by her own effort the largest number of members shall be made special guest of honor at the next state convention, and shall be presented with a photograph of Miss Willard or Mrs. Stevens. The local treasurer must certify to the fact that these members have paid dues.

2. The local union which makes a net gain of twenty-five members shall be presented with ten free subscriptions to Our Message, and its president, or other representative, shall be decorated with a blue ribbon at the state convention.

3. The local union making a net gain of fifty members shall receive five subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, and its president, or representative, shall be decorated with a red ribbon at the state convention.

4. Each local union is urged to take upon itself the organization of a new union in an adjacent community and to the union which succeeds in thus organizing a union of not fewer than ten members there will be presented a copy of "The Life of Frances Willard" or five subscriptions to Our Message, or the Campaign edition of THE UNION SIGNAL, as may be chosen.

5. The union making a net gain of one hundred members shall have the travelling expenses of its president, or some chosen representative, paid to the state convention, provided the amount be not in excess of ten dollars.

6. The county making a net gain of 500 shall have the traveling expenses of its chosen representative paid to the National Convention, provided the amount does not exceed fifty dollars.

(The amounts specified will be paid towards the expense if they exceed the maximum, but if the traveling expense is less than the sums specified only the actual cost will be given.)

7. May 8 will be again observed as Membership Day and the executive committee extends a cordial invitation to all who can to gather at headquarters and make it a real feast of ingathering. Special badges will be given to the unions which, at that time, have paid into the state treasury dues for the same number as last year, and other very special recognition will be given to those who, at that date, have secured the gain required of them.

Oregon

Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, President

The counties will be divided into two classes, one consisting of counties which paid dues last year for more than one hundred members; the second of counties which paid dues on one hundred or less members.

The first prize, of railroad fare from Portland to Seattle and return for the National W. C. T. U. Convention, Oct. 9-14, 1915, will be awarded to the county in each class making greatest per cent gain in membership, above the 20 per cent gain to which we stand pledged.

A second prize of one-half railroad fare Portland to Seattle and return for same convention will be given to the county in each class making second greatest per cent gain in membership over the 20 per cent. All gains will be estimated according to membership dues paid before the books of the state treasurer close, two weeks previous to state convention. You will understand two first and two second prizes are offered.

It is understood that the county president doing the work this year, and not the incoming one, if there be a change, is entitled to the trip. In case it is impossible for the county president to go, the county may select some one in her place. Shall we not "get busy" and see what a splendid gain in membership we can make? With the National Convention coming to the coast we should make special effort for a large increase in membership.

POSTER DAY IN NEW YORK

MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, President New York W. C. T. U.

At a meeting of the Allied Forces for Civic and Moral Betterment held in New York City on December 29, it was voted to designate February 22 and October 12 as poster days, and all temperance, philanthropic and religious organizations were asked to unite in putting up temperance posters on these dates.

The W. C. T. U., in addition to its own work, was asked to present the matter to the churches, urging each to secure from its own temperance committee special posters to be used on that date. Mrs. Frances W. Graham of Lockport, New York, first vice-president of the state W. C. T. U., was put in charge of this work. A letter was sent to every local union, telling about poster days, and the price of posters, six for twenty-five cents. A coin card with a place for fifty cents and twenty-five cents in silver was enclosed with a return envelope directed to Mrs. Graham. Arrangements were made to have all posters sent out from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, so that when orders come to Mrs Graham she simply addresses the gummed label and forwards to Evanston. It is too early to tell how many sets of posters will be used, but at the rate orders are coming in, the people in New York state will know on February 22, or before, something of what the temperance sentiment in the state amounts to.

Some unions could not wait for the special date because the towns in which they are organized are in the midst of no-license campaigns, and others wanted the posters for Temperance Sunday; but nothing we have ever done has secured such unanimity of action and such publicity at so little expense. We fully expect that one thousand sets of posters will be needed in addition to those prepared and put up by other organizations.

Poster Day is in anticipation of the hearing on the statewide prohibition bill, which has been set for March 10.

THE JAPANESE WERE AHEAD OF HER

In a certain university town in the middle west there is an unusually choice cafeteria at which most appetizing mince pie is served. A white ribboner who patronizes this place ordered this delectable bit of pastry one day, but after taking one taste pushed it aside—it was strongly flavored with brandy. She said to her companions, "I shall let the proprietor know what I think about this—he has no right to use alcohol in any form in food offered to the students who frequent this place."

She intended speaking the word immediately, but it was forgotten. Two days later, as she approached the manager's desk, she saw just ahead of her two Japanese students engaged in an earnest conversation with the proprietor, who was explaining and excusing, "We really do not intend to use liquor—it may have been the fermentation of the raisins that you noticed," etc., etc. A moment's conversation with these students just outside the door elicited from them the admission that they had strong principles against the use of alcohol in any form and in their own words, "would not stand for that sort of thing."

GEMS FROM THE BREWERS' CONVENTION

Mr. Henry J. Allen, editor of the Wichita Beacon and recently Progressive candidate for governor of Kansas, who has very strong views on the prohibition question, prints the following editorial in his paper:

We have just received a beautifully printed, deckle-edged, engraved, illustrated report of the fifty-fourth annual convention of the United States Brewers' Association, held at New Orleans.

We note that the deepest concern of the annual meeting was, as usual, for the taxpayer. They made it perfectly plain to everybody, that so far as the brewers themselves were concerned, they didn't care anything for prohibition—they could in fact sell more booze under prohibition than without it—but they did not want the government to lose the revenue, they didn't want the taxpayer burdened; they just wanted everything to go on in a free and easy and open way, with the taxpayer getting the best of it all the time—just as he is now in the states where the saloons run the politics.

And above all, the brewers urged "moderation," not in drinking, but in the language with which the discussions against liquor are carried on. They also desire to save the hop and barley fields from being destroyed. While prohibition increases beer sales, it apparently ruins the hop and barley crops.

One gem from the wisdom of this convention is that "beer may be substituted for bread."

Frequently it is also substituted for shoes and school books and clothes and meat and house rent and furniture. In fact, a liberal use of it will make it a substitute for everything except the grave.

Another piece of philosophy garnered from this book of brewers' wisdom is that "the only difference between bread and beer is that bread is baked, while beer is boiled."

It did not add, however, that the user of it is frequently stewed.

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. NOTES

ANNA A. GORDON, Honorary Secretary World's W. C. T. U.

The establishment of headquarters for the unions of the Cape Peninsula is reported by Miss Emilie J. Solomon, president Cape Town, South Africa, W. C. T. U. The "first big piece of work" of the unions was the sending out of copies of Guy Hayler's book, "Prohibition Advance in All Lands," to every member of Parliament. In each copy was pasted a small prohibition map of the United States.

The Port Elizabeth W. C. T. U. of South Africa has a new hall, a suitable place for holding public meetings.

Mrs. Carvosso, corresponding secretary of the Australia W. C. T. U., writes that the minister for defense has prohibited the sale of liquor in the canteens of all the soldiers' camps, and the liquor question is being brought very prominently before the people from an economic point of view.

The Indian branch of the W. C. T. U. at Cawnpore meets at eight o'clock in the morning, on the second Saturday in each month. The members include the teachers and zenana workers of the missions, and other women. The president, an Indian head teacher in one of the schools, conducts the meetings. Mothers frequently bring with them their babies and if some of them indulge in crying it makes no difference and the meeting goes on without interruption.

Miss Ohlin, a general officer of the W. C. T. U. of Sweden, has recently spent a month in Norway. Many towns in Norway are voting on the saloon question and in several the saloon has been voted out, one of these, Stavenger, being a very important center.

An Anti-Alcohol League has been founded in Portugal, by Senor Luciano Silva of Lisbon, who is the president of the organization. The organization hopes to publish a temperance paper.

The Medal Contest Reciter in Spanish is being widely used in South American countries. Copies that have been sent to temperance workers in these states are much appreciated and contests are creating public sentiment for the temperance cause. Chili, Peru and Uruguay find them extremely helpful.

Mrs. Margaret B. Denning of Bengal, India, the able leader of the national W. C. T. U. of India, is on her way home after a furlough in the United States. Miss Papworth, president of the Madras division W. C. T. U., has been successfully discharging the duties of national president during Mrs. Denning's absence. India has six divisional organizations: Madras, Bombay, Punjab, Central Provinces, United Provinces, and Bengal. The national honorary corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. of India, Mrs. Donald Sunder, has been obliged to give up connection with the national work, but is president of her own divisional W. C. T. U. Mrs. Boggess of Lucknow is Mrs. Sunder's successor.

Chili, writes Miss Adda Burch, is rich in mineral wealth and in generous patriotic people. A band of white ribboners in Concepcion is holding aloft the white banner of prohibition. There are temperance societies in the churches, and once a year on "Independence Day" a public temperance program is given in each church. All the mission and government schools permit scientific temperance instruction.

Mrs. Ida A. T. Arms at the head of our work for Chili attended the last annual Sunday school convention of Chili held in the southern part of the state. Mrs. Arms met members of the Anglican church who had known something of B. W. T. A. work in England and it is hoped that a union may later be organized. Miss Annie Bevis of the English college at Fennico will, it is hoped, promote this new organization. Mrs. Arms reports the teachers, preachers and Sunday school superintendents in her home city of Concepcion as all alive and alert on the temperance question. Mrs. Arms is sanguine about the possibility of establishing before many months the national W. C. T. U. of South America.

The temperance forces of New Zealand have succeeded in electing to Parliament men who are pledged to the reduction to at least fifty-five per cent of the three-fifths vote necessary to carry prohibition. Forty-nine of the men returned to Parliament favor this reduction against twenty-seven who do not. If the next fight for national prohibition in New Zealand can be made under a fifty-five per cent majority law, there is a good prospect for victory and it will be an incentive to aim at a manageable goal.

The white ribboners of France have engaged Mlle. Marguerite Lecoy to assist as organizer of the Ligue du Ruban Blanc Français, our W. C. T. U. Mlle. Lecoy's mother has been a total abstinence worker in the Croix Bleue for twenty-five years. Our comrades in Paris are ambitious to see large things accomplished for the temperance cause in France, but the cruel war sadly interferes with their admirable plans. France has gifted temperance speakers who could give time to all sections of the country if their expenses could be met.

Miss Hardynia K. Norville attended the ninth annual Methodist Conference held in Rosario, the Argentine. Bishop Stuntz very kindly gave Miss Norville two opportunities to address the conference. He also allowed her space in the rear of the church for an exhibit of our Spanish temperance literature and our best W. C. T. U. publications in English. Charts and posters adorned the walls and above the table holding the literature, Miss Norville hung a large globe encircled with our white ribbon emblem. Between the meetings of the conference the ministers crowded around the literature table, deeply interested to examine the leaflets, and books, and to talk with Miss Norville about our work. Miss Norville is now in Montevideo, Uruguay, and will for some months assist the work in that state, which for a number of years has been so admirably cared for by our good friend, Mrs. van Domselaar.

HOPEFUL OUTLOOK FOR PROHIBITION IN SWEDEN

That the outlook for National Prohibition in Sweden is bright is the statement of Frederick Peterson, in an article appearing in the last number of The Temperance Cause. He explains, "The present Crown Prince, who will be the next king if he survives his father, is a total abstainer and forbids the use of liquor in his household. Both houses of the Parliament are increasing their temperance membership. Edward J. Wavrinsky, the head of the Good Templars of the World, is the temperance leader, as well as leader of the Social Democrats in the upper house." Mr. Peterson states that "133 of the 220 members of the house are total abstainers, and the majority of these are Social Democrats. This party has eighty-seven members in the lower house and fourteen in the upper, it being in the majority. In 1896 there was one member representing the Socialists in the lower house and exceedingly few total abstainers. Now the Socialists are the leaders on this question. The working classes, the small wage earners, constitute this party. Who better than they know the evil of intemperance? Woman municipal suffrage has placed many able women in city governments. They are leaders in the temperance army, and it is sublime to see them and hear them speak for home against the rumseller whether it be in the public forum or in the city councils."

Mr. Peterson gives the following significant incident to show how the liquor interests are preparing for the abolition of their business:

"I intended to start an export business in fruit from the United States to Sweden and Norway but was prevented by the war. A man learning of this sought an interview with me in order to arrange for a sales agency. I asked him what his present business was and he answered: 'I am a manager of the Liquor company in the city of Carlstad,' and added, 'If the sentiment in favor of prohibition increases at the same rate the next few years as it has lately I and many others will be out of a job and we are preparing for something else to do.'"

PROHIBITION IN RUSSIA

In Russia none can buy a flagon of vodka or old rye; the men must ride the water wagon—the country's all gone dry. The law affects all grades of critters, the humble and the rich, and those who lately sipped their bitters now hit the pumpovitch. There's no relief for thirsty beggars, no help for Russian sports; the alleys know no cheap bootleggers, no hole in wall resorts. The oldtime tricks that lead to drinking won't work there, worth a cent; a man may sprain his eyebrows winking; the druggist won't relent. Old Russia's brand of law prohibits, in country and in town, and soon her prisons and her gibbets will all be taken down. If some one hasn't told a whopper about conditions there the country soon won't have a pauper, which had them everywhere. The world will watch this Russian measure, so timely and so wise; 'twill watch and doubtless note with pleasure a nation nobly rise, from abject depths of degradation, from lying in the ditch; oh, happy that progressive nation which hits the pumpovitch!

LEGISLATIVE NEWS

Minnesota

By a vote of 36 to 31 a county option bill passed the senate of the Minnesota legislature on February 4.

Pennsylvania

A measure providing for a prohibition amendment to the state constitution has been introduced in the Pennsylvania legislature by Representative Glenn of Venango county.

Oklahoma

The lower house of the Oklahoma legislature has passed a bill abolishing all public pool and billiard halls. It was charged that the pool halls had become gathering places for violators of the prohibition laws and their customers.

West Virginia

According to the Federal Court's interpretation of the Yost law, says Mr. Fred O. Blue, commissioner of Prohibition, all boats on the rivers which form the boundaries of the state, as well as express companies and trolley lines, are included in the prohibition which forbids the shipment of intoxicants into West Virginia.

Michigan

A bill prohibiting the sale of cigarets to boys under twenty-one years of age has passed the senate of the Michigan legislature.

Alabama

Both houses of the Alabama legislature have passed, over the governor's veto, a bill to prohibit newspapers published in the state from printing liquor advertisements, and to prevent circulation in the state of papers published outside Alabama which carry such advertising. The new act, which goes into effect immediately, also prohibits liquor advertising by circular, billboard or otherwise.

A bill preventing any individual from receiving more than one quart of liquor a month from outside the state became a law automatically on February 9, Governor Henderson declining either to veto or sign it. It becomes effective on July 1, when the prohibition law goes into effect.

Montana.

"The livest topic at the capital city of Montana and at the state house," says Rev. W. H. Wolfe, in the Anaconda Standard, "is prohibition. It is among the exclusive topics, and the surprising thing to me yesterday was the fact that men who two years ago would not talk about prohibition to any one are now willing and apparently anxious to discuss it at any length."

Wisconsin

A bill submitting the question of statewide prohibition to the vote of the people has been introduced in the lower house of the Wisconsin legislature.

West Virginia

The reinforced Yost bill, providing for the strengthening of the prohibition law, to prevent the promiscuous shipment of liquor into the state, passed the senate by a vote of 27 to 3, and the house of delegates by 73 to 6.

New York

Resolutions providing for submission to vote of the people of a woman suffrage amendment have been adopted by both houses of the New York legislature.

Delaware

A measure providing for the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor in Delaware was introduced on January 14 in the state legislature by Representative Hall.

The legislatures of the three states Oklahoma, Tennessee and North Dakota, are reported to us as having given their official approval of the Hobson amendment. We would like to hear from the other forty-five.

INDIANA WORKING FOR PROHIBITION AND SUFFRAGE

Statewide Prohibition Bill Introduced

Special Correspondence

The interest of the Indiana W. C. T. U. just now is centered in the legislature which is in session in our capital city. A bill for statewide prohibition by statutory enactment has been introduced and our temperance forces are uniting to secure its passage. We hope to make Indiana the seventeenth prohibition state.

In December a legislative council of Indiana women was organized, the object of which, as stated in the constitution, is to originate and promote legislation in the interest of women and children. This council is composed of representatives from the various state organizations of women and it maintains headquarters at Indianapolis. It is hoped that this council will unify the efforts of the women of the state for better legislation.

Efforts are being made to secure some form of suffrage for women. Under our present constitution full suffrage is impossible, and there is little hope of securing an amendment to the constitution providing for full suffrage, but limited suffrage may be granted.

Indiana will make a special effort to secure its share of the 50,000 new W. C. T. U. members asked for by Mother National. We have eight new and three reorganized unions, and many unions over the state are making special efforts to increase their membership.

The institute season will soon be on and we are planning to make the institutes the best ever held in the state. Our women are active and optimistic, believing that we will ere long rejoice in a nation free from the curse of rum.

The new Y. P. B. secretary of Indiana, Mrs. Lairy of Logansport, is pushing the work of the Branch and enlisting many young people. We look for a great increase in Y. P. B. membership and activity this year.

THE LIQUOR "PATIENT" IN MISSOURI

Special Correspondence

"The liquor business in Missouri 'has a sickness,'" says an editorial in The Kansas City Star. "It is the kind of sickness that begins with cold feet, the cold creeping up the legs, and up, up the midriff, until the heart is reached,—and then it is good-by, business. Certainly, the sickness of public disapproval is closing in on the liquor traffic of the state. This is simply recording a fact. Whether the 'symptom' of the sickness is a local option vote or is action on a legislative bill the diagnosis shows that the liquor traffic, as a patient, is in considerable of a fix, with the fix rapidly getting worse."

The danger to this "patient" lies in the proper hands, the Missouri legislature now in session. Important dry legislation is under consideration, with both house and senate favorable. The Missouri initiative and referendum law is an exact copy of the Oregon law which provides that the referendum cannot be invoked on legislation pertaining to appropriations or matters of health, morality or public safety. All liquor legislation has been introduced under the health, morality and public safety blanket. Inasmuch as the Oregon Supreme court has upheld the validity of this reservation, these measures are safe from the referendum, and if this proves correct all of Missouri, save the three big cities, St. Louis, Kansas City and St. Joseph, will be made dry by action of this general assembly. The legislation now being discussed is the precinct bill, law enforcement bill, law prohibiting dramshops within five miles of state university or normal school, the one-half mile law prohibiting saloons within that distance of the line of any state bordering on Missouri which is now, or in the future may be, under prohibition. This is more than likely to pass and would wipe out the "wettest block" in Kansas City, Mo. Three bills have been introduced which would make violation of the liquor laws a felony, a penitentiary offense. Two bills are up to regulate hours of saloons.

A bill providing for policewomen was introduced by the Missouri Woman's Christian Temperance Union in the forty-eighth general assembly now in session. The two sections provided for the appointment of women as members of the police force in cities of 5,000 or more by that department of the city government that has power to appoint other members of the police force. Provision is to be made for their compensation and to prescribe their duties. The W. C. T. U. state officers worked diligently and had the loyal support of white ribboners and club women throughout the state. Letters, telegrams, and newspaper editorials poured in on the committee until the bill was reported out favorably. The work will go on until it becomes a law.

District W. C. T. U. Convention in Iowa

MRS. MARY HARRIS ARMOR SPEAKS ON NATIONAL PROHIBITION

An audience of 1,500 people in her home city of Macon, Georgia, came out through the rain on a recent Sunday to hear Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, National organizer and lecturer, deliver an address on National Constitutional Prohibition. In discussing the question of states' rights Mrs. Armor said in part:

"Never have the liquor forces demonstrated their insincerity more than when they pretended to oppose the Hobson-Sheppard resolution on the ground of states' rights; and never have they more fully demonstrated their ability to deceive good and sensible people than when they convinced some of their class that they were sincere in this pretense.

Injustice to the Minority

"The constitution provides for the amending of the same by the people themselves but those who framed it made it so difficult of amendment that the danger of injustice is not to the majority but to the minority. Patrick Henry opposed this on the ground that the 'contemptible minority might be able to thwart the will of so overwhelming a majority.'"

To show that amendment to the constitution has been well safeguarded Mrs. Armor stated that 2,200 amendments have been proposed with only seventeen of them ratified.

"Those who profess to believe that there is danger in the proceeding admit that the constitution which they have hitherto believed too sacred to touch, is a failure.

"Again the people who cry 'states' rights' seem to forget that this question has never been left to the states. There is not a dry state in the union that is not invaded at this minute by the Federal officers. In Georgia today the United States government issues hundreds of internal revenue receipts over the protest of the vast majority of our people and so teaches our children to have a certain amount of contempt for our state laws which the United States holds in contempt as this action evidences.

"The liquor traffic sneaks across our state lines and then glories in its shame and proclaims to the world that our state law is a failure.

"See the flaming liquor advertisements. Read the contemptible liquor circulars which the United States mail brings to our doors. The amendment, if adopted, will preserve to the states the only exclusive right which they now possess with regard to the liquor traffic—namely, the right to prohibit it. It will put the liquor traffic out of the government, and the government out of the liquor traffic, and the liquor traffic out of business.

Gladly Give Other Rights

"If we so gladly give the Federal government the right to come into the state to suppress other pests such as the boll weevil, the cattle tick, the hoof and mouth disease and hog cholera, why are we surrendering our rights when we invoke (by three-fourths vote of the state) the strong arm of the Federal government to suppress this monster who for ages 'from the perennial springs of a bottomless hate,' poured his curse on the home, the church and the state? Are hogs more holy than homes, is the beast more precious than the boy?"

A resolution endorsing National Constitutional Prohibition was presented at this meeting and was adopted by a practically unanimous vote.

OUR WOMEN LEGISLATORS

Mrs. Frances Munds of Yavapai county, the only woman ever elected to the Arizona senate, presided over that body during a lengthy consideration of a bill to amend the law relating to the fees and salaries of county officers.

Miss Marion B. Towne, representative from Jackson county in the Oregon house, has succeeded in obtaining passage of a bill ceding to the Federal government exclusive jurisdiction over the Crater Lake National park.

Miss Kathryn Clark of Glendale, Ore., has been elected as state senator from Douglas county, to fill a vacancy. Miss Clark is secretary of the Glendale W. C. T. U. and was very active in the recent statewide campaign.

"Prejudicing the Youthful Mind on the Prohibition Question"

MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT, President West Washington W. C. T. U.

Under the above caption The Mixer and Server, a liquor journal, in its issue of December 15, quotes from an exchange a fierce attack upon the teaching of scientific reasons for total abstinence in our public schools. We quote: "The minds of the people are being constantly filled with statements in the form of scientific experiments and findings calculated to produce the impression that all use of alcoholic beverages is harmful. Especially is such teaching pursued in the text-books which are made obligatory by law in most of the states of the union. The text-books are endorsed by the so-called Scientific Temperance department of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union which is anything but scientific. * * * * * * For over a quarter of a century the teaching of known falsehoods has been going on in our schools, and today there are at the polls the young generation of voters raised under this corrupting influence, into whose minds has been instilled this baseless prejudice against alcoholic drink," etc., etc.

How very sad! We can readily understand how corrupting is the influence of total abstinence teaching! How it must wring the tender, benevolent heart of the liquor manufacturer to behold the young generation of voters basely prejudiced against alcoholic beverages! What torture to the brewer, distiller et al, to find, (again we quote) "Prejudice instilled into youthful minds and their mental and moral attitude toward life and the world perverted and degraded, and this done by legal enactment at the behest of persons utterly incapable of seeing or telling the truth in this matter." Alas! What an aggregation of falsifiers must be the temperance cranks of yesterday and today!

But there is more: "Legalized lies, this is what this stuff in our public school books has been called by the highest scientific authorities in America." So says our text.

It would be interesting to know to whom the writer of this outburst refers as "the highest scientific authorities in America." We do know that we might present a long list of names of those well known in the scientific world and in educational circles, who approve the teaching of total abstinence from a scientific standpoint, not only in the public schools but in hospital work and the practice of medicine generally! Not only so but the teaching and practice of total abstinence is receiving the support of the business world both at home and abroad.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, when National Pure Food Commissioner, said, "It would be better for this country if there were no alcohol in it. It would be a great benefit to humanity if all the saloons and breweries were closed up." Dr. Eugene Porter of the New York State Board of Health expressed the same sentiments. Dr. Hurty, the Commissioner of Health for Indiana, and Dr. Webster of the Chicago Board of Health, have issued warnings against alcoholic drink in their official health bulletins. Were it necessary, pages of similar testimony might be adduced, but we desire to quote once more from "our friend, the enemy."

"The matter of the training of the youthful mind to intemperance, deceit, sneakiness and contempt for authority and science, which is brought about by mis-called scientific temperance instruction, ought to be taken up by all who are interested in having children brought up truthfully and honestly."

We quite agree! Any teaching or any institution which trains "the youthful mind to intemperance, deceit, sneakiness and contempt for authority and science," should be taken up by all who are interested in the well-being of the children; it should be taken up by the general public much as a terrier takes up a rat and its career similarly ended.

The youth of our nation is our most valuable asset. A vast proportion of those who believe that children should be brought up truthfully and honestly, believe also that the liquor traffic in its various forms is doing more in one week to pervert and degrade our youth than could be done by all the scientific temperance instruction that could be given in the world's schools in a million years. Hence, and therefore, the scientific reasons for total abstinence will continue to be taught in our schools; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will go on serenely aiding and abetting such teaching; the public at large will continue to approve such action, and ere long the brewery, distillery and the use of alcoholic beverages will have become in toto a thing of the past, and Mixer and Server will, perforce, be mixing a more wholesome portion to serve to a sober people, largely helped into sobriety and prosperity by that same "young generation of voters raised under the corrupting influence of scientific temperance instruction."

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

It is hoped our local unions will not fail to contribute to the Frances E. Willard Memorial Organizing Fund while generously carrying out the plans for the campaign fund named in memory of Mrs. Stevens. Meetings in the interest of either fund can be held at a later date if February and March do not prove convenient.

We regret that the special Frances E. Willard number of THE UNION SIGNAL (January 21) is exhausted and that we are, therefore, unable to fill orders. This special number was advertised early, but advance orders were slow in reaching us, and in making the run we ordered what we considered a sufficient quantity to meet all demands. We are sorry to disappoint our friends and have sent other program material to fill the orders for THE UNION SIGNAL.

Every local union ought to own at least one copy of "What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said." It will be needed in preparing for March 1 meetings. Send to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., for a copy. Price, 50 cents.

The next number of THE UNION SIGNAL (Campaign edition) will contain a program for Prohibition Rally Day (Neal Dow's birthday—March 20). This paper will be filled with valuable campaign material, and will be excellent for distribution. Send in your order early. Special price, 100 copies for $1.50.

PLANS FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION FOR MARCH

Each local union is to hold a public meeting in March; an offering to be taken for the Campaign Fund, this money to be sent through regular channels to the state W. C. T. U. treasurer, who shall transmit one-half to the National treasurer, this fund to be known in both state and National W. C. T. U. as the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund. Young People's Branches are urged to have a share in the campaign adapting to their work plans proposed for the W. C. T. U. and enlisting other young people to become active and intelligent workers.

Enlist the Loyal Temperance Legion and all children as Young Campaigners for Prohibition and give them a part in public meetings.

Send to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., for the new Prohibition Map (price, 15 cents each; two for 25 cents) to display at March prohibition meetings as proof of the progress toward nationwide prohibition.

Envelopes for subscriptions to the Lillian Stevens Campaign fund have been prepared by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. These envelopes are to be furnished to the states at cost, to be sent by them free to every local union agreeing to place them in the hands of all members and as many others as possible, with the suggestion and hope that in March every local union will send a contribution to this Fund, averaging ten cents per member. This money should be sent through the regular W. C. T. U. channels.

The envelope form of pledge is as follows:

PATRIOTIC OFFERING
WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
THE LILLIAN STEVENS CAMPAIGN FUND (STATE AND NATIONAL)
My Offering is $.....
Cash or Pledged
Indicated by X
Name .....
Address .....

Pledges should be paid to W. C. T. U. treasurer within thirty days. Contributors of one dollar or more will receive for one year, the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL.

The revised leaflet descriptive of the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund can be secured at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and should be widely distributed.

EDITORIAL NOTES

"O goodby, voteless women," seems to be a popular refrain in the state legislatures this winter.

The liquor politicians continually complain that prohibition legislation obstructs the regular business of the legislatures. The method adopted by the Alabama lawmakers is an excellent illustration of how this can be prevented. Make the passing of a statewide measure the first and foremost order of the session; settle that question the only way it ever can be settled—right, and leave the way clear for all other legitimate business.

The annual banquet of the druggists of Philadelphia was held on the evening of January 28. For the first time in the history of such banquets no liquors were served, the board of directors having voted unanimously for the absence of alcoholic drink. The banquet was considered the most successful ever held by the trade.

Sunday school scholars of Pennsylvania to the number of 300,000 have signed a petition to the state legislature, asking for temperance legislation. The petitions will be bound and prepared for presentation to the legislature as soon as the fight begins on the county option bill.

"Other states are going dry, and unless our state passes a prohibition law, it will be the dumping ground for these other commonwealths." This is the argument advanced by a Utah legislator in his plea for a statewide measure. It is one that should receive the serious consideration of every law-maker.

"If it were not for intemperance our troubles would be very few," said Major Miles of the Chicago Civil Service Commission. "More than 95 per cent of all the complaints against policemen brought before the commission are the result of drinking liquor."

South Carolina and Utah legislatures just missed celebrating Abraham Lincoln's birthday in a fashion which would have been most pleasing to the great emancipator.

It is stated on good authority that the efficiency of laborers in Russia, owing to enforced sobriety, has increased from 50 to 100 per cent.

The manufacturers of the city of South Bend, Indiana, are long-headed business men—they have entered into an agreement not to employ men who drink intoxicating liquor.

If the liquor interests of Ohio imagined they settled the liquor question when they succeeded in having a "home rule" measure adopted, they reckoned without their host. The temperance forces of the state are already planning another statewide prohibition campaign.

The senate of the Kansas legislature has passed strong resolutions proclaiming its satisfaction with prohibition. The text of these resolutions will be most valuable campaign material in refuting the falsehoods of the liquor interests concerning Kansas and will be published in full in next week's Campaign edition of THE UNION SIGNAL.

"We are only waiting for public opinion to swing in favor of prohibition," a number of the newspapers are reported to have replied when questioned on their attitude toward the question of outlawing the saloons. What is needed in your town to facilitate a change in the policy of your daily papers may not be more public sentiment for prohibition but a more definite and outspoken expression of that sentiment in the form of protests to the publishers and editors.

STATES WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Georgia, Oklahoma, Mississippi, North Carolina, Tennessee, West Virginia, Virginia, Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Arizona, Alabama, Arkansas.

W. C. T. U. PEN USED BY GOVERNOR HAYS

The pen with which the president of the Arkansas W. C. T. U. has signed thousands of letters written in the interests of statewide prohibition, was presented by Mrs. Minnie U. Rutherford to Governor Hays to use in signing the prohibition bill. It has since been presented to the Arkansas Historical Museum.

The new prohibition law is operative now, so far as issuing new licenses is concerned, but the saloons already licensed will remain open until January 1, 1916.

WHY HE VOTED FOR THE PROHIBITION LAW

"I have voted and worked for prohibition since I was old enough to vote. The liquor curse should be forever settled in Alabama, and alcohol has no right to be dispensed to the citizens of the state any more than any other poisonous substance. There is no such thing as local option when it comes to licensing crime." Thus wrote Representative John A. Darden of Alabama to Mrs. Annie K. Weisel, president of the Alabama W. C. T. U., after the passage of the statewide prohibition bill.

"I have three boys and three girls and it is my duty as a father to see, so far as in my power lies, that I do all I can to destroy the nefarious traffic in liquors. For the good of the state as a whole it is my duty as a legislator to remove, or at least to assist to remove the curse of the age."

"STRONG DRINK"

Intoxicating beverages are frequently referred to as "strong drink." The name is no misnomer! A drink whose influence upon the physical being will make a man forget every duty of life, divest him of all decency, strip him of every manly quality and drag him to the depths of degradation is surely "strong" — too strong to be sold as a common beverage, and its manufacture and sale legalized, protected and made a revenue-producer for the government, which in turn picks up the sot it has created and dumps him into some institution, there to be provided for at the expense of the tax-paying people.

Mother love has been the theme of song and story. There is naught like it in the world. It is closely akin to the Infinite. But not long since strong drink proved stronger than mother love. Under the power of its terrible grip a mother so mistreated her little one that its recovery was despaired of. "Insane" you say? Yes, insane because of strong drink. Not the first or only case of similar character.

The love of the normal mother for her child is unspeakably sacred. For her child she will toil, sacrifice, endure, deprive herself of food, strip herself of suitable clothing, give—give—give—even life itself. The strength of mother love! None can fathom it! But it has a rival! Strong drink is sometimes stronger than mother love!

PENNSYLVANIA BOARD OF CHARITIES RECOMMENDS PROHIBITION

The commissioners of the state board of charities of Pennsylvania, after pointing out the fact that one person in every hundred of the population of the state is cared for during the entire year by public or private charity, say in their biennial report, recently issued, "In nearly every class of institution within our charge indisputable evidence is constantly before us in the form of the ravages of disease and delinquency due to the use of alcohol and drugs."

"While on this subject," continues the report, "we are constrained to remark, whether it be directly or not within our province, that legislation looking toward the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of harmful products within our commonwealth might be inquired into with laudable results. And on the subject of legislation generally that which is preventive in its nature is most desirable, and might be profitably employed in this instance."

"THE LAST WORD IN BREWERY BUILDING"

An immense placard on the top of a big brewery recently erected in Philadelphia was a cause for comment by citizens who saw in it an unintentional prophecy. It read, "The Last Word in Brewery Building." Harry H. Paisley of Philadelphia, treasurer of the Reading Railway and allied corporations, in a speech made before five hundred men of Pottsville at the annual banquet of the local Y. M. C. A., called attention to the appropriateness of the placard in view of the fact that the liquor traffic is doomed. He declared that the one service for the uplift of society today is the bringing about of the death of the liquor traffic. He said the handwriting is on the wall, and all liquor dealers and brewers would do well to get out of the business at once.

36,000 PENNSYLVANIANS PLEDGED TO VOTE AGAINST LIQUOR TRAFFIC

"I say, if the saloon, with its train of diseases, crime and misery is not wrong, then nothing on earth is wrong. If the fight is to be won we need men—men that will fight. The church—Protestant and Catholic—must fight or run away, and, thank God, she will not run away, but fight to the last ditch."

With such words as these Billy Sunday, in his sermon on "Booze" on January 31, in the city of Philadelphia, denounced the liquor traffic, and aroused the people. It is said that at the two meetings on that day 36,000 men promised to vote against the liquor business. No wonder "the trade" has little use for "Billy."

Lost: At the National W. C. T. U. Convention, Atlanta, a beautiful Press banner, three yards long and a yard wide, bearing the lettering "Iowa W. C. T. U.," and "Press." To the banner was attached the name of Mrs. J. P. Nye, Shenandoah, Iowa. Any one who knows of the whereabouts of this banner will please communicate with Mrs. Nye, or with Mrs. W. H. Preston, 60 E. Georgia Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

THE MORNING WATCH

Not when I lay me down to sleep,
Too weary longer watch to keep—
Though night enfolds and danger's nigh—
Not then, not then is it that I
Need most to pray Thee, Lord, my soul to keep.

But when night flees before the sun,
And I arise to overcome
My foes, my love embrace, my task
To do, my way to choose—'tis then I ask,
And need Thee most, my soul to keep till day is done.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

Mrs. Felicia S. Holt, Salem, Oregon, a member of the local union and at one time an officer.

Mrs. Margaret Lemmon Hobbs, Artesia, N. M., formerly a member of Hillsboro (Ind.) W. C. T. U. and for a number of years, president of the county union.

Mrs. Lillian Robinson, Deerfield, Michigan, a member of the local union and an earnest Christian worker.

Mrs. Zara A. Wilson, formerly state superintendent of the Franchise department for the W. C. T. U. of Nebraska, a writer of note, an attorney, and a woman of prominence in many lines of activity. As a lawyer she practiced law "not for profit but for the good of womanhood," her services being given free of charge. The Record of South Pasadena (Cal.) in which city she had made her home for the past few months, had this to say of her at the close of a lengthy eulogy:

"Mrs. Wilson was a warm advocate of woman's political enfranchisement long before that movement was looked upon with favor. Her efforts in three great fields of human uplift, missionary work, W. C. T. U. work and legal practice, mark her as one of the really great women pioneers."

SHE GAVE OF HERSELF

"There are many who contribute out of their abundance but the number of those who supplement their monetary gifts with their lives are comparatively few," said someone in commenting on the beautiful life of Grace Hoadley Dodge, the great philanthropist, and president of the International Young Women's Christian Association, who was recently promoted to the heavenly life. That Miss Dodge's generosity was not to be measured by monetary standards but in the terms of personal service is the testimony of all who knew her. Her sympathy and interest went out to every form of social service, and white ribboners recall with gratitude her helpful co-operation with them in the work for the children and young people in New York, especially in the years when Mrs. Frances J. Barnes was the leader of that branch of W. C. T. U. activities.

SUPERINTENDENTS

WORK AMONG SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

MRS. ELLA HOOVER THACHER

The Plan of Work for this department has been sent to the state superintendents, who will please notify me at once if a copy has not been received. We are hoping this year to increase our efforts to give a little "good cheer" to the sailors who man the life saving stations on our coast, lakes and rivers. The government has created what is called the coast guard service, combining therein the revenue cutter service and the existing life saving service. It is believed that the men in this new service, all of whom are life savers, will be better cared for as enlisted men and existing conditions be remedied. Christian Temperance unions, auxiliary to this department, should be formed in all government reservations. Information and constitutions may be obtained from me.

If each state W. C. T. U. president will give permission to the state superintendent of this department we hope to be able to fill many "kits" for the suffering soldiers in Europe. These are needed at once, as many of these, our fellow brothers, are freezing to death for lack of the comforts we are able to and should give.

Prizes offered this year are listed in my Plan of Work, and small, as well as large states may compete as the awarding is per capita.

I will gladly send to any local union in states without a state superintendent information needed to carry on this department work. Surely the "mother heart," the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of our country, is ready and willing to help win our "nation's defenders" to a better, higher, nobler life. Every one of these "defenders" is some mother's boy. Correspondence is greatly desired. Who will help?

EVANGELISTIC AND ALMSHOUSE

REV. MARY E. KUHL

Since the National Convention at Atlanta there has been a steady stream of letters coming in asking for instructions along Evangelistic lines. This makes more certain the fact that we are in the heart of the new century evangelism and in the very center of the great religious thought of the world in the endeavor for humanity's betterment, the study of soul life and the winning of souls for Christ.

The need for more careful and prayerful preparation for service, together with our responsibility, is being borne in upon our workers. Especially is this true in the present crisis of our campaign for nationwide prohibition, with its continuous victories. The truth remains that there is one great heartache, one world hunger for God, and out of the spirit of unrest, wars, strifes and tumults, there may come the "dawn of the morning without clouds," for righteousness and total prohibition; and the command comes to our nation and all Christian workers at this crucial time, "Set thee up waymarks, make thee guideposts, set thy heart toward the highway." (Jer. 31:21.) Therefore there is an added responsibility to help put away the evil and build up the good and through personal and community evangelism throughout all channels of Christian service to hasten nationwide evangelism and nationwide prohibition, that ours may be the guidepost to the King's highway for all peoples. The pressure is on us for more heart prayer, heart service, together with the study of the Word, for the soul life of our Republic as well as that of the individual.

The "Workday Plan" is ready and will be sent out for only the postage or carriage. Let each state superintendent indicate how many copies she will need and they will be sent promptly, also the new leaflet, "Bible Nature Studies," "Bible Question Test," and other helps. It is urged that every evangelist be full of activity for the blessed Christ and hold him up as the great exemplar for the world's redemption.

92 E. Eleventh Ave., Columbus, Ohio.

SAVE YOUR MAGAZINES!

There is great need of magazines and other suitable reading matter for the soldiers and sailors, and Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, National superintendent of this work, is very desirous that white ribboners save all suitable periodicals for this purpose. These should be sent to the quartermaster's department in the town nearest the person sending, and freight or parcel post charges must be paid by the sender. If there is a quartermaster's department in your town packages will be called for if the quartermaster is notified. Barrels make convenient packing cases, and they can be sent by freight at comparatively small expense.

MINISTERS URGE ORGANIZING OF W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Lila Carlin Moore, National organizer and lecturer, has been working in Arkansas for several weeks. At the first point in the state which she visited was a union organized by her a year ago with eleven members, which in the meantime has grown to forty-two members. In telling of her experience Mrs. Moore says, "Recently I went into a town that was holding a Sunday school rally in one church, a revival in another and in addition several social functions were in progress. There was no opportunity for a public address, but ministers came in person to confer with me as to the best plan for getting my work before the people and decided they would 'phone the women in their respective churches and urge them to meet me in the study of one pastor and, if possible, organize a W. C. T. U., saying, 'We want the organization here and will do all we can for its advancement.' It goes without saying that I did organize. I have never known the public, including ministers, to be in such sympathy with our blessed work and quite as ready to co-operate as now. Financial stringency to be sure crippled the work greatly but interest and enthusiasm grow hourly. I have organized four new unions and visited and recruited old ones along the line."

"The splendid organization work of the New York W. C. T. U. was brought to my attention recently," writes Mrs. Susan McWhirter Ostrom, National superintendent of Sabbath Observance, "when upon the appointment of Mrs. H. D. Smith of Ithaca as the new state superintendent of Sabbath Observance, after the resignation of Mrs. L. E. Hanford, of Etna, I received three letters informing me of the change, one from Mrs. Boole, the state president, one from the former superintendent, and another from the new superintendent."

AMONG OUR WORKERS

"The Life of Frances E. Willard," and a framed picture of the great reformer, were presented by the W. C. T. U. of Kansas City, Mo., to one of the new schools of the city, which has been given the name, Frances E. Willard.

Three hundred children from the schools of Stevens Point, Wis., participated in a prohibition march January 14, National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Day. Flags, large and small, and many prohibition banners and posters were carried by the children as they marched through the streets of this town, which with a population of only 12,000, supports forty-five saloons. For almost the first time the citizens of Stevens Point were notified that "Saloons are Going," "We Want Stevens Point Dry," "National Prohibition in 1920," etc. Thirty legioners of the town with badges pinned across their shoulders were a part of the procession. The parade disbanded at the home of a W. C. T. U. member. The children were given refreshments, after which the women met for a prayer service.

In spite of a pouring rain, the prayer and praise service of the Glasgow (Ky.) W. C. T. U. on January 14, drew a full house and but for the weather an overflow meeting would have been necessary. Pastors and Christian people of all denominations attended the service and the resolution endorsing National Constitutional Prohibition was unanimously adopted.

The Enosburg Falls (Vt.) W. C. T. U., one of the largest unions in the state, held its tenth anniversary banquet on the evening of January 19 in the parlors of the Methodist Episcopal church. The printed invitations were attractive in their make-up, and the announcements of the post-prandial exercises and the banquet menu, which appeared on the same folder, were most interesting. The president of the union is Mrs. Annette W. Parmelee, state superintendent of Franchise.

A noteworthy occasion was an evening reception given recently at the Stroudwater tea house by the members of the Stroudwater (Maine) W. C. T. U., well known throughout the state since it was the first to be organized by Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, the beloved President of the National W. C. T. U. This reception occurs annually and it was the last affair in which Mrs. Stevens participated before she was confined to her home by her final illness, so that the thoughts of those present turned to her often.

The active members of the organization entertained upon this occasion as a compliment to Mrs. Althea G. Quimby, state president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. W. V. Knight, president of the Cumberland county W. C. T. U., and the honorary members. In the receiving line were Mrs. Quimby, Mrs. Knight, and Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, president of the Stroudwater organization. A short program followed, during which Mrs. Quimby spoke words of greeting from the state union, and Mrs. Knight from the Cumberland county union. Mrs. Leavitt introduced both speakers in graceful fashion.

"You can say to your readers that Creek county has in the person of Mrs. Abbie Hillerman, a member of the third house of the fifth legislature, one of the most influential members of that body," remarked a citizen of Sapulpa, Oklahoma (just returned from a few days' attendance at the state legislature), to the representative of the Sapulpa Herald. As the president of the state W. C. T. U. Mrs. Hillerman is "mothering" some very important reform legislation.

Salvation Army hall, Oneonta, was filled with an enthusiastic audience on the occasion of the celebration of National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment Day by the Otsego county (N. Y.) unions, Mrs. Georgia Weaton, president. All the county officers were present, and in addition to the service of prayer for nationwide prohibition, plans were made for group institutes and other work of the county.

Mrs. Helen Stoddard of Southern California writes that the W. C. T. U. exhibit in the San Diego Exposition is exceptionally attractive. The rest room is second to none in attractiveness unless it be possibly the different state rooms furnished by wealthy women.

Mrs. Katherine D. Gebhardt, National lecturer for the department of Scientific Temperance Instruction, did most acceptable work in the schools of Washington, D. C., according to statements of two of the prominent educators of the District. Mr. E. L. Thurston, superintendent of public schools, said, "I felt that she (Mrs. Gebhardt) presented a number of vital facts in a very clear, logical and interesting way." Mr. A. T. Stuart, director of the intermediate department of public schools, Washington, D. C., wrote, "I heard one of Mrs. Gebhardt's talks to a class of seventh and eighth grade children at the Madison school recently and was strongly impressed with her skill in presenting a difficult subject. She proved herself to be not only an excellent teacher, but exhibited a thorough familiarity with the scientific facts which are so effectively brought out against the use of alcohol. I do not hesitate to say that a person with Mrs. Gebhardt's gifts and knowledge could profitably spend her entire time in the class rooms of pupils of the upper grades."

The Eckington union, of Washington, D. C., recently held a double medal contest, the gold medal being awarded to Mr. Gordon Edmonds, who gave "The Defense of The Alamo," while the silver medal was won by Miss Anna Bowden, her selection being, "Mother, a Promise." The members of the Emma Sanford Shelton L. T. L., which is conducted by this union, sang "Out From The Hearthstone."

With an attendance of 150 women at the February meeting, the W. C. T. U. of Fulton, N. Y., secured twelve new members toward the increased membership needed to meet the apportionment of the state for 1915. The speakers of the afternoon were Mrs. G. M. Gardenier, and Mrs. De Silvia, presidents of Otsego and Onondaga counties respectively. Mrs. Gardenier, who a little more than twenty-four years ago organized the Fulton union with a membership of fourteen, recalled the time when she had lovingly mothered the little group, and told of her pleasure in watching its growth. Mrs. De Silvia made an earnest plea for woman suffrage, urging the women to redouble activities in the suffrage campaign now on in the Empire state.

The first contest for a grand gold medal ever held in the District of Columbia occurred in Brookland on February 5. The medal was awarded to Miss Alice Harbaugh. A class of little girls competing for a silver medal alternated with the older speakers on the program. Seven-year-old Leah Leavell won the silver medal. The presentations were made by the state president, Mrs. Emma Sanford Shelton.

March 5 has been designated by the state superintendent of education of Alabama as Temperance Day. A comprehensive official program has been issued as an aid to a successful observance of the day. Upon the cover page is given the text of the law and the program teems with valuable material arranged from temperance literature by the state W. C. T. U. superintendent of Temperance Education, Mrs. Chappell Cory, and the associate superintendent, Mrs. F. M. Jackson. Alabama is the only state that has an officially appointed Temperance Day.

KNOW NOW

And Will Never Forget the Experience

The coffee drinker who has suffered and then been completely relieved by changing from coffee to Postum knows something valuable. There's no doubt about it.

"I learned the truth about coffee in a peculiar way," says a California woman. "My husband who has, for years, been of a bilious temperament decided to leave off coffee and give Postum a trial, and as I did not want the trouble of making two beverages for meals I concluded to try Postum, too. The results have been that while my husband has been greatly benefited, I have myself received even greater benefit.

"When I began to drink Postum I was thin in flesh and very nervous. Now I actually weigh 16 pounds more than I did at that time and I am stronger physically and in my nerves, while husband is free from all his ails.

"We have learned our little lesson about coffee and we know something about Postum, too, for we have used Postum now steadily for the last three years and we shall continue to do so.

"We have no more use for coffee—the drug drink. We prefer Postum and health."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The cost per cup of both kinds is about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

GETTING INTO ACTION

HATTIE C. VAUGHAN, Issaquah, Wash.

"Madam President."

Mrs. Fenmore, the dignified president of the Ladies' Aid, graciously recognized the speaker:

"Mrs. Benson."

"If the plans are now completed for the church fair, I would like to speak of a little matter that I think needs attention. Joe Hall has gone on a spree again and is locked up and his wife and little children, so they say, haven't much of anything in the house to eat. We certainly should relieve their distress."

A little woman over by the window rose. She had remained silent during the meeting, but evidently her interest was now greatly aroused.

"Madam President."

"Miss Gray."

"Of course we must help these people but I'd like to know to what all this relief work really amounts? It's like trying to freshen the ocean. If the saloons were out of the town nobody would be hungry. Now that we have suffrage in California, we ought to vote them out!"

"But, Miss Gray," remonstrated the president, "you surely would not have us play the role of politicians?"

"This is not a political question," asserted Miss Gray; "it is a question of right or wrong, and, as we are now citizens, it is our duty and right to help settle it."

"Perhaps it is our right," pacifically responded the president, "but it is unseemly to push ourselves to the front too much until we have learned a little more. As to the case in hand, I will stop at the house myself—I am going around by that part of the town anyway—and will do what is necessary. Now all the committees will please busy themselves in planning for what ought to be a splendid fair. Perhaps we can get enough money, too, for new carpets for the church. We will meet with Mrs. Smith next week."

The church in the little village was looked upon as a model one. It drew its membership from the residence portion principally, and prided itself upon the culture, refinement, and exclusiveness of its members rather than upon their wealth. The Ladies' Aid was its crowning glory. From it emanated the wonderful entertainments, gatherings, etc., that constituted the social life of the church, as well as its financial basis.

Mrs. Fenmore, president of the society, was a woman of splendid executive ability, as well as of rare social attainments. Kind-hearted and sympathetic, she was ever ready to help the unfortunate, but she had never felt the need of going out of her church circle to better humanity. There had been saloons in the town since her earliest remembrance, and her instinctive horror of them had not diminished in any sense, but it never occurred to her that she might have a part in getting rid of them. Only a few of her friends, of whom Miss Gray was one, felt that it was the duty of the church to take an aggressive part.

About five o'clock Mrs. Fenmore passed in at the gate of Joe Hall's place. This was a new experience to her, as the committee usually did such work. Her heart throbbed with pity at sight of the white-faced, hopeless looking little woman who came to the door. Never had the talented leader of the church society put more winsome graciousness into her manner than she did now in trying to bring courage and hope to this forlorn creature, but a quiet, courteous "thank you" was the only response she received.

After promising to send the sufferer supplies, Mrs. Fenmore said a kind good-by, and passed out upon the street. Suddenly some one called her name. She looked about and saw coming toward her a woman, little and old and bent, with short, wind blown hair which gave her a somewhat wild appearance. Mrs. Fenmore knew her to be Meg Davis, whom people called "queer." She lived in a little house all alone and existed in a very meager sort of way, though she seemed to have money enough for her wants. As a general thing she had not a word to say, but would stare around with sharp, observant eyes which took in every detail. Often she would step into a neighbor's rather bare pantry, leave a dish of doughnuts, a pie, or a loaf of bread, and go away without even saying good-morning. Sometimes after getting a sick baby to sleep a mother would return to her washtub to find "Silent Meg" putting out the clothes. She could talk, however, and sometimes did, though seemingly for the same reason that she washed the clothes—because it needed to be done. Now she began abruptly:

"You church folks—I'm ashamed of you! Why don't you go ahead and wipe the saloons off the map? Then you wouldn't have to be packing around grub to the poor folks! Joe Hall's as good a man as any to his family when the booze doesn't get him. It's all up to you church people how long the saloons shall go on killing folks. The church need not expect a blessing while its members sit by and let the saloons have the right of way. That poor woman in there you have just visited has the life too much crushed out of her to go out and work against the beast that gets her husband, but you folks that are free from the curse ought to help her. (If she had a broken leg instead of a broken heart you'd do something big.) You may not be as much out of danger as you think you are, though, for I saw your Clarence in front of one of the saloons, and they almost persuaded him to go in. He didn't, but they'll get him yet as sure as anything. You'd better get busy on the important job of driving out the liquor dens and let the little things go." Without waiting for a word from the amazed lady, Meg turned back home.

In the silence of the night, Mrs. Fenmore struggled with her tangled thoughts. How different things looked to her! Strange, too, how almost every word of Meg's accusation was stamped on her memory. And Clarence—her son—her pride! Could he even have contemplated entering a saloon? She remembered other mothers' hearts were breaking because of this curse. Yes, Meg was right—the church should arouse itself. At the thought Mrs. Fenmore, one of its main pillars of support, and a prime mover in its activities, fell upon her knees and prayed earnestly. She was a good woman but her eyes had been blinded. Now they were opened, and with her executive ability sharpened by urgent need, she planned a vigorous campaign. Only three days to election? Fortunately the town was unincorporated, so registration was not required, she reflected.

The first thing after breakfast next morning, Mrs. Fenmore surprised Miss Gray by appearing at her back door. The sight of the fastidious president, arrayed in morning dress and kitchen apron, coming across lots at that early hour, astonished Miss Gray out of her usual politeness.

"Land sakes, what's the matter?" she asked.

"O Miss Gray, we are going to begin a whirlwind campaign against the saloons and you know so much more about the matter than any of us I want you to help plan things."

"Why, certainly, I'll be glad to," agreed Miss Gray. "As you know, I have been doing what I could by myself. How many will join in the movement?"

"Oh, I think everybody will. I am going to send out special invitations to come to my house this evening on urgent business. I am sure that nearly all will be there."

Miss Gray, too, was sure of a good attendance for everybody liked to be invited to the president's home. She always gave them a good time.

"I'll write the invitations if you will have your Sunday school class deliver them," continued Mrs. Fenmore.

That evening, believing that what had aroused her to action would also doubtless appeal to her listeners the hostess told her guests of her visit to Joe Hall's home and the impression it had left upon her. With all her powers of mimicry she reviewed Meg Davis' censure and finished by saying:

"And it is true! What she said is true! We need not expect our heavenly Father's blessing if we sit at ease and let this fearful work of destruction continue. I, for one, pray God to forgive my past indifference and with His help I will do what I can to blot out this curse."

The women rallied around their loved leader, as they always did, and pledged themselves to help in the prohibition campaign. The church fair was postponed for the time being.

The three days before the election were crowded with work. There was no question about the church being in action now. Billboards were put up and covered with posters, which because of lack of time, were of home manufacture but effective and straight to the point; blackboards bearing pertinent suggestions were placed about everywhere; children, hastily drilled, sang prohibition songs and the campaign closed with a mammoth parade. It all meant hard, continuous labor and often "skimpy" meals for the workers, but what a feast was spread before their eyes when the papers next morning announced:

"NO MORE SALOONS IN OUR TOWN!
"IT HAS GONE DRY!"

CHILDREN'S CORNER

THIS LITTLE PIG WENT TO MARKET

S. LUTLEY

This little pig went to market,
This little piggy stayed home,
This little piggy ate roast beef,
But this little piggy ate none;
While this little piggy cried squeak, squeak, squeak,
I've tasted no meat for a week, week, week,
Nor so much as a marrow bone.

This Mrs. Brown went to market,
This Mrs. Jenkins stayed home,
This Mrs. Perkins ate roast beef,
But this Mrs. Wiggins ate none;
While little Miss Wiggins cried squeak, squeak, squeak,
I've tasted no meat for a week, week, week,
Nor so much as a marrow bone.

Tell me why one goes to market,
Tell me why one stays at home,
Why Mrs. Perkins has roast beef,
And why Mrs. Wiggins has none;
And why little Wiggins cries squeak, squeak, squeak,
And never has meat for a week, week, week,
Nor so much as a marrow bone.

Well then, the Browns are teetotalers,
So they have money to spare
For to buy food in the market,
Or clothes warm and pretty to wear;
And the little Browns never cry squeak, squeak, squeak,
There's plenty to eat all the week, week, week,
And with others they often share.

THE WORK IN BURMA

MAY MACK, Superintendent of Young People's Work

L. T. Ah Syoo and family. Ma Mya, the wife of Saya Ah Syoo, was the first president of the Burmese W. C. T. U. of Monemen. The daughters belong to the Y. P. B.

The annual W. C. T. U. convention held at the Y. W. C. A. in Rangoon, October 21-23 was one of the finest. There was a large attendance at the business sessions and never have our members been more enthusiastic.

We also had a record gathering of the Anglo-Indian community at the reception when two hundred men and women were present.. At this gathering, Miss Flora Strout gave her report which was listened to with keen interest. At the close of her address a number of people responded to her appeal to buy and distribute literature.

Burma is recognized as one of the most difficult fields for reform work of any description, nevertheless, various reports showed marked progress in all departments. Continuous agitation has at least awakened the public conscience to the gravity of existing evils and to the need for immediate temperance reform.

The Vigilance Society which has for its president the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Rangoon, and as secretary, Miss Strout, is the outcome of a purity campaign started by the Burma W. C. T. U.

Four years ago the director of Public Instruction requested that scientific temperance should be taught in our schools, but perhaps because of a lack of equipment and a lack of pressure put upon those concerned, this request was not complied with. Now, however, a strict order has been issued for such teaching to be given and we believe this is due in a measure to the agitation which we have kept up and also to the lectures given by our organizing secretary, Miss Strout, who has been asked to furnish a list of lecturers for the European schools and an outline of her own lectures. Our great difficulty here is to secure a sufficient number of total abstainers who are qualified to deliver such addresses. Through the Co-operative Temperance committee, of which Miss Strout is chairman, the Gulick Hygiene Series have been recommended as text-books and forwarded to the book committee fully endorsed by the Bishop of Rangoon and other members of the educational syndicate.

An interesting feature of the convention was the discussion on "What Can be Done to Reach the Burmese, Karen, and Indian Communities?" Saya Ah Sou represented the Burmese, Ma Maria the Karens, and Mrs. Aaron, an Indian lady, the Tamils and Telegus. They all strongly urged getting into personal touch with the women of the country by visiting them in their homes. The discussion proved helpful as the pledge for native women includes tobacco which naturally makes our work slow.

Miss Strout has had the joy of organizing the first Karen W. C. T. U. in Burma with Ma Maria San Bo as its president. At the time of Miss Strout's first visit to these women they were not a bit sympathetic because of the anti-tobacco and anti-betel features of her campaign, but when she returned a year later their attitude was entirely different, due, as Miss Strout says, to the tactful work of the missionary in charge.

A most interesting paper was read by Rev. C. H. Riggs, principal of the Burmese Boys' Methodist School, on "How can the W. C. T. U. Help the Teachers?" A lively discussion followed and many of the suggestions were adopted to be acted upon later. Among other things it was decided to run a teachers' column in the Life Line to aid them in teaching scientific temperance.

We have thirty children's societies and twenty-six young people's societies with a total membership of 1,900. These societies furnished more than half of the delegates to the convention. This was an entirely unexpected pleasure as the schools and colleges had all just re-opened and we did not think the young people would be granted leave of absence to attend.

Two Karen boys came from Nyaunglebin and were present at every meeting. I have since received a letter from them stating how much they enjoyed the whole convention, especially the school of methods conducted by Miss Strout. The school of methods was an experiment which proved so helpful that we have decided to have a whole day for the study of methods early in the new year.

Splendid temperance entertainments have been given by the young folks which have not only done much to educate public sentiment but also have added considerably to our funds. Temperance sentiment is growing among the children who are influencing their people at home. Not very long ago I heard of a little Burmese child disapproving entirely of her father's choice of a stepmother for her on the grounds that she was a smoker and chewed betel.

In reviewing the work of the year we realize how greatly we are indebted to our organizing secretary for all of the time and effort she has put into the work, and the resolutions framed and adopted by the convention included one of thanks to the World's W. C. T. U. for extending Miss Strout's term of service in Burma and also for its generous grant of money which has enabled us to do so much that otherwise could not have been attempted.

GRAPPLE THE BOGY

JENNIE FOWLER WILLING

You have heard the old story of the man who was haunted by a ghostly object just outside the light from his campfire When he was wide awake he dashed out into the bushes to find that the cause of his excitement was an old white horse grazing around! The bogy that hindered us in our great Congressional victory from routing the liquorites, horse, foot and dragoon, was simply the one that we have been shying, for peace sake, ever since the Civil War—state rights. Like the man at the campfire let us have at it once for all!

It is granted that prohibition may be settled by majority vote in town, county or state. It is not left to the individual. The size of the territory is not specified in the public judgment. If it is right for a majority to banish harmful habit-forming drugs and drinks from a given section, why not from the whole region of towns, counties and states?

The general government protects its wards, infants, idiots and insane from harmful foods and habit-forming drugs and drinks and no one accuses it of infringing upon state rights. It is simply meeting a moral obligation.

Every temperance man, woman and child must work to the very utmost to lay the moral aspects of this case upon the conscience of every voter and legislator. One look into a drunkard's hut shows the extravagant waste. Science has spoken the last word about the destruction of life and health. It is "up to us" to drag the old bogy into the light of the moral campfire. It must be made a moral issue. We do not leave it to states to say whether or not thieves and murderers shall be tolerated and protected. This home-wrecking business is either right or wrong. If it is wrong, out with it—on the double-quick!

The Supreme court that settles such mooted questions has in its hands at this writing two cases—one from the North, the other from the South—of convicted murderers whose destiny must be fixed not by state law, but by the highest legal authority, upon the principles of right and wrong involved in each.

We must spare no pains, night or day, to crowd the right or wrong of this drink traffic upon the live consciences of American voters and law-makers. Above all we must hold it by our daily prayers, before the supreme court of High Heaven, for it involves the salvation or loss of hundreds of thousands of souls.

When I have to argue the prohibition or suffrage question I think of the story that Emerson tells of an abolition meeting held in Boston during the anti-slavery days. Sojourner Truth was present and had made a most effective speech, and when she closed her remarks, a politician arose and talked on the other side, calling Sojourner Truth vile names and insisting that this question ought not to be discussed. Everybody wondered what Sojourner Truth would do or say, and some imagined she would possibly weep, but she was not made of such material. She arose and pointing her black, bony finger at the politician, she said, as she tapped her head significantly, "Honey, I sure would tell you something, I sure would, but I see you ain't got nothing to carry it home in." So I do not feel like arguing with those who "ain't got nothing to carry it home in."

A SURPRISE AT HARRISBURG, PENN.

HENRIETTA JOHNS

Seldom has the capital of the proud keystone state recorded victories for the temperance arms. Possibly this fact will increase the interest in a recent demonstration within the Pennsylvania citadel of the "booze" forces. We desire to introduce to you the W. C. T. U. of Dauphin county at the front and making news for the "war columns."

Not, alas, that "we have met the enemy and they are ours," but they have seen us march in goodly numbers past their cursed bar rooms, beneath their brilliant and costly, though shameless, electric signs. They have heard us sing the songs of the King of righteousness with whom we fight against their godlessness. We do not know whether our marching strength disconcerted the enemy, but we do know it amazed ourselves and our friends. It was an unexpected answer to many fervent prayers.

Last fall there came an evangelist among us, and with him a young woman mighty in her preaching, magnetic in her influence and co-operative in the highest degree with him in his expressed antagonism to the liquor traffic. On a certain beautiful Sunday afternoon Miss Palmer addressed the Harrisburg women on the subject of "The American Python." Our largest auditorium was packed to the doors and hundreds were turned away. Even the chairman of the committee of arrangements was barred out in the big rush, the ushers being positively forbidden to admit one more to the bulging interior.

There almost seven hundred names were added to the W. C. T. U. of Dauphin county, and a demonstration for the following Tuesday night was announced. A parade, starting from a church in the very center of the city and composed of W. C. T. U. members and sympathizers was to march through the main thoroughfares to the big tabernacle to be there addressed by the popular evangelist.

Now because of past Lilliputian deeds, the good old members were dubious over the success of such a demonstration —in Harrisburg. One usually optimistic officer predicted fifty marchers as a goodly number, though another suggested one hundred as a high water mark—on a clear night. Would this not lead to ridicule and bring disgrace rather than strength? Would there not be nine thousand on-lookers at the tabernacle to criticize and jeer at our puny showing? Could the staunchest members be expected to turn out and in the face of such defeat? We had not been trained to so much publicity, it would savor of boldness to conservative minds.

Seemingly to clinch this argument about four o'clock on the afternoon of Tuesday, December 1, the clouds, which had been close about the city all day, lowered and released their temperance contents in uncompromising persistence for almost two hours. Where were optimistic predictions then?

The gay paper and bunting trimmings of loaned automobiles were stripped off for fear they might "run," and ruin the varnish. But the anxious thought was, "Will the women 'run' too?" The chairman's phone was kept busy answering one question: "Hello! Is the parade postponed?" And over the dripping wires she sent one answer: "Miss Palmer is chief marshal! She has sent no word. We remain under marching orders. Ours but to walk or flounder in the mud!"

At six o'clock there were no signs of clearing but the rain had ceased. The chairman, umbrella raised lest the lull might prove treacherous, alighted from a trolley car, and picked her lonesome way among the standing pools to the dark rendezvous. Simultaneously another solitary female figure, muffled in raincoat, but bearing a huge white ribbon bow on the handle of her closed and folded "storm-weapon" approached the gloomy building from another quarter. This was Miss Palmer, and as the two leaders entered together the deserted structure, following a far off light, they exchanged no words regarding the weather.

What a contrast was the scene an hour later just before the procession moved! To many of us it was the biggest surprise party of our lives! The large church overflowed with W. C. T. U. members, their husbands and other honorary members, and the tabernacle chorus. Overhead hung the only wet blanket of the occasion—the ominous clouds in the vault of heaven, but like the mouths of Daniel's lions, they continued closed till the great procession was housed in the beautiful tabernacle. In very contrast to the black night were the cheer, the light, the victory of that great assemblage.

And then we marched. Led by a band the great tabernacle chorus went swinging and singing at the head. Clearing the way was an auto bearing upon its hood and back inscriptions painted in such letters that he who ran might read:

"For God and home and native land!"
"We strike, a death-blow at the liquor traffic."

Behind the chorus the honorary members rallied around a transparency, and one hundred Pennsylvania voters challenged the liquor interests with the daring acrostic, boldly set on all four faces of their standard:

Whisky
Can't Terrorize
Us!

Then came the women, rank and file, four by four. And they continued to come, hundred after hundred, until eight hundred had passed in review. The new members, with Miss Palmer at their head, and banner aloft, stepped out first, followed by the separate unions, each with its own banner, and many other banners and signs such as "Save the Boys," and "Safety First Means No Alcohol." Many of the women were dressed in white, and each carried a 6x9 United States flag tied just below its colors with a bow of white.

Two honoraries—let us name them Valiant and Trueheart—bore the great banner which was to find place on the tabernacle wall. In startling red and white, prominence being given by black filling to the initial letters to make clear the acrostic, appeared this legend:

With Christ
Temperance
Unites

The parade wound up with a half dozen autos bearing the members, active and honorary, who could not otherwise join in the march. All the machines were more or less decorated, and bore such inscriptions as

The Liquor Traffic
1908 Going!
1914 Going!!
1920 Gone!!!

Then all but the last entered the tabernacle and surged down the sawdust trail while the band played "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and the vast assemblage cheered to the echo, the greatest compliment to the success of our undertaking.

A basket of huge white chrysanthemums tied with a shower bow of white ribbon was presented to Miss Palmer as a token of our appreciation of the tremendous service she had rendered, also a silk American flag, appropriately inscribed and tied with the white ribbon.

Now our taste of service for the King has whetted our spiritual appetites. The battle for the Lord and His righteousness is on in Harrisburg, and

"He has sounded forth the trumpet
That will never call retreat!"

PENNSYLVANIA WORKING FOR 13,000 NEW MEMBERS

Special Correspondence

The name of Rev. William A. Sunday or "Billy" Sunday is heard on every hand in Philadelphia. People are saying, "Have you been to the Tabernacle?" "You ought to go." There never was "anything like it." The reason for these remarks is that the great Tabernacle is filled twice daily for five days, and three times on the sixth day, Sunday. Not only does "Billy" preach to these great throngs but his assistants invade every corner of the big city speaking to men and women in their working places at the noon hour or immediately after the close of the business day. The church people, eager to co-operate in the great evangelistic work, provide a simple repast at some nearby church and while the people dine, one of Sunday's workers addresses them. The thousands of neighborhood prayer meetings have brought the people of Philadelphia into closer relations as well as quickened their spiritual life. On the afternoon of February 18, the W. C. T. U. and the women's clubs are invited to the Tabernacle. Happy is the woman who holds the coveted check for her reserved seat. A most remarkable feature of the campaign is the manner in which the Philadelphia newspapers vie with each other in giving space. A page a day is the usual allowance.

HOME VS. SALOON

BILLY SUNDAY

The normal way to get rid of drunkards is to stop raising drunkards. I don't know what you'll do in Pennsylvania, for your legislature looks as if it were soaked and pickled in alcohol.

If you men haven't decency enough to enact laws to protect the homes, then give the women a chance to vote, and they'll do it.

If I remember rightly, we had a war in this country once because of taxation without representation.

Nine-tenths of the opposition to woman suffrage crawled and wriggled out of the breweries and distilleries. They know that when the women go to the polls and drop a ballot, it will be the doom of the grog shop.

It makes me sick to see some weasel-eyed, drunken, whisky-soaked degenerate depositing a ballot and keeping clean women away. The nation that refuses to grant the requests and calls of women to protect the homes from the forces that are eating out their vitals is doomed, whether it is this or any other nation.

Judging from the results of Mr. Sunday's campaigns in other towns, the W. C. T. U. of Philadelphia county should be greatly enlarged by this winter's work. Our semi-annual conference was honored by the presence of Mrs. Sunday who "belongs" and wears the white ribbon.

The morning of January 14 was devoted to prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition by the Philadelphia county W. C. T. U. led by Mrs. S. G. McFarland. In the afternoon the following county superintendents led discussions on their work: Mrs. A. C. Peacock, Mrs. M. McCauley, Mrs. M. M. Simpson. Mrs. Ferguson not being able to be present sent a paper on her work, "Sabbath Observance."

"A Study in Black and White" was the leading feature of the evening program. Forty-eight girls were arranged on the platform to represent the map of the United States. Those representing the dry states were dressed in white with crowns bearing their names; the local option states, white with black girdles; the license states, black. Each wore the name of the state in large letters on a badge from shoulder to waist. The suffrage states also wore the familiar "Votes for Women" legend. Miss Elizabeth Harp Cornog sang the verses of "Our Nation's Hymn," as sung by the Flying Squadron of America, and "Make the Map All White," the forty-eight girls joining in the chorus.

The board of superintendents has planned five institutes of two sessions each to be held during the year. The morning meetings will be in charge of Mrs. Olive Pond Amies who will conduct a school of methods. The officers for the year are Mrs. F. A. Janney, Mrs. Ernest Vail, and Mrs. J. E. Fricke.

The state officers, Mrs. Ella M. George, Mrs. A. B. Parsels, Mrs. Sylvia B. Norrish, Miss Margaret Irwin and Mrs. Leah Cobb Marion have published a helpful New Year letter in which the unions are admonished to work for the gain of 13,000 members, that being the stint set at the last state convention. Counties sending dues by August 1 for ten per cent gain in membership will receive as prizes to be paid from the state treasury subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL. This was one of the successful ways of working last year. The officers called attention to the sad fact that Pennsylvania has not measured up in its support of THE UNION SIGNAL, only about one-twentieth of the members being subscribers. Surely the present year will make a better showing.

Mrs. Ella M. George, president of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., is ever a welcome guest as well as a practical and inspiring helper at county conventions.

SOUTH AFRICA WHITE RIBBONERS CELEBRATE TWENTY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY

Special Correspondence

The white ribboners of Cape Province, South Africa, were much disappointed at not being able to hold their annual convention this year owing to the European war and the consequent unsettled state of the country. It had been decided to meet this year at Alice in the Eastern districts and the convention was to be a very special one, it being the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the W. C. T. U. in South Africa, and the Alice union hoped to celebrate its coming-of-age birthday. However, in place of the convention, on November 5-6 a meeting of the executive committee larger than the usual quarterly meeting was held in Cape Town to consider urgent business and hear reports of officers. Miss Emilie Solomon, president South Africa W. C. T. U., presided and the devotional services were conducted by Mrs. William Abbott, acting superintendent of the Evangelistic department. The reports of the corresponding secretary and the two "Y" secretaries were encouraging, showing an increased membership. The address of the president was a review of the twenty-five years' work of the organization in the course of which Miss Solomon recalled how in 1889 Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt visited South Africa to extend an invitation to all women to join the white ribbon movement which had accomplished such wonders in America. Prior to this there had been in existence one union at Woodstock organized by Mrs. Devholm as a result of a visit to America some time previous, and this branch was affiliated directly with the World's W. C. T. U. A union was organized and the following year the first convention, lasting three hours, was held, Miss Ferguson of the Huguenot Seminary presiding. At this meeting the W. C. T. U. of Cape Colony was organized with Miss Virginia Lee Pride (a sister of Mrs. Frances P. Parks) as president, and a delegate was appointed to the first World's Convention in Boston in 1891.

Loving tribute was paid to the workers and organizers from other lands who had done so much for South Africa.

The W. C. T. U. has done much to secure a more general observance of Temperance Sunday and initiated the movement against the sale of liquor in defense force camps. It was also through the efforts of the W. C. T. U. that the Duxhurst Home for Inebriate Women was established.

CHALK TALK CHARTS

Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, National organizer and lecturer, has prepared charts for use in giving chalk talks which are being used with fine success by many Loyal Temperance Legion leaders and Sunday school workers. Faint outlines of pictures are traced upon large sheets of manila paper, which, though plain to the teacher, cannot be seen by the school. Soft charcoal pencils and colored crayons are used to fill in these outlines in the presence of the children. The verbal lessons to be given while drawing the pictures accompany the charts. The following are a few of the topics of charts which Mrs. Blair is prepared to furnish: "The Temperance Gloves," "A Cigaret Trap," "Fruit Bottles," "The House that Rum Built," "From Beer to Bier," "Cords of Appetite," "The Two Wine Glasses," "The House We Live In," "A New Declaration of Independence," "A White Life for Two," "The Jugarette and Cigarette," "The Value of a Boy," "Saloons and Rattlesnakes," "Word Arrows," "Miss Prudence and Mr. Smoke Cloud."

The price is one dollar per set of six lessons and twelve cents for postage. For the charts and for further information address Mrs. Ellen A. Dayton Blair, 910 Grand View St., Los Angeles, Calif.

UNION SIGNAL DAY

Souvenir cards, with picture of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens on one side and upon the other side a facsimile of her autograph letter, written in acknowledgment of the "birthday subscriptions" of 1914, will be furnished by Addie A. Austin, National superintendent of Literature, Evanston, Illinois, to all local unions observing UNION SIGNAL Day.

We are sure that special effort will be made to secure many new subscribers, and it will be well at an early date to send in your request for sample copies of the paper as well as the number of souvenir cards desired.

Let us have the greatest number of "birthday subscriptions" ever sent in, thus making a loving memorial to Mrs. Stevens.

WE REJOICE TO KNOW

That the Signal Is a Help to W. C. T. U. Workers and Others as Well

I have been a subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL only one year and I find it a great help. I have arranged several interesting programs from clippings from it, and have had other clippings printed in our local paper. It encourages me in the work in our own union when I read of the great accomplishments in other places. Long may it live and bring better news each week. Richland, Mo.

A stray copy of THE UNION SIGNAL has come into my hands. I am so delighted with the news contained in the paper, and the spicy, racy way in which the facts are set forth attracts me so much, that I wish to become a subscriber.
Glasgow, Scotland

We have many papers and magazines but nothing takes the place of THE UNION SIGNAL which increases in value every week. I have little time for reading but no page of that paper is neglected.
Mrs. Helen L. Bullock, Elmira, N. Y.

I enclose herewith one dollar for my renewal of our dear old reliable SIGNAL. Although I am not so actively in the work as formerly yet am just as deeply interested, and I keep tab on the progress of the great cause we all love—prohibition.
Mrs. Louise S. Rounds, Clifton Springs, N. Y.

Northern orators of the temperance reform have found much satisfaction in sounding the changes on the "slavery parallel," but at the very vital point now under discussion there is no parallel between the controversy that preceded the Civil War and the prohibition propaganda. The United States government never held slaves. The Federal government was never in partnership with slavery. No golden stream of revenue ever flowed from the slave holders into the National Treasury.—Daniel A. Poling

"The vote on woman suffrage was so close in Nebraska that it is safe to say the activity of the saloon against it was sufficient to defeat it. It is disappointing that in so intelligent a state as Nebraska those who conspire against the home should be able to tie the hands of the mothers of the state while they—the conspirators—plot against the sons. In a little while the people will understand who are the real force against woman suffrage, and why, and then 'votes for women' will win by an overwhelming majority" said William J. Bryan, in a recent speech.

CHILD-LABOR BILL PASSES HOUSE BY VOTE OF 232 TO 44—CONGRESS TO HURRY THROUGH MEASURES APPROPRIATING $90,000,000 A DAY—WORK FOR SMITH-HUGHES FILM CENSORSHIP BILL—MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR FRANCES E. WILLARD HELD IN STATUARY HALL, WASHINGTON

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, Nat'l W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Congress again this week has been wrought up to a high pitch of excitement over the Ship Purchase bill. In the Senate the filibuster continued until Wednesday night, when, by general agreement, the bill was referred to the conference committee, where it is at the present time.

After a short lived filibuster in the House, conducted by a few Southern Democrats from the cotton-mill states, the House passed the Palmer Child Labor bill by a vote of 232 to 44. The bill now goes to the Senate.

Opposition to the bill was based on the contention that it interfered with the rights of the states. The measure declares that it is unlawful for producers, manufacturers or dealers to ship or deliver for transportation in interstate commerce the products of mine or quarry made wholly or in part by children under sixteen years old; or products of mills, canneries, workshops, factories or manufacturing establishments made by children under fourteen years old, or those between fourteen and sixteen who work more than eight hours a day, or more than six days a week, or after seven o'clock at night. Inspection by the Department of Labor would be authorized and fines of from $100 to $1,000 or imprisonment from one month to a year, or both, imposed for violation.

Mr. Palmer explained that many states already have Child Labor laws in substantial accord with this bill. This is the first measure of its kind that has ever passed either House of Congress. Fifteen states have adopted the age of sixteen years with respect to mines and quarries, and fourteen states have adopted the standard of fourteen years in respect to labor in workshops, mills and factories. Twenty-two states have laws forbidding more than eight hours of work for children, and thirty-six states have adopted the standard of forbidding any work on the part of children.

Senators and Representatives Show Fatigue

That Senators and Representatives are worn and wearied is evidenced more and more by the too frequent outbursts of temper shown during the present week. After the Child Labor bill had passed, there was a general set-to in the House, which narrowed down to members of the Pennsylvania delegation indulging in personal vituperation which became so heated an adjournment was called. In the Senate, where courtesy and dignity are usually observed, physical force was threatened when Senator Clark, a Republican from Wyoming, during a heated discussion on the Ship Purchase bill, virtually called Senator Reed of Missouri a liar. Senator Cummins of Iowa, who had the floor, in a few sentences smoothed out the difficulty.

Congress to Push Through Measures Appropriating $90,000,000 a Day

Hoping to avoid the necessity of calling a special session, Congress has now settled down to hurry through the measures appropriating $90,000,000 a day for the next eleven legislative days, which will supply the billion dollars needed to run the government during the next fiscal year.

The House committee on education has reported unanimously the Smith-Hughes censorship bill. In an interview with Mr. Hughes this week, he assured us his committee was very favorable to the bill, but, as the time before adjournment was so filled, it would not be possible to get it passed at this session. He expected, however, to push it at the opening of the new Congress, whether in extra or special session.

The memorial service to Miss Willard in Statuary Hall on February 17 was among the best we have ever held. There was a large audience, a fine program, and uplifting music by a group of young colored men from Howard University.

The Washington Times, an evening paper of the District, not essentially a temperance paper, in its issue of February 17 says in big headlines:

"Half of States by 1917,"
New Slogan of 'Drys.'
"One Fourth of Population, in One-Third of States, Already Under Statewide Prohibition—Many Hard Fights Now Under Way."

Then follow nearly two columns, giving facts and figures in support of these headlines. The Times says: "Never has there been a time when any matter of legislation 'back home' was watched with such absorbing interest by public men in Washington, as the sessions now are being observed with reference to the liquor issue. Public men at this end of the line, as party leaders, are constantly being called upon for counsel and direction in matters concerning their party interests in their states and right now they are busy giving advice about handling liquor legislation in all parts of the country."

WORK FOR SMITH-HUGHES FILM CENSORSHIP BILL

It would be well for every one believing in the necessity of protecting our children and youths from demoralizing film pictures, to write a few lines to Hon. D. M. Hughes, M. C., Washington, D. C., assuring him of a desire for the passage of this bill. An avalanche of brief letters should be sent to Mr. Hughes IMMEDIATELY. Don't put it off; write yourself and get your friends to write. He can use these letters in bulk when introducing his measure, to show Congress the people want this legislation. School teachers, Sunday school teachers—ALL should write.

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR FRANCES E. WILLARD IN STATUARY HALL, FEBRUARY 17

MRS. EMMA S. SHELTON, President District of Columbia W. C. T. U.

Through the courtesy of the Vice-President of the United States, the sergeant-at-arms of the Senate and Mr. Elliott Woods, superintendent of the Capitol Building, the use of Statuary Hall was granted the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia in which to hold the memorial service, on her heavenly birthday, for our beloved leader, Frances E. Willard. A platform was erected near the statue and hundreds of chairs were placed for the comfort of visitors. The Frances E. Willard union furnished the flowers that as always adorn the statue on these occasions. The day was a perfect one and the audience the largest ever assembled for such a meeting, and as Congressmen and Senators passed through the hall on their way to the House or Senate, many stopped to listen to the addresses and music.

The chief speaker was Hon. S. D. Fess, U. S. Representative from Ohio, and president of Antioch College, who said in part:

"If great movements are but the lengthening shadows of a great personality then it is easy to understand the sweep of influence of Frances E. Willard as embodied in the great Woman's Christian Temperance Union movement as now witnessed throughout the world.

"Leadership as shown in her life consists of three qualities: First, intellectual grasp which enables one to comprehend a situation in its details to the extent to know what must be done; secondly, a sympathetic attitude toward a cause for the sake of its success, which would induce one to embrace the opportunity even though it be at variance with popular favor; thirdly, an indomitable will that brooks no defeat but battles in the conviction that what ought to be done will be done, and must claim one's entire devotion until it is done.

"The world is full of people of intellect. It does not suffer from want of this light. But intellect without heart will never win a reform. The world is full of people of heart. But that without intellect will never win permanently, since great causes are never blindly conducted. The world has many people of both intellect and heart, but who lack volition or confidence in their ability to accomplish anything. Every leader of a successful movement must have power to see clearly, to feel sympathetically and constructively, and to do willingly. Frances E. Willard in a large sense was a successful leader. Any movement should be congratulated upon the good fortune of having her life and influence for its heritage."

The impressive program was participated in by Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, National superintendent of Legislative work; Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, World's and National superintendent of Work among Soldiers and Sailors; Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts, World's superintendent of Sunday School Work; Mrs. Don P. Blaine, National W. C. T. U. lecturer and organizer; Mrs. Theo. T. Moore; Miss Jennie Smith, National W. C. T. U. evangelist; Rev. Earle Willey, D. D. pastor of the Garfield Memorial Christian Church, and Rev. Henry F. Lutz. The music was led by Mrs. Clayton E. Emig and an octette of colored students from Howard University, with Prof. Charles H. Wesley as leader, gave a number of Miss Willard's favorite songs.

We were honored by having present the wife of the United States consul to Newfoundland, Mrs. James S. Benedict who is also president of the W. C. T. U. of Newfoundland.

Record-Breaking Progress of Prohibition

THREE STATES PASS PROHIBITION LAWS—THREE REFER QUESTION TO PEOPLE—MEASURES PENDING IN MANY LEGISLATURES

The rapidity with which the prophecy, "We'll make the map all white," is being fulfilled in these days of glorious prohibition victories is a cause for gratitude almost too great for expression. A year ago we gratefully counted nine states which had outlawed the liquor traffic; today the number is sixteen with little doubt that Iowa, Idaho and possibly Utah will soon be added.

Alabama led the way in January by passing a statewide measure over the veto of the governor. Early in February, the legislature of Arkansas honored itself by enacting a measure which made Arkansas the sixteenth prohibition state. Last week the law-makers of Iowa, who had for some time had under consideration a resolution submitting to the people a constitutional prohibition amendment, decided to rid the state of the liquor traffic by a shorter route, and passed a measure repealing the mulct law, thus restoring statutory prohibition. While this bill passed both houses, it still, at this writing, awaits the signature of the governor. If not vetoed, it goes into effect on January 1, 1916.

Early in the year Idaho's legislature passed a resolution submitting the question of statewide prohibition to a vote of the people at the general election in 1916, and as all three political parties of the state have declared in favor of it, there is little question of its being adopted by the voters. Later, acting on the recommendation of Governor Alexander, the lower house of the Idaho legislature adopted a statutory measure, which, if passed by the senate, will give Idaho a prohibition law which will go into effect January 1, 1916, the same day that the laws of Oregon and Washington begin operations, thus preventing the liquor interests of these states transferring their business across the state line.

South Carolina, tiring of its inadequate and ineffective dispensary law, has for some time been hoping for something better. Its legislature has now passed a bill referring to the people on September 14 the question of whether or not they wish statewide prohibition.

Almost simultaneous with the action of Iowa and South Carolina was the passage by the Utah senate of a prohibition bill providing for statewide prohibition. It is expected that the lower house will act favorably upon this measure, and that it will become a law in the near future.

Even Montana, which is handicapped by much license territory, although blessed by woman suffrage, has shown its intention of outlawing John Barleycorn. The lower house passed a bill providing for prohibition by legislative enactment, after killing the senate bill providing for prohibition by an amendment, and on February 20 the senate passed the house measure as a substitute to its own bill. The substitute provides that the question be left to a referendum vote of the people in 1916 to ratify or reject the legislative enactment.

The agitation for prohibition, however, is not confined to the South and West, for on February 18, the lower house of the Vermont legislature passed a referendum bill looking to the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Within a few days petitions are to be circulated to initiate a prohibition amendment to be voted on in Ohio next November.

Statewide bills have been introduced in several other legislatures and many states are planning to inaugurate campaigns in 1916. The people have spoken and the law-makers of the country have heard their voice and are obeying it.

"Votes for Women" Popular in the Legislatures

FOUR STATES TO VOTE IN 1915

Woman suffrage is having its triumphs in every section of the country. By a most satisfactory majority the legislatures of the states of West Virginia, New York, Massachusetts and New Jersey have submitted the woman suffrage question to the voters at the next general election. A similar action has been taken by the legislature of Arkansas, but owing to a provision that only three constitutional measures can be submitted in one year, it cannot go to the voters. One house of the Pennsylvania, Iowa, North Dakota and Vermont legislatures has acted favorably upon a woman suffrage measure, and in the first three of these states this is the second legislature to vote for submission, which makes it probable that the citizens of these states will have an opportunity to pass upon the question this fall. Both houses of the Tennessee legislature have adopted a resolution for submission, which, however, must be acted upon by a second session before submission.

REVIEW OF PROHIBITION VICTORIES OF PAST SIX MONTHS

September

Virginia voted for statewide prohibition by a 32,500 majority on September 22.

October

Emperor Nicholas of Russia declared his intention of prohibiting forever the sale of alcoholic drinks in Russia.

November

National prohibition of alcoholic liquors declared in Russia.

Oregon voted for statewide prohibition at the general election by a majority of 36,480.

Washington voted for statewide prohibition by 18,632 majority.

Colorado voted for statewide prohibition by 11,572 majority.

Arizona voted for statewide prohibition by 3,144 majority.

Nevada and Montana adopted amendments to the state constitution providing for equal suffrage.

December

On December 22, the United States House of Representatives gave a majority vote in favor of the Sheppard-Hobson Amendment to the United States Constitution.

January

Arizona's prohibition law went into effect January 1. It closed all saloons, breweries and distilleries in the state.

January 6. The French Cabinet approved the submission to Parliament of a measure making permanent the prohibition of the sale of absinthe and other similar liquors.

January 14 both houses of the Alabama legislature passed a statewide prohibition bill over the governor's veto.

On the first of January, 1915, the prohibition law of Iceland forbidding the sale, manufacture and importation of intoxicating liquors went into effect.

The Idaho legislature passed a resolution to submit to a vote of the people the question of statewide prohibition, at the general election in 1916.

February

A measure repealing the mulct law passed both houses of the Iowa legislature. This will automatically make Iowa dry, by restoring statutory prohibition.

A statewide prohibition measure was passed by the lower house of the Arkansas legislature on Feb. 1, by a vote of 72 to 22. On Feb. 5 the senate passed it by a vote of 33 to 2. The law will go into effect January 1, 1916.

The South Carolina legislature adopted a resolution to submit to a vote of the people the question of statewide prohibition, on September 14, 1915.

PROHIBITION SPELLS HIGHER WAGES

MRS. KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON, President Massachusetts W. C. T. U.

A new and interesting proof of the attitude the business world is taking towards the prohibition of the liquor traffic has recently been afforded in the town of Millbury, Massachusetts. Millbury has been a confirmed license town for years, but the sentiment for local prohibition has been increasing very much of late and the recent organization of a Woman's Christian Temperance Union has helped in the growth of sentiment for the outlawing of the saloon.

On January 27 the W. W. Windle Company, a local manufacturing firm, surprised the citizens by sending out a statement that if the town voted "no" on the following Monday, there would be an increase of ten per cent in the wages paid to all teetotal employes of that firm. Mr. Windle backed up his offer by strong statements to prove that the firm could well afford this increase, although paying unusually high wages at that time, because of the better workmanship and increased safety guaranteed through prohibition even when limited to the township area. He said: "Business men are waking up to the fact that rum and business do not mix. A saloon in town means more accidents, poorer production, higher taxes, sickness and hundreds of other evils. Only a short time ago an out-of-town manufacturer, who owns considerable property here, told me he would never build another dollar's worth of property as long as there was an open saloon in Millbury."

Alas, the offer was made only a few days before election so there was not time to make it much of a campaign slogan. The town again voted "yes," though with a greatly decreased majority. But the incident is of value as furnishing one more to the thousands of proofs of the indisputable fact that the day when the liquor traffic can fool the people on the line of an aid to prosperity has forever passed. Better success to Millbury in 1916! Better success to Massachusetts, rather, in its efforts to rid itself of the clumsy, inefficient machinery of its high license, local option law.

Kansas Legislature Proclaims Its Satisfaction With Prohibition

In the following resolutions, the Kansas senate (the house concurring) on February 9, without a dissenting vote, affirmed its belief in the advantages of prohibition. The resolutions are aimed especially against a lobby of alleged Kansans who have been trying to persuade the Utah legislature that prohibition has been a failure in Kansas.

Whereas, The liquor interests throughout the country, and those allied with them in their nefarious business, are publishing abroad in form of paid advertisements in the newspapers, certain false and defamatory statements to the effect that prohibition in Kansas has caused increase in crime, death rate, homicides, suicides, divorces and juvenile delinquents, and

Whereas, The saloon trust is making use of juggled statistics, falsehoods manufactured by criminal interests allied to the alcohol venders, and derogatory statements made by a few unreliable and irresponsible citizens of Kansas, all with the intention of creating prejudice in the minds of the legislators of other states, and thus influencing proposed anti-liquor legislation, and

Whereas, There is a lobby, the members of which profess to be Kansas men, operating in the legislature of the state of Utah, and alleging that evil follows in the train of prohibition, and that the enforcement of the prohibitory law in Kansas has resulted in multiplying crime, and deteriorating all the mental and moral faculties of the people of Kansas; therefore be it

Resolved, By the senate, the house of representatives concurring therein, that all of such charges are libelous and false, and do but represent the sentiments of men who, when this state exiled the saloon, were compelled to leave Kansas for her good.

Resolved, That the reverse of these statements is true; that the state of Kansas is cleaner, better, more advanced in mental culture, and stronger in moral fiber and conviction; that her homes are happier and more comfortable, her children better educated than ever before in her history; that crime is less prevalent and poverty less general and that all this is due largely to the fact that the saloon is such an outlaw that none of her school children have ever seen a saloon, and are unacquainted with the appearance of a saloon-keeper; and be it further

Resolved, That we, as representatives of the people of Kansas, hereby declare our allegiance to the cause of temperance, sobriety and right living, as exemplified by the ultimate result of constitutional prohibition, and its enforcement in our midst, and that we are opposed to any return to the domination of intoxicating liquors, and that no proposition looking to a resubmission of the prohibitory amendment, and that no law which has for its object the re-establishment of places for the sale of liquor anywhere in Kansas, will be given serious consideration, either by the legislature or by any of its committees.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the journals of the house and senate, and that the chief clerk of the house, and the secretary of the senate are directed to send certified copies of this resolution to all states of the Union which now have legislatures convened and in session for the enactment of laws.

MAJOR DAN MORGAN SMITH'S CONVERSION

MRS. FLORENCE D. RICHARD, President Ohio W. C. T. U.

One of the most encouraging, as well as surprising bits of news that has come our W. C. T. U. way for a long, long time is that concerning the recent conversion to the prohibition cause of Major Dan Morgan Smith, of Chicago, formerly general counsel for the National Model License League and, without doubt, the biggest, brainiest man in the whole liquor camp.

I am asked to relate to the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL an experience which had to do with Major Smith's change of heart on the prohibition question: Some two years ago I delivered an address in Fremont, Ohio. It was the night before election and bitterly cold, but notwithstanding that fact I spoke to a big crowd on the street while the liquor speaker held forth in a comfortable hall not far distant. The next morning a blizzard raged. It was a regular North Dakota one in full blast, but as I had an appointment for the next evening it was necessary for me to take an early car. I was hurrying as best I could and struggling with a good-sized valise when a pleasant voiced gentleman asked: "May I help you with your baggage?" I replied, "Thank you! You surely may." As we entered the car we were greeted with cheers and loud laughter. "Well, what in the world is the matter?" exclaimed the gentleman. I rubbed some of the snow from my eyes and for the first time caught a glimpse of my escort. "Why," I replied at once, "I think I know what is the matter. They think it's a joke because the 'wet' speaker has helped the 'dry' speaker to board the car." That served as an introduction all round and quite a debate followed, nearly everybody taking some part in the good-natured though earnest discussion.

The snow-storm prevented our car from making much headway and finally stopped it altogether. At four o'clock in the afternoon, my license friend, and another man, concluded to see if something to eat could not be found. They started toward a farm-house not far away, and soon returned with a supply of bread and butter sandwiches, hard boiled eggs, cookies and doughnuts, but one of them took occasion to remark as the good things were being distributed: "The dear little woman didn't want any pay for all this, but we insisted on giving her some money anyway, and now, I suppose, every one here will have some of this provender, except Mrs. Richard. She won't because it was bought with brewer's money." I replied, "Don't you be too sure about that. I am a Methodist and I feel like singing that good old hymn,

" 'This is the way we long have sought,
And mourned because we found it not.'

For years we W. C. T. U. women have been trying to get you brewers to put your money into bread and butter and now that you have, we'll take some, if not all of it." There were four saloon-keepers on the car and they, with the rest, saw the point and cheered heartily.

> And so fails me each argument that once seemed so plausible, for the foundation of my faith and the cornerstone of my argument was the success of regulation and the failure of prohibition, and with the failure of regulation and the success of prohibition, my faith is gone and my cornerstone displaced, my structure has fallen, and it remains for me to help build another, founded on a new faith with a cornerstone as enduring as truth, and that faith shall be called Temperance, and that cornerstone shall be Annihilation.
> —Major Dan Morgan Smith.

We reached the city about midnight and separated, some going home and others of us to hotels. When I shook hands with my liquor friend, as I bade him good-by, he expressed his pleasure in the day's discussion of the prohibition question, saying: "This has surely been a profitable day. I have learned one thing, if nothing more, and that is, that a woman can talk on all phases of the liquor question without ranting or losing her temper." I replied that no one ever became angry in a debate unless he or she ran out of arguments and that I could sustain my side indefinitely; that I had only just begun on my barrel of facts against the licensed liquor traffic. Major Dan Morgan Smith is on our side now, and is kind enough to say, that that day on the snow-bound car was the turning point in his relations with the Model License League. Surely "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform" and employs humble instrumentalities in His work. I can only thank Him and rejoice that "He which persecuted us in times past now preacheth the faith which once he destroyed."

Major Smith made his first prohibition speech at the "Ohio Dry" convention on the subject, "License Fails to Regulate More Than Prohibition Fails to Prohibit." He dealt the licensed liquor traffic sledge-hammer blows and showed how false is their claim or their desire for any kind of regulation. From the beginning of his address until its close he held the close attention of his audience, the only interruption being loud and prolonged applause.

The National Anti-Saloon League has secured his services for the greater part of the year and we hope they will place him some of the time at least, in Ohio, where he would be a great factor in helping to win statewide prohibition this fall.

NEAL DOW'S CONTRIBUTION TO PROHIBITION

Wherever men of enlightenment are laboring for the betterment of the race, there the name of Neal Dow is a household word. Wherever men have sought to suppress the harmful traffic in intoxicants, there the action taken harks back by inevitable force of circumstance to the position which the state of Maine took under Neal Dow's leadership so long ago.

He had the ability to foresee what must be done with the saloon and its attendant evils if civilization is to reach the point which idealists wish it to gain. That foresight of a man a half century ago told him, what every reformer everywhere sees to be true today, that to legalize and make respectable by such legalization the sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes is erecting a bar to prevent the accomplishment of the highest and best in citizenship as well as in individual life.

And Neal Dow had the courage to undertake the work of convincing men that his view was the right one. He had the determination to persist, despite obstacles which would have disheartened a less courageous man. He was logical enough to be convinced that there could be no underlying necessity for a trade that worked such evil, and now science is demonstrating that he was right. When he inaugurated the movement, it was opposed by the best scientific and medical thought of the times. Now that same best scientific and medical thought endorses his position. Then business believed itself to be dependent in great measure upon the existence and continuance of the traffic in alcoholic stimulants; now business knows that it is only injured by it, that every dollar that goes into the till of the rumseller is withdrawn from the channels of legitimate business. Today we are witnessing the triumph of the principles for which Neal Dow stood.—Portland (Me.) Express.

Neal Dow, the "Father of Prohibition"

Employers of Labor Laud West Virginia's Prohibitory Law

GOVERNOR H. D. HATFIELD of West Virginia

[Excerpts from first biennial message to legislature]

The general results thus far in the matter of prohibition have been most satisfactory, and the co-operative spirit of the majority of our people has been most pleasing and of the greatest benefit in bringing about this result. The law has been effective only since July 1, 1914. The results for good have been felt throughout our commonwealth, and many who were actually against the adoption of the prohibition amendment originally and voted against it, have repeatedly said to me that if an opportunity presented itself in the future they would reverse their former action and favor prohibition.

I am sure it will be of interest to you to hear the opinions of some of the state's leading business men on this subject, which I have received in communications from time to time. The first quotation is from a gentleman who has in his employ a great many men:

"I am just in receipt of your favor of the 24th, and want to say, since prohibition went into effect we have had comparatively no trouble regarding our men laying off from work, fighting, etc. There is not a family who were so unfortunate as to have a father or sons that were drinking but that has been better taken care of and is very perceptibly more prosperous. It has saved the operators many dollars. We are troubled a little by bootleggers, but I assure you there is not one pint used now to gallons before prohibition went into effect. If our officers will do their duty the good that will come to West Virginia is impossible to estimate."

This gentleman has the management of two of the largest and best collieries in the state.

The second letter is from one of our best judges, who has had a long and varied experience in the enforcement of the law, and who informs me that his court has had a decided decrease in criminal cases, but an increase in bootlegging cases, and that his information is that at the next session of the court there will be a still greater falling off of felony cases. And he makes the further assertion that "There is no question but what the commission of felony crimes has materially decreased in my jurisdiction since the going into effect of prohibition."

Another letter comes from one of the state's best business men, who has been a large employer of labor for the past twenty years, and is connected with three of the largest mines in our state. He says:

"The efficiency of the men since the adoption of the prohibition law has materially increased. We are now getting more work per man than ever before. Notwithstanding the exceedingly light run, the overdrafts of our men have been less than we could expect to see, which is due to the fact that less script and money is being spent for liquor than previously. We have had less trouble than ever before in getting the men back to work after pay-day. The number of brawls and fights in the camps has decreased very much, and the few that we do have, have been due to liquor brought into the camp. If labor generally is now doing better under the protection of the law than before and spending less for liquor, it follows that with equally good industrial conditions they will all necessarily have more money to save or spend upon their families and in other directions, and I firmly believe that prohibition has worked and will continue to work to the interest and benefit of the entire state. And were it not for liquor shipped and brought into this state from outside there would be a still better condition shown."

The judge of the criminal court of Fayette county writes me as follows relative to the results of prohibition in that county:

"I am of the opinion that crime has decreased at least fifty per cent in Fayette county from the first of July up until the middle of December, 1914. Three or four murders have been reported within the holiday week, and it is generally understood that several of the participants in these homicides were drinking, and that they ordered the intoxicants themselves from without the state. I am expecting a wave of petty larceny offenses from now on until industrial conditions in this coal field improve, for many people are actually in want and many cases of larceny are reported."

From another employer of labor in the state I have received the following expression as to the effects of prohibition on the men in his employ:

"I am very glad to say that the general results have been very satisfactory indeed. The number of overdrafts now in our office have very materially been diminished since the law went into effect, and there seems to be more comfort and happiness among our employes and their families. I am fully convinced that this law has greatly increased the sobriety of our men as a whole, and their efficiency has been raised very materially and their general welfare promoted as a result of same. Not a single case of burglary or house-breaking has been reported on our work, and there seems to be a feeling of security that did not prevail prior to the time the law took effect."

I quote sections of these letters from my personal files to show conclusively the economic value of the enforcement of the prohibition law to the laboring man. I have been told by numerous business men and by those closely identified with labor, and who are large employers of labor, that while the coal run has been dull there is no question as to the great change for good that has been brought about in the interest of the laboring people and for all classes since the adoption of the prohibition law.

FROM THE GOVERNORS' VIEWPOINT

PROHIBITION QUESTION FOREVER SETTLED IN KANSAS

GOVERNOR ARTHUR CAPPER of Kansas

Our material prosperity, our high standards of public morals, our personal well-being are largely due to the fact that for more than thirty years the open saloon has been an outlaw in this state. Our physical development has not been stunted, and our moral sense has not been blunted by the degenerating influences of drink. And we may rejoice that the Kansas election of 1914 forever settles the saloon question in this state. That vote emphasizes as never before that prohibition is a distinctive political policy of Kansas. There can be no turning backward from the course which has brought such manifold blessings to our people. We may confidently expect the liquor evil, like murder, arson and highway robbery, to show itself at times, but I promise you this administration will not for a single moment relax the most searching, stringent, vigorous and continuous enforcement of the prohibitory law.

ALCOHOL A CRIME PRODUCER

GOVERNOR ROLLAND H. SPAULDING of New Hampshire

One of the principal functions of government is to protect society from crime; to exercise what we call the police power in such a way as to preserve order and to promote peace, happiness and prosperity. It is my opinion that crime is very largely the result of the use of intoxicating liquor. In so far as we can diminish the use of liquor we shall prevent and eliminate crime. I believe the best way to diminish the use of liquor is to prohibit not only its sale, but also, in the first instance, its manufacture; and to that end should be directed, I think, the efforts of those who earnestly and sincerely seek social betterment.

SENTIMENT FOR PROHIBITION GROWS STRONGER

EX-GOVERNOR LEE CRUCE of Oklahoma

"Oklahoma has now been a state almost seven years, during which time a thorough test has been given the prohibition law," wrote Ex-Governor Lee Cruce last August to a friend in Virginia. He said further:

"Statistics in most states show that more than half the expenses of maintaining the criminal courts are brought about by the prosecution of persons charged with crimes directly traceable to the liquor traffic. Where this traffic is eliminated, this source of crime is destroyed. The law has also tended to foster and develop legitimate lines of business in the state. Notwithstanding the fact that we have had crop failures continually since the adoption of our constitution, and a national period of depression has ensued, almost every line of legitimate industry has prospered.

"The tax values in Oklahoma during these seven years have doubled. Educational institutions of the state have more than doubled in number, are better sustained by popular tax, and the number attending these institutions has increased more than a hundred percent. Crime has shown a marked decrease, notwithstanding the population of the state shows an increase of almost a hundred percent.

"The number of homicides committed in the state is showing a substantial and steady decrease year by year. The money that once was spent in the open saloon is now used to purchase needed clothing, food supplies and homes for women and children who hitherto were neglected.

"Happiness and prosperity have followed in the wake of the law until it is hard to find a really intelligent, substantial, thinking man in this state who will contend seriously that the open saloon would improve either the financial, moral or intellectual welfare of our people."

PROHIBITION A MORAL AND FINANCIAL BENEFIT

GOVERNOR L. B. HANNA of North Dakota

I believe that prohibition has done much for North Dakota, both from a moral and financial standpoint. The law is respected and easier of enforcement each year, and I am satisfied that the people of the state will never repeal it.

ABSOLUTE DESTRUCTION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC DEMANDED

GOVERNOR MOSES ALEXANDER of Idaho

I am proud, as a citizen of Idaho, to be able to say that the cause of temperance and sobriety has made such strides among our people that the day has arrived when the licensed saloon has no longer a right to existence in our state. There is no longer any ground to stand upon in defense of the dispensing of alcoholic liquors by consent of the state. Local option had its day, but that day is past. What the people now demand from us is the absolute destruction of the liquor business.

PROSPERITY FOLLOWS PROHIBITION

GOVERNOR LOCKE CRAIG of North Carolina

As to the effects of prohibition upon the finances of North Carolina, I will say that the total revenue from all sources during the year 1908, the last year during which whisky was sold under license, was $2,616,439.62. During the year 1913, the total receipts from all sources were $3,668,085.07. In 1908, the last year that whisky was sold, the average term of the public school in North Carolina was barely four months. This year many counties in the state will have a full six month term and in some counties it will be much more. North Carolina has never known in all her history a period of greater prosperity than that through which she has passed since prohibition was adopted. Real estate in all of the cities and larger towns has greatly enhanced in value, and every line of business has prospered.

A NON-PRODUCTIVE TRAFFIC

GOVERNOR GEORGE W. HAYS of Arkansas

The liquor question is one that is not only attracting the attention of the citizenship of Arkansas but of the entire nation. This question is a serious one. It has played its part, the result of which is apparent to everyone, and its day is doomed in our entire country. It has corrupted in a measure the politics of the country and legislation. The evil effect of this traffic cannot be told in words. It has ruined and destroyed manhood, brought poverty to homes, has caused many heartaches and done more to discredit, disorganize and retard the moral uplift of manhood than all other evils combined.

An investigation of the record of those who are confined in our state prisons, those who are condemned to die in the electric chair or those convicted of any other crime, will disclose the fact that the greater per cent of such crimes resulted from the use of intoxicating liquors. You will also find that this one evil is responsible for a large per cent of those who are confined in the institutions for nervous diseases.

The liquor traffic is absolutely non-productive except of dissipation. It produces no wealth except to the few who are engaged in the traffic. It does not induce immigration or capital to come to our state. The sale of same amounts to the few dollars revenue paid by those as a privilege to engage in this business. On the other hand, the millions of dollars spent in this manner can hardly be estimated which, if spent in more legitimate and moral channels, would raise the standard of our citizenship, give a greater and nobler people, enable many to provide better for their families in the way of food and clothing and better educate their children and make happier homes.

Prohibition's Onward March Around the World

PRODUCTION OF BEER IN GERMANY REDUCED

Official Order Cuts Output of Breweries Fifty Per Cent

Restrictions are reported to have been imposed on the production of beer in Germany, to become effective February 15, according to the Lokal Anzeiger. From that date until March 1, it is said, the breweries are forbidden to use more than fifty per cent of their usual quantity of malt, and after March 1 they must decrease forty per cent. The authorities later will fix definitely the amount of malt each brewery may consume.

"A NATION ON THE WATER WAGON"

"To Emperor William we owe a debt greater than to any other, and we should thank him." This was the remark made by Mr. Benislowsky, director of the Russian-American Steamship Company, a member of the Duma, to a group of his countrymen in front of the German embassy in Petrograd, as reported by Mary Isabel Brush in an article, "A Nation on the Water Wagon" in the Saturday Evening Post of February 13. This remark, comments the writer, was not well received by the Russians, but Mr. Benislowsky hastened to explain, "The German Emperor has put us in the way of saving ourselves. Not he, but drink, was our enemy; and the Kaiser has slain our enemy for us. He has made us adopt temperance and nothing can defeat us now."

The above is one of the striking paragraphs in the graphic story of Russia's transformation under prohibition. According to the writer, to one man goes the credit for terminating indefinitely the unspeakable condition caused by the drink evil in Russia, and he is the Czar. She says, "Others would have stopped it merely for the mobilization. The Emperor is said to have expressed the wish many times to inaugurate a temperance measure, but members of the bureaucracy protested that it could not be done; the Czar held his own counsel but did not abandon his determination." When his prime minister declared a prohibition measure "impossible," he requested his resignation, and shortly afterward issued the mandate to close the vodka shops.

"Never again is the government to conduct a liquor business; never again is an intoxicating beverage to be manufactured within its confines, except in limited amounts and with low percentages of alcohol. Meantime the country not only manufactures no alcohol but would seem to contain none. And the people are happy. * * * Russia, entirely sober for the first time in her national existence, stands up bright and buoyant, with a new hope and a new joy. She has no regrets and no problems.

"Even the Minister of Finance, His Excellency Mr. Bark, says she has not, as he stands smiling with optimism in the capital of his emancipated country and faces the situation of raising—to replace the revenue from vodka—the modest sum of a thousand million rubles a year."

PROHIBITION GAINING IN FRANCE

Judging by reports received from France, the campaign for temperance is growing in extent and influence. It is said that the Academy of Political and Moral Science, inspired by the example of the Academy of Sciences, has forwarded to the minister of Finance a resolution urging the immediate adoption of more drastic measures to stamp out the drink evil. On February 12, the chamber of deputies adopted a bill prohibiting the sale of absinthe, and in the debate on the bill, Deputy Edouard Lachaud is reported to have said, "Absinthe suppression is only the commencement. We will arrive at the suppression of all similar appetizers."

FROM THE GOVERNORS' VIEWPOINT

THE SALOON IS DOOMED

GOVERNOR G. W. CLARKE of Iowa

It seems to me that the saloon in Iowa is doomed, and that its abolition is only a question of time and not a very long time. Public sentiment, which almost always moves in advance of the enactment or enforcement of law, has now reached such a point in Iowa that old conditions with reference to the liquor traffic will no longer be tolerated.

A MENACE TO THE STATE

GOVERNOR CHARLES W. GATES of Vermont

I think my attitude on the temperance question is pretty well known, and I did not suppose anyone had any question in regard to my firm belief in the necessity of abolishing the licensed saloons just as rapidly as possible. They are a menace to the proper development of our state and I am in full sympathy with all reasonable efforts to abolish them.

GOVERNOR LISTER OF WASHINGTON RECOMMENDS LIBERAL APPROPRIATION TO ENFORCE PROHIBITORY LAW

In his message to the legislature recently, Governor Ernest Lister made the following recommendation with reference to the statewide prohibition law:

"The passage and adoption of the prohibition law brings about a radical departure from existing conditions. It is probable that, in some directions, there may be a disposition shown to violate its provisions. While it is the duty of the prosecuting attorneys of the different counties to bring action against law violators, this act is of such a character that I feel that the officials of the state ought to lend their aid in its enforcement and would respectfully recommend that a special appropriation of $50,000 be made by your honorable body, to be used under the direction of the governor and attorney general of the state in securing evidence and prosecuting violators of the law. If the money is not required it will not be expended."

"THE PROHIBITION LAW SHALL BE ENFORCED," SAYS GOVERNOR RYE OF TENNESSEE

The friends of prohibition in the state of Tennessee are rejoicing over a regime of law enforcement which has made the illicit dealers in liquor beg for mercy at the courts of justice. "You may publish it abroad," writes the president of the Tennessee W. C. T. U., "that Tennessee is now indeed and in truth a dry state. Nashville is dry. Memphis is dry. Not a drop to drink. We have passed a stronger ouster law than has Kansas, and it has cleaned up the state."

In his inaugural message at the opening of the legislature, Governor Tom C. Rye urged a most strict enforcement of the laws. He said in part:

"The Democratic party, as well as all other political parties, stands pledged to the enforcement of the temperance laws and to the enactment of such laws as may be necessary to bring about this result. As the representative of the Democratic party, I pledged the people that, if they would elect a legislature in sympathy with the platform pledges of the party who would give me their assistance, that the temperance laws would be enforced, if the enactment of other laws for that purpose could possibly bring about that result. To this end, I earnestly recommend the enactment of such laws as, in your judgment, may tend to bring about this result. There can be no difference of opinion upon a question of law enforcement, and no state can prosper as it should whose citizens tamely bmit to the open nullification and disregard of the laws of the land. I am led to believe that in an effort to enforce the laws we will have the co-operation of every honest officer in the state who is charged with the duty of enforcing laws."

MICHIGAN'S LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR TALKS ON LIQUOR QUESTION

At the opening of the Michigan legislature, the president of the senate, Lieutenant Governor Ross, explained that he had been overwhelmed with requests from reporters, journalists, and men of all occupations and classes to express himself on the prohibition question. He said that any reference he might make to the liquor traffic could not be better stated than in the words of one of our influential dailies, which recently published the following concerning the present situation:

"This epochal phenomenon was not forecast even by the most shrewd ten years ago. Careful observers have been able to anticipate it only within the past four years. It is immaterial on which side one's personal inclinations lie, for we are in the presence here, not of prohibition hopes and liquor-interest fears, but of an actual development. Remarkable beyond all other political developments of recent years is this prohibition movement, touching our personal lives so much more minutely than mere tariffs or political theories. It is of small moment whether one is opposed to the idea, the fact is present."

"I might say, however," remarked the lieutenant governor, "that I have not been approached by the extremists of either side of this question, but have been flooded with requests by those occupying the middle ground—those interested in our great industrial enterprises, our colleges and schools, our criminals and unfortunates, our moral and social relations—and without exception they ask for advanced temperance legislation. I could not be true to my constituency if I did not turn these matters over to you. They are in your hands, and I have confidence in you that you will give them your most careful consideration, and when you have arrived at the result it will be the product of honest conviction."

Aaronic Benediction

The keynote of the Prohibition Rally Day meetings (March 20) should be gratitude. Most marvelously during the past six months has God answered the prayers and honored the faith of his people, in arousing the voters and lawmakers of the nation to the necessity for vigorous and prompt action in banishing from our land the enemy of the home—the legalized liquor traffic. In reviewing the recent wonderful victories for prohibition, we will keep ever in grateful remembrance those inspired pioneers and leaders of our movement: Neal Dow, Frances E. Willard and Lillian M. N. Stevens, the reward of whose self-sacrificing labors we are now enjoying.

AN AWAKENED CONTINENT

ANNA A. GORDON

Glorious is our sure, steady, upward climb toward the high, dry ground of National Constitutional Prohibition!

If we could construct our own railroad, we could today enjoy a journey from Old Virginia on the Atlantic to sunny California on the far Pacific, without passing through an inch of territory where the saloon is legalized.

Each victory mightily aids the "onward march of prohibition." Towns and cities voting out the liquor traffic inspire counties to go and do likewise. County victories incite a state to a successful prohibition campaign. As state after state grows white upon our map, and the mother-vote in many commonwealths is called into action, we praise God as we realize that within a few years a prohibitory law shall be written in the constitution of the United States. God speed our "fight for a clear brain—the holiest fight this side Jehovah's throne."

EDITORIAL NOTES

A year ago nine states were white upon the prohibition map. Today there are sixteen, with three more just waiting to have their black spots obliterated.

Which state will claim the honor of being the seventeenth prohibition state, Iowa, Utah or Idaho? Ask Governor Clarke—he may be able to tell you.

Heretofore prohibition orators have drawn imaginary word pictures of the happy condition of a nation freed from the legalized liquor traffic. Now, they need only to read to their audiences clippings from the Russian newspapers telling of a transformed people.

The Kansas legislature has passed a resolution unanimously endorsing the Sheppard-Hobson Resolution. Similar action has been taken by Tennessee, Oklahoma and North Dakota.

The Progressive party of Michigan at its state convention adopted a resolution in favor of state and National Prohibition.

At the "gratification" meeting following the passage of the Arkansas prohibition law, Governor Hays is reported to have said, "I believe the most manly act of my life, an act that will mean much to me, to my conscience, to my wife and my two little boys, and to the people of the state to which I owe so much, was the act I performed when I placed my signature to the bill which gave Arkansas statewide prohibition."

Many legislators are acting on the principle that it is better to make it "a short, short way to prohibition" by legislative action, pending the submission of a constitutional prohibition amendment to the people. An excellent idea, but it should always be borne in mind that the statutory law never can take the place of the constitutional, for an organic disease like the liquor traffic can be permanently disposed of only by organic treatment.

Prohibition not practicable? If any individual has the hardihood to venture such an assertion, refer him to the article on "Lights and Shades of Russian Prohibition," by George Kennan, in the February 17 Outlook. "Evidences of the beneficial effect of prohibition continue to accumulate," writes Mr. Kennan. "The efficiency of labor and the savings of labor have increased more than fifty per cent; the peasant population is better dressed, better fed than ever before; and 'hooliganism' has everywhere decreased."

The Pittsburgh Brewing Company has passed its regular dividend without payment. The growth of temperance sentiment in Pennsylvania is responsible. As a result of the company's action, the common stock was forced down several points, and Pittsburgh Brewing Company bonds dropped to a low record price. Independent Brewing common also declined three-fourths to two and three-fourths.

Why not order a supply of "Prosperity Postcards" advertised on page 16, as souvenirs to be distributed at the March 20 meeting?

It is said that the Russian government anticipates no difficulty in raising by indirect taxes a sufficient amount to cover the deficiency due to lack of revenue from the sale of liquors. The natural resources of the country belonging to the crown, such as oil fields, coal and copper mines, woodland and prairie which hitherto have not been exploited, have been given out in free concessions, and are about to be developed and from these the taxes, together with the land taxes, it is calculated, will aggregate a total of $347,000,000.

A questionaire has been sent out to the newspapers of Montana by The Helena Independent, asking for an expression of opinion on statewide prohibition. Of the 83 papers replying to the question, "Do you believe the present legislature should submit a constitutional amendment to the people of the state looking toward making the state dry?" 54 answered "Yes" and only 29 "No."

What are the causes of the wonderful succession of prohibition victories which have occurred in the last few weeks? The answer made by Fred O. Blue, state tax commissioner of West Virginia, when asked how he explained the magnificent majority of 92,000 by which his state outlawed the liquor traffic, gives some of the leading reasons in a nutshell: First, teaching in the public school of the effect of alcohol on the system; second, the control of politics by the liquor interests; third, the influence of employers of labor, who were for prohibition because of the demoralization of their men by drink; fourth, the large element in the state which had suffered personally from liquor.

PROHIBITION STATES

Arizona: Constitutional prohibition adopted November 3, 1914, in effect January 1, 1915.

Colorado: Constitutional prohibition adopted November 3, 1914, in effect January 1, 1916.

Georgia: Statutory prohibition enacted August 5, 1907, in effect January 1, 1908.

Kansas: Constitutional prohibition since 1880. Under the law of 1880 intoxicating liquor could be sold for medical, scientific and mechanical purposes. The Legislature of 1909 passed a law eliminating the three exceptions.

Maine: Statutory prohibition enacted 1851; repealed 1856; re-enacted 1858. Constitutional prohibition adopted 1884. February 11, 1911, the Legislature passed a resolution resubmitting the question. At the special election, September 11, 1911, the citizens of Maine, after a notable fight, voted for the retention of the prohibition amendment.

Mississippi: Statutory prohibition enacted February, 1908, in effect January 1, 1909. A bill to submit a constitutional amendment, brought before the Legislature immediately after the passage of the prohibition statute, failed by only a small vote.

North Carolina: Statutory prohibition adopted by popular vote, May 1908, in effect January 1, 1909.

North Dakota: When North Dakota entered the Union in 1889, the prohibitory clause of the constitution was voted upon separately and adopted. The first legislative assembly passed a strong law for enforcement. The constitutionality of the law has been sustained by the Supreme court, and its enforcement has been strengthened by legislative enactments.

Oklahoma: Constitutional prohibition adopted September 17, 1907. November 8, 1910, a local option and high license amendment was submitted to a vote of the people and defeated. Shipment of intoxicating liquors by freight and express has been prohibited by a federal court decision in that part of the state formerly known as Indian Territory, because of the twenty-one-year provision in the enabling act.

Oregon: Constitutional prohibition adopted November 3, 1914, in effect January 1, 1916.

Tennessee: Statutory prohibition enacted January, 1909; prohibition of sale in effect July 1, 1909; prohibition of manufacture in effect January 1, 1910.

Virginia: Satutory prohibition enacted September 22, 1914, in effect November 1, 1916.

Washington: Statutory prohibition adopted November 3, 1914, in effect January 1, 1916.

West Virginia: Constitutional prohibition adopted November 5, 1912, in effect July 1, 1914.

Alabama: Statutory prohibition enacted January, 1915, to go into effect June 30, 1915.

Arkansas: Statutory prohibition enacted February, 1915; to go into effect January 1, 1916.

NEAR PROHIBITION STATES

South Carolina: The question of statewide prohibition has been referred to the people by the legislature, vote to be taken on September 14.

Idaho: A constitutional prohibition amendment has been submitted to the people by the legislature, vote to be taken at the general election in 1916.

Utah: A statewide prohibition measure has passed the upper house of the legislature. If it passes the lower house and is signed by the governor, it will go into effect in June, 1916.

Montana: A statutory prohibition measure has passed both houses of the legislature.

LEGISLATIVE NEWS

Montana

Both houses of the legislature of Montana passed a bill providing for statewide prohibition by legislative enactment.

Indiana

Petitions for statewide prohibition, signed by approximately 20,000 men and women of the state, were presented to the legislature on February 19. A bill providing for statewide prohibition has been introduced.

North Carolina

The "anti-jug" bill, prohibiting delivery within the state of intoxicating liquors, for beverage purposes, was passed by the lower house of the North Carolina legislature on Feb. 19.

New Hampshire

A measure has been introduced in the legislature to repeal the present license law, which if passed, will restore statutory prohibition.

New York

A joint hearing on the statewide prohibition bill recently introduced into the New York legislature will be held on March 10, and the presence of New York white ribboners, under the leadership of Mrs. Ella Boole, the state president, will insure an able presentation of their side of the case.

Indiana

A bill providing for woman suffrage has been introduced in the Indiana legislature.

Arizona

The state supreme court of Arizona, confirming the conviction of Louis Gherna, on February 13, upheld the Arizona prohibition law on all points. Gherna sold a pint of whisky after the law went into effect.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

ON TO PROHIBITION

MRS. E. J. WRIGHT, Earlville, Iowa

(Air: Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, the Boys are Marching)

Hark! The bugle sounds, "Advance!"
Rouse and gird you for the fray,
Rum's embattled hosts now face us on the field;
But we will not fear their might and we will not shun the fight,
For to rum's dominion we will never yield.

CHORUS

On, on, on to Prohibition!
Courage! We shall win the day;
For our own beloved land, God and home as one we stand,
He who goeth forth to conquer, leads the way.

Long and hard may be the fight but the triumph of the right
Is as sure and true as God's unchanging word,
"Go ye forth; be not afraid; be ye strong and undismayed;
Surely, I am with you always," saith the Lord.

Long and dark has been the night of the hated tyrant's reign,
But a glorious dawn is breaking in the sky,
For the sign of cloud and flame in our van is moving on,
O'er a land redeemed our glorious flag shall fly.

We record here the name of a comrade and friend who has recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. IDA T. EAST, of Nashville, one of the pioneer temperance workers in Tennessee and until two years ago president of the Frances Willard union organized by Miss Willard on her first visit to Nashville. Mrs. East and her distinguished husband, Judge E. H. East, counted it a great privilege always to meet and entertain Miss Willard and Miss Gordon when they came to Nashville and numbered them among their dearest friends. Mrs. East was for years a familiar figure at National Conventions, was a most devoted W. C. T. U. worker, and in the days when prohibition was unpopular in Tennessee, gave herself, her time and her means to further the good cause. The oil painting of the martyred Senator Carmack, which hangs in the reception room of National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, was the gift of Mrs. East.

A real estate man of Raton, New Mexico, recently expressed himself as follows: "I confidently expect to see New Mexico vote dry at an early date; in fact, just as early as our law makers will give us an opportunity to vote on it. Many influential men in this county and men that have heretofore stood with the liquor interests, have declared for prohibition."

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

TRANSPORTATION NOTES

ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON

The dates for the National W. C. T. U. convention, to be held in Seattle, Washington, are October 9-14.

To reach the Pacific coast Friday evening, October 8, it is necessary that the "White Ribbon Special" leave Chicago not later than Tuesday evening, October 5. On this schedule, there will be no sight-seeing stops on the going trip.

After much thought and careful consideration the National General Officers have decided upon the following official route:

The Chicago & Northwestern, Union Pacific, Oregon Short Line and O. W. R. & N. via Omaha, Cheyenne and Portland. This will enable delegates from the east and south and from the middle, western and southwestern states to join us at Chicago or en route. There is not a finer or more complete depot in the west than the Chicago & Northwestern. It is but one block from the Union station and has every convenience for travelers, so, unless preferred, it will be unnecessary to go to a hotel.

Many delegates will reach Chicago early Tuesday morning and will have the day in the city. A sight-seeing trip to Evanston will be planned for those wishing to visit Rest Cottage and National W. C. T. U. Headquarters. The trip will be easy as one can take the Chicago & Northwestern R. R. for the round trip, returning to the same station from which the "Special" leaves in the evening.

We shall also plan for a sight-seeing trip through Marshall Field's store, the largest in the world.

Delegates from the northern states—Minnesota, North Dakota, Montana, and (northern) Wisconsin—will find it to their advantage to make the trip over a northern route. Those who went to the Portland Convention will remember the splendid service given by the Northern Pacific Railroad on the going trip and this is a short and direct route to Seattle. Delegates not wishing to return by way of California can avail themselves of the $62.50 rate, going west on the "White Ribbon Special" and making the return trip through the St. Paul gateway.

A rate of $62.50 for the round trip from Chicago ($80 via California one way), and $50 from St. Paul has been named, with correspondingly low rates from points east and west of Chicago.

Later on, in THE UNION SIGNAL, there will appear advertisements and write-ups of the western trip, giving information to those who wish to visit the California Exposition and the scenic portions of California, Utah, Arizona and Colorado.

WARNING FROM SAN FRANCISCO

In view of the deplorable conditions now existing in San Francisco, the executive board of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Northern California begs to make the following statements:

1. There are at the present time hundreds of girls and women looking for employment, who can find none. Many of these girls and women are destitute, strangers in a strange city, having come to San Francisco with barely sufficient to pay their board and lodging for a few days.

2. Every day adds to the number of the unemployed and the conditions are growing constantly more serious. The Exposition authorities have ten applications for every position they have to fill.

3. The unemployed are from all grades and classes.

We ask that these statements be given all possible publicity in THE UNION SIGNAL and state W. C. T. U. papers, in the religious press, and in the newspapers generally throughout the country.

We also appeal for co-operation from all who read this article to assist in securing the desired publicity for this warning.

In view of the foregoing the executive board of the California Woman's Christian Temperance Union wishes to advise strongly that no girl or woman come to San Francisco to look for employment unless she has with her sufficient means to pay her living expenses while looking for work and to pay her return traveling expenses should suitable work not be found.

MEDAL CONTESTS

ADELIA E. CARMAN

A very opportune time for a medal contest program bearing directly on the liquor traffic is just prior to the spring and fall elections. We have chosen with much care and thought the following selections to be used in this pre-election contest, and most earnestly ask that there be concerted action concerning this important educational work. The recitations given are best suited to contestants whose ages are between sixteen and twenty. Those of more mature age may prefer the stronger orations contained in Number Twenty. The younger ones, or children, will probably make their selections from Number Seven or Number Fifteen. The contest should be held within two weeks of the spring election, which occurs April 13. We suggest as the date, the evening of the 9th for those for whom it is convenient. Let us all work together for an educational contest campaign.

PROGRAM

The W. C. T. U. contests are systematically training voters, and shaping public sentiment against us. They are making great headway. We should organize to fight against them.

WHOSE BUSINESS WAS STIMULATED?

A PROBLEM IN ECONOMICS

Now and then some one rises to declare that the saloon is a necessity from an economic standpoint: that it stimulates business, promotes industry and helps pay the taxes. Even good business men sometimes allow themselves to be fooled into this belief. Here is an interesting case from Indiana which presents a little problem in the economics of the saloon. Duplicate this incident in every community in which there is a licensed saloon and you have one of the fundamental economic considerations in the whole saloon problem. We would like to ask the groceryman in the case, whether or not the saloon helped his business.

A farmer and his wife drove up to the walk in front of a little country grocery and the woman alighted and went into the store to do some trading. As her husband drove off to the saloon he took with him the money that was to pay the bill. Once inside, the woman gave her order and the merchant put up the provisions in numerous packages and stacked them up on the counter. A goodly pile of groceries thus stood awaiting the arrival of the husband with the wagon. In the meantime the woman sat down to wait. An hour and more went by and then another hour. At last the team stopped outside and the husband sat in the wagon seat in the first stages of intoxication. The woman went outside to get from him the money to pay her bill but the drunken fellow had no money. It had all gone over the saloon bar during the last two hours.

The humiliated woman returned to the grocer and stated her case. He was naturally an accommodating fellow, but doing business on a small capital he found himself unable to extend credit to the family past the amount already due. A bill more than three months old of nearly $100, stood on his books and there seemed but little probability of ever being able to collect it. Consequently the poor woman returned to her husband, climbed into the wagon seat beside him, and taking up the lines, drove off home. No groceries, no money, a drunken husband, a humiliated wife. It may be a bit impertinent, but we would like to ask someone the question, "Whose business was stimulated?" Let us ask the grocer.

The grocery order which had to be put back into stock represented about fifteen dollars' worth of goods. Figuring on a ten per cent profit, the grocer's loss was one dollar and a half. Three months' interest on the unpaid bill at five per cent was another dollar and a quarter. It is evident that this grocer was out $2.75 on this family because of the presence of liquor in the community. Suppose it were true, as the liquor man says, that the saloons lower the taxes. That $2.75 would have paid something toward the increased burden. But this man was not the only farmer in that community whose earnings went over the bar of that crossroads saloon. Whose business was stimulated?

Let us ask the man himself who was driven home that night by his wife. The rest of the day he was unfit for work. The most of the next day was spent in bed sleeping off his stupor. It was the third day before he had risen again to normal efficiency. It was the plowing season and he was badly needed in the corn field. Let us ask the farmer whose business was stimulated. His credit was gone at the grocery because his money had gone to the saloon, and credit is one of the most valuable assets a man can have in these days. A man cannot borrow money at the bank when his grocery bills are three to six months behind, unless he pays an exorbitant rate of interest or mortgages valuable property. No one trusts him, not even the saloonkeeper. Let us ask that drinking man whose business was stimulated.

Let us ask the wife. The children went supperless to bed that night. The mother sat up late to repair clothing already worn past the point of respectability because no money could be had for new clothes. Was the dry goods business stimulated? The home was sadly in need of some new furnishings, the cook stove was badly cracked and almost unusable and two of the children sat on one chair at meal time. Was the hardware or the furniture business stimulated? The farm machinery was exposed to the weather because there were no sheds in which to house it. Was the lumberman's business stimulated? Ask that family whose business was stimulated.

A few years ago we were fighting the saloons on moral and humane grounds. Those trenches have been captured. The saloon business is an outlawed business in great sections of the country. We have captured the legal trenches in which a desperate stand was made. Now the saloon business is undertaking to intrench itself in the territory of "economic necessity," saying that the liquor business stimulates trade, promotes industry, defends personal liberty, etc. Whenever again we hear this argument let us ask the simple little question, "Whose business does it stimulate?" In these days of efficiency and economy, the saloon is making its last desperate stand. With the argument of economic necessity gone, its last great defense is shattered and it is a doomed thing. Keep on throwing this question at the saloon advocate, "Whose business is stimulated, whose industry promoted, whose taxes lowered, whose liberty defended? Whose?"

BEER ALWAYS AN INSIDIOUS POISON

T. D. CROTHERS, M. D., Hartford, Conn.

It is not true that beer is harmless because it contains so small a quantity of alcohol. The same amount in pure water would be far safer than in the form of beer.

Beer is a chemical combination of sugars, starches, extractive matters and yeast ferments, in a process of continuous change. This is a complex, chemical process which begins on the outside, and continues in the stomach.

The natural processes of waste and repair, in which food products are separated from the waste, are interfered with and checked. The cells for repair and building up are diminished, and the fatty and fibrinous matters are increased. Thus, in reality, the nutrition is diminished, and the beer drinker is really starved, as well as poisoned. He is starved because there are less food products prepared in the stomach for the needs of the body; he is poisoned because of the increased waste and new chemical agents that come from fermentation.

The activity of the kidneys and liver is greatly increased in overcoming this condition. The excess of fat and fibrin which follows is deposited over the body, around the heart and face, and gives the appearance of health and vigor. This is simply evidence of retained waste that cannot be thrown off, not of increased power.

Laboratory experiments show an enormous increase in the body waste thrown off through the bowels, kidneys and skin of beer drinkers, and even this is not sufficient to keep the body in its normal condition. In reality, the beer drinker takes into his stomach compounds of fermented matter which actually produce a species of intoxication. This is confirmed by the slowly diminished mental and physical activity, the sensory dullness of beer drinkers. All the normal processes of the body are disturbed. Sleep is intensified or diminished. Capacity for work, both physical and mental, is reduced steadily, and there is always low vitality. When hurt, recovery is slow and frequently injuries are fatal which would not prove so in the case of others. Added to this, there are delusions of health and vigor that laboratory experiments do not confirm. The poisons generated in the stomach are absorbed and make the person weaker.

> RESULT OF BEER DRINKING
> DR. HUGO HOPPE, Noted Nerve Specialist of Konigsberg, Germany
>
> Because the symptoms of chronic alcoholism appear more slowly, and are less readily observable in the heavy beer drinker than in the whisky drinker, the former is by far more frequently met than the latter. But thousands and tens of thousands of men who take their daily pint are rendered stupid, silly and dissolute by beer.

The boasted claims that beer is a food, and gives vigor and strength are contradicted by statistics. In Munich, Germany, where the largest quantity of beer is consumed, per capita, of any city, the mortality rate from heart and kidney diseases is double that of any other city. Everywhere this is confirmed. The beer drinker dies early from diseases of the heart and kidneys.

If beer had any food elements and were a tonic, exact measurements and studies of statistics would confirm it, but the evidence from these sources is entirely the opposite. The congested face, bloated body and dullness of body and mind are the best evidences of the poisoning and degenerative processes going on. There can be no conflict of opinions on this, because it can be measured and stated in mathematical terms, regardless of theories.

Alcohol absorbs the water from the cells and tissues, breaks up and diminishes their nutritive power, while beer creates new fermentive and chemical changes in the stomach. These processes are cumulative, not only destroying the balance between waste and repair, but adding immensely to the waste, which permanently disturbs and destroys the vigor and health of the body.

Beer is a most insidious poison because it produces other poisons, and starts new processes of degeneration that are unknown until the final collapse reveals them.

THE STRIKE AT ROCKVILLE

W. D. BROWNING, Seabright, Cal.

Rumor credited to Mollie Burke, the daughter of the Rockville quarry boss, the idea that finally developed into the organization of the B. B. B. Certain it was that it was Mollie's caustic wit that lashed Big Tim Burke, at the head of a committee of three quarry laborers, to go to the saloon where the latest outrage had been committed and entér a protest in the name of the B. B. B. I said an outrage had been committed and I reiterate the assertion, but it was an outrage that is committed so often, and in so many different cities and towns of this fair land of ours, that it seems trite in the telling.

A laborer in the quarry had fought himself free from the enslaving lust for drink, and had remained sober for nearly a year, and then succumbed to the invitation of friends to take just one glass of beer. The one, as is usually the case, was followed by another and when the poor fellow woke up the next morning his head was pillowed upon a pile of filth in the rear of the saloon, and his money belt, which had contained a little over one hundred dollars, was missing.

This was the case that caused Tim Burke and his companions, as representatives of the B. B. B., to call upon the saloon-keeper and nearly surprise that party into a fit by demanding that the stolen money be returned, and all of them being seasoned old topers, still further surprised him by refusing a drink while they talked matters over.

"There is nothing to talk over," said Big Tim. "Olaf Erickson had a hundred and eight dollars and some odd cents when he came into this place last evening; he didn't have a cent this morning. You may keep the eight dollars and the odd change, but as a committee of the B. B. B. we demand the hundred back inside of twenty-four hours." With this ultimatum, they departed.

The saloon-man took several drinks of his own stuff in an effort to decide just what to do. He certainly had no intention of giving back the money. A saloon-keeper give back the money he had drugged and robbed a man to get! Why whoever heard of such a thing? Didn't he pay the city and state and the United States a license fee to rob such chaps in one way or the other? The more drinks he took, the more of a joke the demand of the B. B. B. seemed to the saloon-keeper, and he finally reached the point where it seemed too good to keep to himself, so he called up the man higher up, the brewer, who supplied all the saloons of Rockville with their beer, and owned two-thirds of them. To him he told the demand of Big Tim Burke and his fellow B. B. B.'s.

"Ha, ha," laughed the brewer, "that's a rich one. They want you to give the chap his money back, hey? Why didn't you send them to the police?" As it was a general custom of the Rockville police force, when anyone made a complaint of being robbed by a saloon-keeper, to arrest the victim of the robbery, both considered this suggestion a great joke and laughed heartily. "Say, who or what is the B. B. B.?" asked the brewery man. "Search me," replied the saloon-keeper. "Near as I can learn it's some of the quarry workers who have organized to take care of themselves. Big Tim Burke seems to be at the head of it, but I imagine it's his daughter, Mollie, that's back of the whole scheme." "I don't like that," said the brewery man, uneasily. "Since the women have got the vote in this state they are causing us all kinds of trouble, and that Mollie Burke is as smart as a steeltrap and awfully liked by her father's men; still I don't think you need fear any organization of drinking men, for they never stick together, and Big Tim himself would step over his mother's dead body to get his morning drink. He's just bluffing." "That's the way I sized it up," said the saloon-keeper and hung up the receiver.

The conversation between the two men took place over what is called a ten party line, and at the time it took place Tim Burke happened to be trying to get a contractor who had ordered some crushed rock, and found that someone else was on the line. From the first sentence he recognized the saloon-keeper's voice and—well, they say that listeners never hear any good of themselves, and you will have to agree with me that the conversation I have just recorded was not very flattering to the quarry foreman. To say that Tim Burke was mad would be putting it mildly. As soon as he had cooled down enough to speak he told his daughter and the assembled boarders the gist of the conversation he had thus accidentally overheard; and although he withheld the most humiliating allusions to himself, he told them enough to cause them to be almost as angry at the saloon-keeper and brewer as he was. Indeed, some of them advocated wrecking that particular saloon without further parley, but Mollie Burke counseled another course.

"You all agreed to go on a meat strike last spring, when meat was so high, and you stuck to it until the butchers reduced their prices," she said, "so why not go on a whisky strike until you bring the saloon-keepers to terms?" The men were enthusiastically in favor of her suggestion. "Good," they cried, "we will not buy a cent's worth of whisky or beer at that saloon until Olaf Erickson's stolen hundred dollars are returned to him. We will show that saloon-keeper a thing or two." But here again Mollie Burke interposed. "If you strike against the one saloon but patronize the others you won't touch the brewer," she insisted, "and he is the real party responsible for this and a score of similar cases of robbery in Rockville, for if he did not uphold the saloon-keepers in such acts they would not dare commit them." In this manner the shrewd little woman argued until, in a town composed almost entirely of men who drank more or less, was inaugurated a strike and boycott as unique and at the same time as productive of as little real harm as any strike that was ever organized since the world began.

There were no idle men and hungry families, and no property was destroyed, but every hour that the saloons were open, the streets were patrolled by alert pickets who warned all comers that the saloons of Rockville were unfair to their customers, and should not be patronized. So generally was the warning heeded that the town practically went dry from the moment the strike was declared.

The saloon-keepers of Rockville and their backer, the brewery owner, laughed at the strike and scoffed at the idea of Big Tim Burke and the rest of the quarry laborers being able to do without their drinks for any length of time. "Wait until Saturday night," they prophesied; "just wait until the men get a week's pay in their pockets and you will see where the strike will end." But Saturday night came and except for a doubling of the force of pickets there was no change in the situation, and the following Sunday was the most quiet and orderly one that Rockville had experienced within the memory of the oldest inhabitants. Laborers' families, who any other Sunday would have been glad to have had liver, enjoyed beefsteak for breakfast. And there were a number of other things that the quarry laborers found they were able to purchase for their families—a new dress, for instance, a pair of shoes, or a hat—and even the moderate drinkers were surprised at the difference the strike made in the amount of their spending money.

A reporter for a city paper got an inkling of the situation, and interviewed Big Tim Burke, and talked with some of the wives and sweethearts of the strikers, and from the material thus gained, published an article in the city paper in which he commended the strike as one of the most beneficial on record, and jokingly advised that it be declared statewide and permanent. But this article, though well intended, indirectly caused the ending of the strike, for the liquor dealers' association, alarmed at a prominent publication advocating a course so detrimental to their interests, at once advised the saloon-keepers of Rockville and the brewer who backed them, to grant the strikers any reasonable thing they should ask, but to end at once this unusual form of strike. So the saloon-keeper who had robbed Olaf Erickson gave the man back his money, the saloon-keepers set up free drinks, and things seemingly went back to the state they had been in before the strike. I say they seemingly went back, but from that time on there was an ever active and growing discontent among the inhabitants of Rockville against the saloons that took such a heavy toll from them in the comforts and necessities of life. Women and children remembered the beefsteak, the new shoes, the hats they had when the strike against the saloons was in force, and single men looked at a necktie, or some other little bit of finery, and said, "Yes, I bought that when we were on the strike against the saloons. Wish we would strike again."

The fall election held that year saw the first serious opposition to the saloon element that had ever shown itself in Rockville—an opposition feeble enough at first, but fostered by the votes and work of Mollie Burke and her associates until it grew strong enough to finally sweep Rockville into the dry column.

"It was those B. B. B.'s that started the whole thing," mournfully asserted one of the defeated ones, as he sat on the curbstone outside of his closed saloon. "What does their B. B. B. button stand for, anyway?" asked another. "Benevolent Brotherhood of Boozefighters," answered a third. At first the B. B. B.'s were composed entirely of drinking men who were tired of being robbed and arrested by the police if they dared make a complaint. Most of the early B. B. B.'s fought drink in the old fashioned way—tried to drink it all up—but they have some women members now who have set the old timers to fighting drink with their votes. That's the way they knocked out the saloons of Rockville, and no one has yet seen the end of their work.

IT'S A SHORT WAY TO PROHIBITION

By MRS. W. F. CRAFTS

(Tune: "Tipperary.")

It's a short way to prohibition;
It's the right way to go.
It's a sure way to bring salvation
To the greatest land I know.
Let's all stick together;
Let this be our cry:
It's a short, short way to prohibition
And our Nation will go dry.

PASSING OF THE SALOON IN IOWA

Special Correspondence

February 12, the birthday of the "Great Emancipator," will go down in history as "Emancipation" day in Iowa. The senate started the movement that promises not only to free the state from saloons, but also from the bondage which forbids women the right of suffrage at the polls. In one day three of the most important measures ever before an Iowa assembly passed the senate, namely, a constitutional prohibition amendment, a woman suffrage amendment, and bill to repeal the mulct law and close all saloons in the state January 1, 1916. The house is favorable to all these measures, Governor Clarke is ready and eager to sign them, and the only doubt among the drys was with the senate. The mid-year executive was in session Feb. 11, and most of the women remained to witness the events. With tears in their eyes and with throbbing hearts they listened to the roll call of the senate. God grant that a new day has dawned for Iowa! The mid-year executive was well attended and among the many plans for future work were recommendations for a poster day, May 1, for issuing year book, for advertising meetings, for distributing literature, for securing members by the "win one" card pledges. "Money Getting, Money Paying and Money Giving" was ably presented by the state treasurer, Mrs. Lucile W. Shadle. Those who "have stayed by the stuff" these many years are going on with a new note of rejoicing. Iowa is surely going dry.

GOVERNOR ALEXANDER SPEAKS AT IDAHO'S MID-YEAR EXECUTIVE

Special Correspondence

The best mid-year executive ever held in Southern Idaho took place at Boise, February 9-10. Through the splendid plans of the state president, Mrs. Nettie R. Chipp, and her helpers, there were almost as many delegates present as at the annual convention. Enthusiasm marked every session from the opening to the closing mass meeting.

No other state can boast of a prohibition Jewish governor. He paid such a high tribute to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in his welcome address that applause greeted him at the close of every sentence. Governor Moses Alexander will be heard from more than once while he is the chief executive of the "gem state." The banquet given the first night was most unique and it would be well for other states to follow the plan which originated with Mrs. Chipp. The toasts were on "The Trial of John Barleycorn," and noted men of the state, among them Idaho's splendid new Congressman, Hon. Robert McCracken, pronounced John Barleycorn a natural criminal, a perjurer, a thief and a murderer; the source of disease and sickness; a menace to the home, and finally the judge was asked to pronounce the sentence. The judge was Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard, president of the Utah W. C. T. U., the speaker of the occasion, who in no uncertain terms sentenced him to eternal oblivion in the regions of darkness from whence he came. The toastmistress, Mrs. Clara Gish Work, is trying to put this trial into the form of a play, which later can be used by other unions. The two hundred guests present at the banquet pronounced it the greatest thing ever witnessed in Boise. While the executive was in session the lower house of the legislature passed a statutory prohibition measure and before this article is published, it may have passed the senate and have been signed by the governor.

Mrs. Shepard spent ten days in our state speaking at all the larger points, and everywhere enthusiastic crowds listened to her. At Pocatello, the largest audience in the history of the city greeted her.

GREATEST CONSTRUCTIVE LEGISLATION EVER ENACTED, SAYS GOVERNOR WITHYCOMBE

The measure providing for the enforcement of the constitutional prohibition amendment which passed the lower house of the Oregon legislature, on February 17, has been passed by the senate by a vote of 29 to 1. In signing the bill, Governor Withycombe declared it to be the greatest constructive legislation ever enacted in Oregon and pledged his office to a strict enforcement of its provisions. Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, president of the Oregon W. C. T. U., was named by the speaker of the house as a special messenger to carry the bill from the house to the senate and to the governor for his signature.

In his inaugural message to the state legislature, Governor Withycombe urged the enactment of anti-liquor legislation which would insure the successful enforcement of the prohibitory law, and asked a liberal appropriation to aid in the work.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS IN MICHIGAN

MRS. E. L. CALKINS, President Michigan W. C. T. U.

A bill formulated after the Iowa red light injunction law has been introduced in the Michigan legislature. Two years ago such a bill was presented and the judiciary committee refused to report it out, saying the state had laws that covered every point in it. This has been found to be a mistake and there is a good prospect of the passage of the measure.

A bill will be introduced to raise the age of consent to eighteen years. It has been prepared and will be championed by Representative Moore of Lenawee county.

The anti-cigaret law absolutely prohibiting the sale of cigarets to minors, and making it a misdemeanor for a minor to smoke a cigaret or for any person to permit a minor to smoke a cigaret on his or her premises, has been a law in Michigan for six years. It was declared unconstitutional a few weeks ago by the supreme court because of a flaw in the title but passed the senate on February 11 without one dissenting vote.

Representative Flowers of Detroit has introduced a bill to control elections that seems to meet with almost universal approval. If it becomes a law it will prevent corrupt politicians from thwarting the will of the people as they did in 1887 in the statewide prohibition election, and again in the election of 1912 when no fair-minded person doubts that had the votes been honestly counted, the women of Michigan would have had the ballot.

VERMONT MAY ABOLISH LICENSE

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, vice-president-at-large of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, spoke recently at Montpelier, Vermont, at a public hearing in behalf of prohibition legislation. Vermont formerly had a prohibition law, but twelve years ago by a referendum a new law was adopted which contained local option and high license features. Under the present law every town must vote upon the question every year, and while a good many voted for license during the first few years, the number has been steadily growing less until last year only twenty towns voted for license and there were saloons in only seventeen. They cannot amend their constitution until 1923, but the proposed bill seeks a referendum on the question of abolishing the high license and local option privileges of the present law.

GOVERNOR AND MRS. CAPPER GIVE RECEPTION TO KANSAS W. C. T. U. EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

The members of the executive committee of the Kansas W. C. T. U. were the guests of honor at a reception given by Governor and Mrs. Arthur Capper, at their home in Topeka, on February 10.

Receiving with the governor and his wife were the officers of the state W. C. T. U., the district presidents and the president of the local union of Topeka.

In an address of welcome, Governor Capper referred enthusiastically to the legislative work of the W. C. T. U., and pledged his support to the measures they are "mothering." Mrs. Lillian M. Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U., spoke in commendation of the efforts of the officials of the city of Topeka in enforcing the prohibitory law. A program of choice musical selections, in charge of Mrs. Maud Mary Cline, was one of the delightful features of the evening. About three hundred people attended the reception.

The District of Columbia W. C. T. U. is working for the appointment of a special teacher in Scientific Temperance Instruction in the public schools. The matter is in charge of a committee, consisting of Mrs. Emma S. Shelton, president of the District W. C. T. U., Mrs. Howard, state S. T. I. superintendent, Mrs. Blaine and Mrs. Henry, who have appeared before the committee on Public Schools in the Board of Trade. On presentation of the plan by Mrs. Shelton, to the District federation of Women's Clubs, it received hearty endorsement.

Kentucky white ribboners are rejoicing in the organization of sixteen new unions since January 1. Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., is now in western Kentucky on an organizing trip. Although the roads and weather have been unfavorable she is having splendid success.

THE DOCTOR'S WIFE

Agrees With Him About Food

A trained nurse says: "In the practice of my profession I have found so many points in favor of Grape-Nuts food that I unhesitatingly recommend it to all my patients.

"It is delicate and pleasing to the palate (an essential in food for the sick) and can be adapted to all ages, being softened with milk or cream for babies or the aged when deficiency of teeth renders mastication impossible. For fever patients or those on liquid diet I find Grape-Nuts and albumen water very nourishing and refreshing.

"This recipe is my own idea and is made as follows: Soak a teaspoonful of Grape-Nuts in a glass of water for an hour, strain and serve with the beaten white of an egg and a spoonful of fruit juice for flavoring. This affords a great deal of nourishment that even the weakest stomach can assimilate without any distress.

"My husband is a physician and he uses Grape-Nuts himself and orders it many times for his patients.

"Personally I regard a dish of Grape-Nuts with fresh or stewed fruit as the ideal breakfast for anyone—well or sick."

In stomach trouble, nervous prostration, etc., a 10-day trial of Grape-Nuts will usually work wonders toward nourishing and rebuilding and in this way end the trouble. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Look in pkgs. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

JUBILEE SONG

MRS. ANTOINETTE A. HAWLEY

Tune: "Tipperary"

(Other prohibition states will doubtless seize upon this song as one adaptable to their own use as fellow victors.)

When the temperance forces said, "We surely must unite,
For we are determined to make Colorado white," Quick the people answered: "We will help you win the day,
And fight for prohibition," and now this is what they say:

CHORUS:
Oh, it's Glory! Hallelujah! Colorado's gone dry;
Oh, sing Glory! Hallelujah! for a mighty vote told why.
So good-bye, Mr. Brewer; farewell, whisky, too;
In the great wide state we love so dearly
There's NO PLACE for YOU.

Lawyers, doctors, business men came trooping into line,
Side by side with regiments of preachers brave and fine;
While the boys and girls deployed with caps and pennants bright,
And shouted, "VOTE for US," and so they sing with us tonight:

CHORUS:
Oh, it's Glory! Hallelujah, etc.

PROSPERITY COMES WITH PROHIBITION IN ARIZONA

The effects of the enforcement of the prohibition law are being felt in Yuma in many ways. Since the law went into effect there has not been a single arrest for drunkenness. The police court, which usually had a large grist of drunk and disorderly cases to handle each morning, has not had such cases since the first of the year. It is noticeable that in the evenings there are more men on the street with their wives than there were before the law went into effect. Men who used to have engagements down town almost seven evenings a week at the saloons, now find their favorite resorts closed and are seeking other amusements that their wives can share with them.

Trade of Every Kind Shows Good Effects

One of the first effects felt was noted in the bakery trade. The Clark bakery was sold out of bread the first Saturday of the new year and was forced to bake an extra quantity at the next baking. Since then the demand for bakery goods has increased to an unusual extent and one bakery has been obliged to increase its force in the bake shop.

The soda fountains report an increased demand for their drinks. One of the attendants at J. Homer Smith's stated that there had been a decided increase in trade. The demand for the mixed soda drinks has greatly increased. The proprietor of one of the leading markets stated that he had very quickly noted an increased demand for meats and that his cash sales showed an increase, particularly from a class of trade that had not been in the habit of buying much meat.

The restaurants also report better business. The cashier in one of the popular Main street restaurants said that in the past ten days more meals had been served than heretofore, and that the dinner hour had been prolonged. The checks show an increase in the amount of money spent per meal. Many men who before the new law went into effect were eating twenty cent meals now eat thirty-five cents worth or better. Many who considered a cup of coffee and a piece of pie a meal now buy more substantial food.

Phoenix and Tucson Also Prosper.

Very much the same conditions are reported from Phoenix and Tucson. The bakeries there report a greatly increased sale of bread. The city chain gangs in those two cities have ceased to exist and chain gang officers have been given something else to do. One of the clothing merchants reports an increase in his sales, and in discussing the subject he said that he was doing an unusual amount of business for this season, much better than he did a year before. Men are buying more and better clothes. On the night of January 8, pay day with the reclamation service boys, the men were seen in the various clothing and furnishing and shoe stores stocking up with wearables, whereas on the evening of the previous pay day a month before the saloons were crowded until closing time and the following morning there were a large number of cases in court, and in one instance a man was killed while wandering through the railroad yards in a befuddled condition caused by the use of liquor.

The picture shows have been crowded. This is partly accounted for by the fact that many who had been in the habit of spending their evenings in the saloons are looking for other amusements.

Last, but not least, there is a better attendance at the churches. Men have commenced to feel that they have overlooked this duty taught them in their childhood.

PLANS FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION FOR MARCH

Each local union is to hold a public meeting in March; an offering to be taken for the Campaign Fund, this money to be sent through regular channels to the state W. C. T. U. treasurer, who shall transmit one-half to the National treasurer, this fund to be known in both state and National W. C. T. U. as the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund. Young People's Branches are urged to have a share in the campaign adapting to their work plans proposed for the W. C. T. U. and enlisting other young people to become active and intelligent workers.

Enlist the Loyal Temperance Legion and all children as Young Campaigners for Prohibition and give them a part in public meetings.

Send to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., for the new Prohibition Map (price, 15 cents each; two for 25 cents) to display at March prohibition meetings as proof of the progress toward nationwide prohibition.

Envelopes for subscriptions to the Lillian Stevens Campaign fund have been prepared by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. These envelopes are to be furnished to the states at cost, to be sent by them free to every local union agreeing to place them in the hands of all members and as many others as possible, with the suggestion and hope that in March every local union will send a contribution to this Fund, averaging ten cents per member. This money should be sent through the regular W. C. T. U. channels.

The envelope form of pledge is as follows:

PATRIOTIC OFFERING
WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
THE LILLIAN STEVENS CAMPAIGN FUND (STATE AND NATIONAL)
My Offering is $.....
Cash or Pledged
Indicated by X
Name .....
Address .....

Pledges should be paid to W. C. T. U. treasurer within thirty days. Contributors of one dollar or more will receive for one year, the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL.

The revised leaflet descriptive of the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund can be secured at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and should be widely distributed.

Will You Come Home Sober, Papa?

A NEW TEMPERANCE SONG BY REV. J. C. HARRISON

of the ALABAMA CONFERENCE. This is one of the best Temperance songs written in years. Its beautiful story of a young girl's plea to her father is really a Temperance sermon, while its melody is one of the sweetest ever written. Ask your music dealer for it, or send 10c to the publisher. P. J Howley Music Co., 102 West 42nd Street, New York. Special rates on quantities to Societies or Temperance Organizations.

ALCOHOL AND INSANITY

The Fallacy of "Facts vs. Fanaticism"

MRS. MARTHA M. ALLEN, Superintendent of Medical Temperance for the World's and National W. C. T. U., Forest Hills, L. I., N. Y.

The liquor traffic has found a new defender in Dr. Ralph Reed of Cincinnati, a medical man without fame or notoriety until last October, when he wrote an article for the Lancet-Clinic on "Facts vs. Fanaticism." This article deals largely with the question of the effect of alcohol in causing mental disease, and is so pleasing a presentation of the innocence of alcoholic drinks that the liquor men have had it published in pamphlet form, and are sending it over the country, especially to physicians.

Dr. Reed opens his defense of drink by giving the familiar quotation from Sir Andrew Clark, physician to Queen Victoria, in regard to the ravages of drink to be observed on every hand in hospitals and asylums. This quotation he ascribes to "a prohibition advocate," and says, "Probably he has never seen the inside of an asylum." This statement is really ludicrous as applied to a great medical man such as Sir Andrew Clark and stamps Dr. Reed as ignorant of some "Facts" to begin with. He goes on to declare that statistics as to alcohol and insanity as given out by asylums are "worthless," even "rotten." After this thrust at the reliability of statistics which prove that alcohol is a causative factor in the production of mental disease, he proceeds to give over a page of statistics from his own private practice, and he actually seems to expect that readers will believe his unverified lists as compared with the established records of asylums! His statistics give a review of two hundred cases of mental and nervous disease, and, he says, "In only one of these can it be said that alcohol was the sole and primary cause of the disease. In four cases it acted as a secondary cause. * * * * We thus find that from the whole two hundred cases in only five cases was alcohol an important factor. * * * * The most interesting fact with regard to this list is not the small incidence of drinkers, but the large incidence of total abstainers. * * * * We are, therefore, as well, if not more, justified in making the statement that total abstinence predisposes to nervous and mental diseases than we are that the moderate or temperate or occasional consumption of alcoholic stimulants predisposes to nervous and mental diseases."

In a later issue of the Lancet-Clinic Dr. Reed answers a physician who accuses him of complicity with the liquor traffic by saying: "I sometimes feel that the brewers and saloon-keepers might have expressed their appreciation of my efforts by sending me a check for, say, $500. * * * * My opinions and the result of my experience are for sale. In fact, my opinion is purchased by every patient who enters my office." This shows the character of the man who is trying to sweep back the rising tide of medical opinion against strong drink. The liquor traffic is as surely wasting time and energy in circulating the Reed pamphlet as was the old woman who took a broom to drive back the ocean waves that threatened to engulf her.

Yet this pamphlet should not be entirely ignored, and it would be wise for temperance workers to publish in local papers the resolutions against alcohol passed in July, 1914, by the nerve specialists and insanity experts of America at their annual meeting held in Chicago, in which the statement is made that it has been clearly established that alcohol when taken into the system acts as a definite poison to the brain, etc. (These resolutions are in leaflet form and can be obtained from National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., or from Mrs. Allen, at 25 cents per 100.)

The "rotten" statistics of which Dr. Ralph Reed complains are accepted as reliable by the State Charities Aid Association of New York in whose pamphlet on "Why Should Any One Go Insane?" it is said, "*Fully 30 per cent of the men and 10 per cent of the women admitted to the state hospitals are suffering from conditions due directly or indirectly to alcohol. * * * * A long series of careful tests performed by eminent authorities showed that even small quantities of alcohol may lower the mental capacity.*"

The testimony against alcohol as a producer of insanity is strong and comes from the foremost students of mental disease everywhere.

Dr. Frederic Peterson, professor of psychiatry in Columbia University, New York, said in an address before the New York state Conference of Charities and Correction: "Alcohol is the chief poison factor in the production of insanity. Twenty per cent of all the insane in the United States owe their condition to alcoholic poison."

Dr. Forbes Winslow, the great English authority on lunacy, says: "*The true causes of insanity are the vices of civilization. * * * * First, drink; second, cigarets. * * * ."

The English Commissioners of Lunacy, in a report issued in 1909, state that personal intemperance was responsible for 23.3 per cent of the male insane cases, and 8.9 per cent of the female cases in England and Wales during the preceding year.

Dr. F. W. Mott, pathologist to the London (England) county asylums, says in "Alcohol and Insanity": "A large proportion of the recoverable cases admitted to the London county asylums are drink cases, and of these 50 per cent are discharged within three weeks to six months of admission. They often return again in a short time, and some cases termed 'recurrent mania' are discharged and re-admitted many times."

Dr. Alfred Gordon, professor of mental diseases in Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, gives the same invitation to the public to visit asylums and prisons to view the results of alcoholic indulgence as is complained of by Dr. Ralph Reed as the invitation of one "who never saw the inside of an asylum." Dr. Gordon says in an article on "Alcoholic Insanities" in the Journal of the American Medical Association, 1907: "In a study based upon 437 cases I was able to determine the fact that chronic alcoholism leads to a gradually developing feebleness, viz., dementia." Elsewhere he says: "The patient becomes depressed, his memory becomes clouded. The realization of his mental impotence leads him to delusive ideas which become intensified by hallucinatory images, and criminal tendencies are not infrequently observed. * * * * Certain individuals spend a considerable part of their existence between the saloon and the insane asylum."

Dr. M. S. Gregory, an alienist of Bellevue Hospital, New York, says in a report of that institution: "In our annual admissions to Bellevue Hospital of over 3,000 patients in the wards for mental diseases more than 10 per cent were suffering from insanities due directly to alcohol, and in more than 40 per cent alcohol had played a most important part in the causation of the insanity. It seems to me that it would be the greatest aid to humanity if measures might be taken to reduce the consumption of this poison to a minimum."

Dr. J. N. Hurty, secretary of the Indiana state board of health, said in an address before the Medical Society of Kentucky in 1914: "Insanity and crime trail after alcohol and in its wake come ill health and disease. A high authority says 25 per cent of insanity is due to syphilis; 10 per cent is due to accident; 40 per cent is hereditary, and 25 per cent is due to alcohol. * * * * For every dollar of revenue derived from alcoholic beverages two dollars of public cost for crime, insanity and delinquency is endured."

CAMPAIGN EDITION

The president of the Colorado W. C. T. U. echoes the thought of many other state presidents, and especially those who found the Campaign Edition of inestimable value in their campaigns for statewide prohibition, when she says: "The information contained in the Campaign Edition is sufficient to win for prohibition the most prejudiced person and to enable anyone to make a speech."

The information in the Campaign Edition is sought by ministers, lawyers, and business men, as it contains in a nutshell statistics and temperance news that would take days of valuable time to secure. Let us help these busy people to conserve their time by presenting to them a copy of the Campaign Edition and securing them as subscribers.

For only twenty-five cents, the subscription price, you can give to each of your friends each month a fund of information in most concise form.

ALCOHOL AND INSANITY

In a recent report on the insane in the United States (bureau of the census, Department of Commerce) it is stated that approximately one person out of every five hundred in 1910 was an inmate of an insane asylum. In commenting upon this report the Journal of the American Medical Association (January 30, 1915) said editorially: "Alcohol and syphilis again established their superiority as man's most dangerous allied foes."

The report of the principal lunatic asylum of Paris sent out in 1912 gave figures showing 47 per cent of insanity among men was caused by drink and 20 per cent of that among women. The report says: "*Most of these unfortunates are psychopaths descended from other alcoholics. * * * * Alcoholism supplies the men's side of the Paris asylums with three-quarters of their population.*"

Kraepelin, the great German authority upon alcohol, says that this poison stands first as a cause of insanity.

These are but a few out of multitudes of statements from leading brain specialists as to the evil effects of alcohol upon the mental structure. The liquor traffic will need to find something stronger than the article by Dr. Ralph Reed to overthrow the mass of evidence which asylums have collected relative to alcohol and insanity.

Three years ago a physician wrote to me as follows: "The American Distillers' Association, in co-operation with the Brewers' Association, is ever upon the alert when danger appears from any point. A heavy per cent of the medical students of today is coming from the distillery and the brewery. These young men are sent to these institutions for a purpose." This view is hardly correct as the outspoken defenders of alcohol among physicians are not numerous. It is well to keep in mind, however, that nearly half of those who signed a pro-alcohol medical manifesto in England a few years ago were doctors who owned stock in breweries or distilleries. There are doctors and doctors, and the best of them are leading in the fight against strong drink.

GOOD CAMPAIGN INVESTMENT

MRS. ADRIANNA HUNGERFORD, President Colorado W. C. T. U.

To win people, communities, states or nations for prohibition every worker must have the larger vision and the truth on her lips, so others will desire to help make the vision a reality. THE UNION SIGNAL, for one dollar a year, becomes a weekly messenger bringing the needed verified, up-to-date facts about the great world movement. In our campaign, we found no other literature equal to THE UNION SIGNAL. It was invaluable to reenforce arguments of speakers and in winning votes of readers. It is a favorite saying that "The information contained in the Campaign Edition is sufficient to win for prohibition the most prejudiced person and to enable any one to make a speech."

There are many practical and desirable ways in which to extend the influence of THE UNION SIGNAL. If every W. C. T. U. woman would blue-pencil the pronouncements of various denominations on the liquor problem and send to doubtful leaders in the respective home societies and would use the statements of leading officials with those in similar positions, not forgetting marked copies for members of Congress and others who are quoted, there would be increased knowledge of the cause and respect for the organization.

State W. C. T. U. money is well invested when it sends THE UNION SIGNAL to colleges, universities and public institutions. Teachers find the clippings pertaining to the essay subjects most helpful material. These should be arranged in envelopes or on cardboard.

Every state representative of the National papers should have the active cooperation of her constituents in securing at least one $25 prize, and this invested in one hundred subscriptions for the Campaign edition to be sent to prominent men and women, including judges, attorneys, leading ministers and legislators in every section of the state, would be a great influence for the cause, and make the Woman's Christian Temperance Union more popular.

OF INTEREST TO WAGE-EARNERS

No. 1

Wage-earners employed: In the liquor industry, 62,920; in the bread and clothing industry, 492,655.

Wages paid: In the liquor industry, $45,252,000; in the bread and clothing industry, $244,196,000.

Cost of raw materials: For intoxicating liquor, $139,199,000; for bread and clothing, $744,337,000.

The people of the United States spend $2,000,000,000 annually for liquor. It requires more men to sell bread and clothing worth that amount than it does to sell $2,000,000,000 worth of beer and whisky.

No. 2

WHAT EVERY MERCHANT KNOWS

In proportion as a man spends his earnings for clothing, household necessities, homes and land, he is a profitable customer to the merchant and the farmer, and a good tenant to the landlord.

In proportion as a man spends his earnings for drink he is an unprofitable customer to the grocer, the tailor, the shoemaker, the farmer, and a poor tenant to the landlord.

The liquor traffic is a destructive industry and all capital put into it is capital at war with the capital employed in constructive industries.

OF INTEREST TO BANKERS

Maine's bank commissioner reported in 1914 that the total assets of the banks, trust companies and building and loan associations of the state amounted to $244,000,000, or $328.68 per capita.

In Kansas the bank deposits alone have increased in ten years from $100,000,000 to $220,000,000. They are now $130 per capita.

North Dakota's bank deposits increased from $9,109,000 in 1898 to $90,321,000 in 1913, or 1,000 per cent —a per capita deposit of $150.

North Carolina in 1908, the last year of the saloons, had 375 banks with deposits aggregating $53,894,519. After four years of prohibition there were 461 banks with aggregate deposits of $98,799,645.

In Tennessee under prohibition the average increase in bank deposits is 114 per cent.

Other prohibition states show gains proportionate to the length of time the prohibitory law has been in effect.

No. 5

OF INTEREST TO TAXPAYERS

There is greater increase in the valuation of property under prohibition than under license. This means less tax rate because there is more property to tax.

Maine in ten years increased its taxable property more than $11,000,000 a year.

In Kansas there has been an increase of $120,000,000 every year for ten years. In 1880 under license the tax rate was 5.5 mills on the dollar; in 1914, after 33 years of prohibition, it had been reduced to 1.2 mills.

In North Carolina under prohibition the average increase has been over $54,000,000 annually.

In Georgia in 1914, after six years of prohibition, the comptroller general announced an appreciable reduction in the tax rate.

Other prohibition states, also dry cities and towns, testify to remarkable gains in taxable values and to consequent decrease in tax rates.

Latest Legislative Victories for Prohibition and Suffrage

IOWA

On February 25, Governor Clarke of Iowa signed the mulct law repeal bill, passed the previous week by the legislature, restoring to the state on January 1, 1916, statutory prohibition. The bill providing for a prohibition amendment to the constitution has also received the governor's signature.

IDAHO

On February 25 the senate of the Idaho legislature passed the measure for statutory prohibition which had already received favorable action in the house. It has been signed by the governor and goes into effect January 1, 1916.

SOUTH DAKOTA

On February 25, a resolution for statewide prohibition was passed by the senate of the South Dakota legislature. The resolution calls for a submission to the vote of the people at the next general election. The house passed, by a vote of 57 to 30, a resolution for a constitutional equal suffrage amendment.

MINNESOTA

Both houses of the legislature have passed the county option bill, and it has received the signature of the governor.

UTAH

On March 1, by a vote of forty-four to five, the lower house of the Utah legislature passed a statewide prohibition measure to become effective July 1, 1916. The senate had already taken favorable action and the measure now awaits the signature of the governor.

COMMISSION VISITS WASHINGTON WITH HOPE OF HAVING LIQUOR ADVERTISEMENTS EXCLUDED FROM MAILS—INVESTIGATION OF DISTRICT EXCISE BOARD—CHILDREN PRESENT PEACE PETITION—DISTRICT DONATION WEEK—450 YOUNG MEN TAKE TOTAL ABSTINENCE PLEDGE—EMPLOYMENT PROBLEM DISCUSSED BY MONDAY EVENING CLUB

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, Nat'l W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Word has just been received from Captain Hobson to the effect that a commission from Alabama has been in Washington recently for the purpose of interviewing Congressmen from Alabama and the Postmaster General with the hope of having excluded from the mails all liquor literature in the way of advertisements, etc. Liquor advertisements have already been excluded from the newspapers of Alabama.

With the prospect of an early adjournment, Congress is working far into the night over appropriation bills. Only four minutes were required to pass the pension bill, providing $164,000,000. Appropriations for national defense have occupied the attention of both Houses of Congress. The Senate discussed until late Saturday night the Army Appropriation bill, while the House continued the debate upon the fortifications bill. Increase for submarines and aviatiou is proposed by the sub-committee of the Senate naval committee, an amendment including a million for aviation.

Investigate District Excise Board

The Senate committee appointed to investigate the excise board of the District, is holding its sessions, and it has been found out, among other things, that no investigation by the excise board of places where licenses have been granted has been made since November. 1914, nor has attention to protests been paid since last November. The committee, headed by Senator Sheppard, and with Jones of Washington, author of the Jones-Works bill, and Thompson of Kansas as members, will leave no stone unturned to bring out all facts for or against the excise board.

Children Present Peace Petition

Twelve little girls of the Washington public schools presented to Secretary of State Bryan this week a two-and-one-half-mile protest from 350,000 children of the United States, scattered over forty-five states, against the continuance of the European conflict, and a plea to crowned heads of the countries at war to declare an armistice, and submit to the Hague their troubles involved in the present war. Secretary Bryan in his office in the State Department, where peace and arbitration have been negotiated, where the seals have been affixed binding the United States to submit to arbitration any international dispute in which it shall be involved, received the petitions, which came in rolls of several thousand names each, and deposited them on the desk where peace treaties have been signed and where more may be signed. The petitions were then taken to the big state reception room, where they were piled high on the tables, to become a part of the official archives of the State Department.

A copy of the petition is to be sent to the diplomatic representatives in this city of the nations at war, and they are to be informed, and are in turn expected to inform their governments, of the receipt of the petition and the fact there is on file at the American State Department such a petition.

District Donation Week

Flowers from the White House, the gift of Miss Margaret Wilson, tied into little boutonnieres with red, white and blue ribbon, are being sold in the lobbies of all the theaters as a feature of the District donation week effort for the relief of the endorsed charities. There is a peculiar heart interest in the White House contribution, for it continues a practice of Mrs. Wilson of sending large quantities of the choicest White House flowers to the charitable institutions in which she took sympathetic interest. It is in memory of her mother's love for the poor and needy that Miss Wilson has supplied the flowers to be sold for the fund that is being raised to care for all the needy of the national capital.

The leading florists of Washington have also contributed flowers for sale in some of the theaters, and this is the outstanding feature of the clubwomen's effort, led by Mrs. Ellis Logan, president of the District Federation of Women's Clubs, to provide for the poor. Mrs. Logan has had a ready response to the appeal for the support of the endorsed charities of the capital. Several sugar barrels full of groceries, vegetables and provisions were contributed by patrons of the Center market for the benefit of the Central Mission. This was the result of the "community barrel" set up on the north side of the market, all the contributions to which on each day during the "district donation week" are turned over to some charity that is feeding the hungry of the city.

Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher and Mrs. Emma S. Shelton were members of the executive committee, representing the W. C. T. U. of the District.

Speaker of House Preaches on Life of Washington

Speaker Champ Clark preached a sermon on the life of Washington to the congregation of the Vermont Avenue Memorial Christian Church last Sunday, and told his audience that patriotism, next to reverence for God, is the highest of virtues. The best way to learn patriotism, the Speaker said, is to study the lives of the wise and mighty men who gave this country for the people to love.

The Speaker designated Washington as "the foremost uninspired mortal in the entire history of the human race." "Many great men have lived and wrought in this glorious world," he said, "but in completeness of character and in the far-reaching important and beneficent results of his laborious achievements Washington overtops them all." Washington's greatest service, the Speaker thought, was not as commander-in-chief of the revolutionary army and the first President of the republic, but as president of the constitutional convention, where his commanding influeuce made the formation of the republic possible.

Four Hundred and Fifty Young Men Take Total Abstinence Pledge

Last Sunday, following a plea of Secretary Bryan of the State Department, an audience of 450 young men at a mass meeting of the Brightwood M. E. church arose and took a total abstinence pledge with the Secretary. The Secretary declared that he had been taking pledges to abstain from liquor ever since he could remember, and that he did not mind taking the pledge whenever he had the chance. "Many men say that they are only moderate drinkers and that it can do them no harm," said the Secretary, "but I never saw a drunkard yet that didn't come from a moderate drinker. Strong drink can do no good and certainly does a great deal of harm. It is a needless waste of money that can be put to good uses, and it sets a bad example for the growing boys."

Employment Problem Discussed by Monday Evening Club

At the annual dinner of the celebrated Monday Evening Club of Washington, social unrest and the employment problem were discussed by men who have made a life-study of labor conditions in this country. John B. Andrews, secretary of the National Association of Labor Legislation, said that at the present time there are in the United States 1,000,000 people out of employment. He also said that the unemployment problem is a big one, but that the rapid growth of social responsibility in the last ten years has done much toward its solution. Social insurance, backed by a system of public labor bureaus, was held as the best solution of unemployment in this country.

Idaho's Two-Fold Victory for Prohibition

Special Correspondence

"It's been a long way to prohibition in our dear old Idaho" the women of the W. C. T. U. have been singing, as we worked early and late to make sentiment for prohibition, but our prayers have been answered and the seed sown has borne fruit. The climax of our ambition was reached on the day when hundreds of white ribboners and friends of temperance filled the senate chamber of the state capitol and for more than two and one-half hours watched half a dozen men opposed to statewide prohibition fight to defeat its passage by amendments. Very soon after the discussion began, it was apparent that theirs was a losing fight. Late in the afternoon of February 23 the vote was taken and when the count showed an overwhelming majority for our cause, the applause was tumultuous. To the chagrin of all the W. C. T. U. members, Senator Rockwell, who talked and voted against the measure, wore on the lapel of his coat our little badge of white, for which he was taken to task by Senator Pugmire, who also wore the bow of white, but was a loyal supporter of the statewide bill. Grateful are we to our magnificent Governor Alexander, who in his inaugural message was so outspoken for constitutional and statutory prohibition.

Never before in the history of the temperance work in this state have the white ribboners done such excellent organizing work. Headquarters were established at Boise in January, 1914, and more than 3,000 workers in every school district in South Idaho were listed. Almost every union and many unorganized places were visited by the state president. The state has had no outside organizers or public speakers, except during a period of three weeks, but sentiment has been created by personal appeals of our own workers. Prior to the fall election last year thousands of letters were sent to the voters of our state, and we have reason to be proud of the men elected as a result. Not only have nearly all of our legislators proven themselves champions of our cause, but most of those sent to Congress voted for National Prohibition.

IOWA AND IDAHO BECOME PROHIBITION STATES—SOUTH DAKOTA ON THE WAY

With the affixing of the signatures of the respective governors of the two great states of Iowa and Idaho to bills providing for statutory prohibition in the last ten days, John Barleycorn received legal notice that after January 1, 1916, he would be an outlaw. In both states a resolution providing for a constitutional prohibition amendment has been adopted, and the question will, in the case of Idaho, go to the people at the general election in 1916, and in Iowa the measure must pass another legislature and then be submitted to a vote of the people.

South Dakota took its first step on the "short, short way to prohibition" when its senate passed a measure referring the question to the people at the next general election. It is confidently expected that the house will concur in the senate's action. If so, South Dakota as well as South Carolina will be plunged into a statewide prohibition campaign for the summer months, the question to be voted on next fall.

Great Britain May Stop Sale of All Liquors

Chancellor Lloyd-George, in a speech at Bangor, Wales, on February 28, is reported to have said, "Drink is doing more damage to this country than all the German submarines put together.

"I have something to say that is unpleasant," he continued. "Most of our workmen are putting every ounce of their strength into this urgent work loyally and patriotically, but there are some who shirk their duty. Some workmen in the armament works refuse to work a full week for the nation's need. They are in the minority; the vast majority belongs to the class that we can depend on, but a small minority of workmen can throw whole works out of gear by reason sometimes of one thing and sometimes of another. But to be perfectly candid, it is mostly the lure of drink. They refuse to work full time, and when they do, their strength and efficiency are impaired through the way they have spent their leisure. Drink is doing us more damage than all the German submarines put together.

Points to Russia's Success

"Russia has stopped drink. M. Bark, the Russian minister of finance, with whom I conferred in Paris, told me that the output of Russian workmen had increased from thirty to fifty per cent since the sale of vodka had been prohibited.

"M. Bark admitted that he had lost $280,000,000 in yearly revenue which he certainly could not afford, but he added that if the government proposed to revert to the old condition there would be a revolution in Russia.

"The stoppage of the sale of drink in Russia has been due entirely to the Czar, and it was one of the most heroic things of the war.

Absinthe Ousted by France

"France abolished the sale of absinthe by a ten to one majority in a single afternoon. This shows how these great countries are facing their responsibilities.

"We propose nothing so drastic, but we are armed with full powers for the defense of the realm. We have great powers to deal with drink, and we mean to use them. We shall use them in a spirit of moderation and wisely, but quite fearlessly, and no doubt the country will support our action."

BEER AND BREAD

C. N. MARVIN, Editor Sentinel-Post of Shenandoah, Iowa

[To the many editors who are receiving from the Master Brewers' Association an offer of free, ready-made plate articles concerning beer, the following comments are recommended.—EDITOR.]

We are in receipt of an offer from the Master Brewers' Association of the United States to furnish us free ready made plates of articles in defense of beer. A sample article was sent with the offer. It undertakes to show that beer is much like bread in its origin, composition and uses.

We decline the offer, Mr. Brewer. Your comparison of bread and beer is but one of many that might be made of things as wide apart as heaven and hell, yet which have a common origin. The traveler at the parting of the way sees two roads diverge—one leads to the mountain top, the other to the abysmal swamp. Two mothers gaze fondly upon the babes at their breasts—they partake of the same food and care, yet one ends his career in the President's chair and the other in the electric chair.

So, too, when we look upon the golden grain ripening in the valleys and upon the hillsides we know that it possesses infinite possibilities for good or evil. As bread it may create brain and brawn to rule the world. It may save life. It may carry the message of mercy and fraternity from the people of one great nation to the suffering millions of another land, torn by the holocausts of war.

But as beer what good can that golden grain do? What good did it ever do? None. In this form it is a robber and murderer, a destroyer of every good impulse of the human heart.

It robs the working man of his efficiency as a laborer, prevents his promotion, reduces his wages and throws him out of a job when his employer finds it necessary to choose between the man who drinks and the one who does not.

It robs the family of the working man of clothes and books and food and home. Every dollar spent for beer is a dollar less to be spent for the necessaries and comforts of life—and worse, for the man full of beer very seldom has sense enough to spend his money judiciously.

The world needs every bushel of grain for food—for bread; it needs none for beer.

In every time of excitement or strife it has been customary for officials to close the saloons. Why? Because the sober sense of officialdom recognizes that beer is the enemy of law and order, the enemy of prudence and common sense.

If it is true in time of unusual excitement it is true at all times. Beer never leads men upward, never makes them better. Its influence is invariably downward, a drag on the individual, day by day and year by year pulling him downward. It is a drag on the community, the state, the nation, ever piling up taxes for the support of the poor, the insane, the criminals. It is an inspiration for crime.

The exhilaration that beer gives to the user is the hypocrite of the human emotions, deceiving him into thinking that it gives him strength of mind or body, but the most careful scientific tests have shown that beer weakens the user. The alcohol in the beer destroys more tissue than the small amount of food in it builds.

To liken beer to bread is sacrilege. Beer is a product of the life-giving cereals, it is true, but it is the Judas Iscariot of the family.

MONTANA'S AWAKENING PROHIBITION CONSCIENCE

MRS. MARY L. ALDERSON, President Montana W. C. T. U.

The fight between the awakening conscience of the people of Montana and those who know no way except the way of selfishness and greed has been vigorously waged at the legislative session during the past few weeks. The new chivalry is making advances.

At the request of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, a bill submitting a constitutional prohibition amendment to the people was introduced in both houses. It was carried unanimously in the senate, but was killed in the house committee. The prohibition strength in the house was only about one-third of its membership. A substitute bill referring a statutory law to the vote of the people in 1916 was then introduced by the committee that killed the bill submitting the amendment. It passed both houses. It was drawn along lines similar to the amendment asked for. The joker is in the date—which is December 31, 1918. It allows wine for the sacrament, and alcohol for scientific purposes, so the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is impressed anew with the need of education along these as well as other lines, and is preparing to enter an educational campaign of some magnitude.

A bill abolishing all kinds of race track gambling has passed the committees by so large a majority that there is every prospect of its becoming a law. This was a piece of legislation the governor advocated strongly in his message to the legislature. The racing men opposed it by large delegations from racing centers, literature and page advertisements in leading papers. The Butte Miner heroically led in one of the strongest fights ever made in Montana for a moral measure, and though the measure has only advanced through the committees in either house or senate, the majority in favor (over three-fourths) indicates that it will carry in spite of the opponents who are still at work lobbying and distributing literature, in a last forlorn hope to hold back the better civilization for which we are working.

Other bills for a further curtailment of the liquor traffic are pending in the legislature and the W. C. T. U. representatives are doing what they can to advance them.

Mrs. Ada Wallace Unruh, National W. C. T. U. organizer, has been in Montana since January 20, doing good work for us. One of the Helena pastors who heard her in the capital city said that her address was the most logical thing he had ever heard on prohibition. Mrs. Unruh has proved a most faithful field worker, doing all that can be done to advance W. C. T. U. interests along all lines, giving herself without stint in all she undertakes, whether it be a platform address, or the instruction or organization of a union.

OUTLAWING THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC WILL SAVE THE STATE LARGE SUMS, SAYS LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF MEXICO

Asserting that the abolition of liquor in New Mexico would save the state money, Lieutenant Governor E. C. de Baca, in a speech recently delivered in the house of representatives, at a prohibition rally, urged the submission of a constitutional prohibition amendment to the vote of the people. The meeting was presided over by Miss Harriet Lee Henderson, president of the New Mexico W. C. T. U., and was participated in by several members of the legislature.

After declaring that the question of statewide prohibition is the most important one in New Mexico, the lieutenant-governor expressed regret that many more legislators were not at the meeting. "I understand that this grave question will be presented for their consideration at the next session of the legislature, and I am surprised that more of them are not here tonight to hear this discussion," he said. "I am sure they should find this meeting interesting. I know there are several arguments raised against prohibition. One of these is that it does not prohibit. Opponents of temperance point to states that have prohibition and declare that alcohol is sold as much as ever.

"I am frank to say that I do not believe it. It is very likely true that drink has not been entirely wiped out. But is not the cause worth while if there is some diminution of the evil? Shall we say that our system of government in this country is a failure because crimes are still committed and have been committed since the beginning of time? People using these arguments merely wish to discourage you in your efforts in eliminating the greatest evil that afflicts humanity today.

Personal Liberty.

"A word as to personal liberty. Some say prohibition is unconstitutional as it restricts the personal liberty of the individual. But is it restricting the liberty of the individual to put a curb on the sale of opium, cocaine and other disease-dealing, mind-stupefying drugs? Does not drink split up the home, bring a bad example before the eyes of the drunkard's children, and end in the divorce court? Is it right to have children left without a roof over their heads and the home influences which should be for good?

"There is another side to this evil—the question of economics. Prohibition will work an immense saving to the state and I do not hesitate to declare that if New Mexico will adopt it, we could economize enough to support our jails and other institutions, and still have some money left over to pay some of those county salaries. It would hardly be necessary to have penitentiaries in this country if we did not have the demon rum to deal with."

Mr. de Baca then declared that it was not the man who takes an occasional drink that he is worried about. "It is for the sake of the weak beings in the clutch of the liquor habit that I ask you to pass this legislation," he exclaimed. "I think it is the duty of every one to think of these drink victims and legislate to protect them against themselves."

Following the speaker, Miss Henderson said she had no doubt that prohibition would carry in New Mexico by eighty-five per cent if submitted. "Wherever I go, people are saying they are eagerly awaiting the day when they can vote the saloon out of business."

BETTER BABIES CONTEST

MRS. FRANCES WAITE LEITER, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent Department of Health

Roger Hawley Wing

A practical phase of eugenics, bearing upon race betterment, was incidentally a feature of the Atlanta National W. C. T. U. Convention, and created unusual interest in the homes of that southern city.

Under the auspices of the National W. C. T. U. department of Health, co-operating with the Georgia branch of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Association, a Better Babies Contest was held, which far exceeded the expectations of those most interested in the effort. Through the organization named, an active local committee was secured, with Mrs. John Rowlett as the efficient chairman.

Bessie Cecelia Agnew

The contest was conducted in the convention tabernacle. Suitable quarters were set aside for this purpose, namely: An ample reception room for mothers, babies and nurses, and not a few interested fathers, a registration room, and a well lighted and comfortably heated parlor, with four tables duly equipped for the comfort and emergencies of the babies during the process of examination. Suitable scales, rules, measuring tapes, and calipers were in evidence. At each of the four tables presided a physician, and an assistant nurse and score recorder. From 9 o'clock a. m. till 5 p. m., during all the days of the convention, this was a very busy section of the tabernacle, entirely apart from the main auditorium.

All plans for these well organized contests, which are being conducted in various parts of the country, are under supervision of the Better Babies Bureau of the Woman's Home Companion (381 Fourth avenue, New York), which furnishes literature for free distribution to mothers, printed instructions for organizing a contest; also, suggestions to physicians.

Norman P. Pollitt, Jr.

To understand and appreciate the devised system for conducting a contest on a scientific basis, it is necessary to carefully study the literature and plans provided. These can be obtained without cost by addressing the bureau, as mentioned. This bureau co-operates with all societies and boards of any kind interested in public health and child welfare.

In these contests, mere beauty and good clothes do not count. Physical and mental development only are considered; and the purpose should be educational rather than competitive.

To the helps referred to, furnished without cost save postage or express charges, are added the score cards, the certificates given to each and every child examined, the diplomas presented to the boy and girl baby in each of the three divisions and the bronze medals awarded to the boy and girl baby with highest score irrespective of divisions. The medals and diplomas indicate the winners.

Parents, as a rule, do not enter these contests expecting, or even really hoping to win a prize. They want most to learn regarding any defects that exist in the child which may be remedied.

Besides the local committees necessary to make a contest successful, the professional corps of this Atlanta contest, in the final summing up, consisted of twenty-five physicians and twenty-seven nurses in relay service.

Instead of the 100 anticipated, 460 babies from six months to three years of age were registered and examined. After the registration book had closed, 273 more applications were received, making a total of 733.

AN ENEMY OF CHILDHOOD

PROHIBITION AND SUFFRAGE BEING CONSIDERED BY NEW HAMPSHIRE LEGISLATURE—EX-GOVERNOR HANLY ADDRESSES THEM ON NATIONAL PROHIBITION

MRS. ELLEN R. RICHARDSON
President New Hampshire W. C. T. U.

Several bills introduced in the present legislature are of special interest to the women of the state. House bill No. 172 for the repeal of the local option license law enacted in 1903, claims our first attention. Resolutions protesting against the liquor traffic and favoring the passage of this bill have been sent out by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to the various women's organizations in the state. These have been returned in large number not only by our unions, but by women's clubs, women's relief corps, Y. W. C. A. auxiliaries and other women's societies. Petitions to be signed by voters only, in favor of the bill for repeal, were sent out by the Anti-Saloon League. The committee on liquor laws has practically decided to kill all other proposed changes in the liquor laws, and the contest will be waged on the question of prohibition versus license.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is co-operating with the Equal Suffrage Association in an endeavor to secure the franchise for the women of New Hampshire. Two bills have been presented, one extending municipal suffrage and the other full suffrage. Public meetings have been held in various parts of the state addressed by suffrage speakers, but the largest and most enthusiastic was held in Legislative Hall, Concord, Feb. 16. Mr. A. J. Felker, state commissioner of agriculture, and Mr. J. S. B. Davie, state commissioner of labor, gave brief, earnest, forceful addresses in favor of equal suffrage from the viewpoint of the farmer and the laborer.

The above is the striking illustration on an attractive little folder containing opinions of prominent men concerning woman suffrage and sent to members of the New Hampshire legislature by women of the state in the interest of the bill now pending.

The principal address was given by our National superintendent of Franchise, Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston, who captured the audience as she demonstrated in her vivacious and logical manner that women for many years have been preparing themselves for political freedom by their educational and economic training.

The members of the legislature who were present in large numbers and the friends of the cause were so pleased with Mrs. Livingston's presentation of the subject that an effort is being made to have her return to Concord to speak at the public hearing February 24. Some of Mrs. Livingston's department leaflets have been mailed to each member of the legislature. We are hoping New Hampshire will not be left out in the list of New England states securing favorable legislative action for their women.

A bill to authorize the appointment of women as special police officers has been favorably reported by the judiciary committee.

On February 11, at the close of the forenoon session, Ex-Governor Hanly of Indiana addressed the legislature on National Prohibition. He was introduced by Governor Spaulding, who is a strong supporter of National Prohibition, and his earnest, convincing address, heard with deep interest, was frequently interrupted with applause from the members of the legislature and the large audience crowding the gallery.

BETTER BABIES CONTEST

Two weeks later, when the score cards had been carefully reckoned, 500 mothers and babies assembled in the tabernacle auditorium to listen to a helpful address by Dr. Charles Boynton, and to receive the certificates.

Diplomas were presented as follows:

First Division—	Age	Rating
Bessie Cecelia Agnew,	7 months	97 %
Norman Pollitt,	8 months	97¼ %
Second Division—
Elna Dorothy Brinn,	15 months	96¾ %
Roger Hawley Wing,	15 months	98 %
Third Division—
Anne Arden,	32 months	97¾ %
James Albert Woolley,	27 months	96¾ %

Medal Winners—

Roger Hawley Wing,	15 months	98 %
Anne Arden,	32 months	97¾ %

It is an interesting fact that the parents of Roger Hawley Wing, whose score was the highest, were eugenically married, having exchanged health certificates. The little son bears evidence of his heredity in health, temperament, and ability to eat and sleep according to rule. He is a happy, rollicking boy; has never been walked with at night, nor rocked to sleep.

Since the contest closed, eleven of the examining physicians have voluntarily expressed willingness to enter another contest some time during the present year, as the interest evidently warrants it.

In early January, a committee from the Evangelical Ministerial Association of Atlanta was appointed to draft an eugenic bill to be presented to the Georgia legislature, to prevent the marriage of those who are physically and socially unfit for family obligations.

The W. C. T. U. department of Health is indebted to Mrs. Howard Payne (of Elberton), president of the Georgia branch of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Association, for valuable personal assistance in preliminary work for the contest.

ALCOHOL FATAL TO BABIES

"Not long ago a young mother was mourning the untimely death of her babe," says Mrs. Martha M. Allen, National superintendent of Medical Temperance, in a leaflet entitled, "Save the Babies." "Questioning brought out the fact that the attending physician had advised that the child be fed upon a drug-store 'food' which contains a considerable percentage of alcohol. The young mother had no idea that her child had been both starved and poisoned to death; starved because this so-called 'food' was not a food, and poisoned by the alcohol in it.

"Multitudes of babies have died as a result of soothing syrups given in ignorance that these contain alcohol or morphine, or both. Morphine cough and croup syrups and diarrhoea medicines have added their quota to the death list. Drugs and soothing syrups and alcoholic liquors should never be given to babies.

"A doctor should be called if baby is sick, but if he advises alcoholic liquor or patent 'foods' get another doctor. Some of the best doctors in the world say that alcoholic liquor is very bad for children, sick or well, and it is wise to be on the safe side and keep such poison out of the baby's weak little stomach. Dr. Ira S. Wile, editor of the Medical Review of Reviews of New York, who helped for some time in clinics for poor babies in that city, says: 'The less alcohol given to children as food, drink or drug the better for the children.' This is the opinion of most physicians today who have studied the nature and effects of alcohol.

"Do not give any alcoholic liquor. Alcohol in its full strength is quick poison. Diluted alcohol, such as beer and wine, is slow poison. It may not kill outright, but it will do some harm somewhere. Much of the craving for alcohol shown in adult life is due to sowing the seeds of desire for it in the sicknesses of childhood. Do not use alcohol to rub on the baby, either. Use water or olive oil. Alcohol chills the body."

Russia's Financial Stability and Prohibition

In an interview with the Paris correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, on February 4, M. Bark, the Russian Minister of Finance, in answer to a remark that what most challenged the admiration of foreign nations was the heroic message conceived by the Emperor, and applied by M. Bark, renouncing entirely the large revenue from the state monopoly of alcohol, the minister replied that he felt proud of being the Czar's executor in a work at once so grandiose and beneficent, the happy effects of which had already visibly infused a new spirit into the Russian people.

"I have always cherished a great faith in the potentialities of the Russian nation, but I must admit that even my optimistic anticipations have been greatly exceeded by the reality. As you know, there was a considerable deficit to be covered in the ordinary budget of the year 1914. Well, we have stopped the gap without difficulty or effort. We had 500,000,000 rubles in the free reserve, and other available funds from which we drew, and the problem was solved. I increased some few taxes during the remaining months of last year, and I found that the solvency of the peasants has been raised very considerably by the law prohibiting the consumption of alcohol, and that the beneficent operation of this edict continues to make itself felt progressively."

Diminution in Crime in Russia

"It is difficult for foreigners to realize," M. Bark continued, "how great are Russia's economic resources, and how much greater they have become since the promulgation by His Majesty of that humanitarian law which, I may add, is felt by the Russian people themselves, not as a restriction, but as an inestimable boon conferred upon them by their provident monarch. I can assure you that the productivity of every class of workman in Russia, whether we examine those engaged in agricultural or industrial pursuits, has already increased by from thirty to fifty per cent, and I need hardly point out to you what that one act connotes in a population of 170,000,000, to say nothing of the cessation of the waste which formerly accompanied and followed the consumption of alcohol. Again, the rates for the maintenance of prisoners have fallen, because crime has everywhere diminished, and in some districts has disappeared altogether.

"Another indication of the welcome change which has come over the nation is afforded by the returns of the savings banks. In war time people are everywhere nervous; and in Russia, as elsewhere, large sums were withdrawn from the savings banks as soon as war was declared. Well, since the total prohibition of alcohol, the accounts I have received from these institutions throughout the country are so encouraging that even I, whose faith in the Russian people has always been large and firm, did not anticipate the rapid and splendid result which they denote. Although only a few months elapsed between the promulgation of the Czar's humane and patriotic edict and the end of 1914, the excess of deposits over withdrawals amounted to 84,000,000 rubles (£8,500,000), or twice the amount of the preceding year. Russia's economic situation, therefore, is not merely excellent, but it is rapidly improving, and my faith in her future—not a blind, but a carefully reasoned faith—is boundless."

SIGNING OREGON'S PROHIBITION BILL

An impressive scene was recently enacted in Salem, Oregon, when a small procession of prohibition enthusiasts wended their way to the office of Governor Withycombe for the purpose of witnessing the chief executive sign substitute House bill No. 362 by Representative J. E. Anderson, the prohibition measure intended to carry into effect the constitutional enabling act adopted by the people under the initiative last November. Heading the company of temperance victors was Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, president of the W. C. T. U. of Oregon, who had been appointed by the speaker of the house to place the legal document in the governor's hands. Accompanied by Representative Anderson, Mrs. Kemp had previously, upon commission from the same authority, carried the bill from the house to the senate.

"I think this the greatest piece of constructive legislation in Oregon history," was the comment of the governor as he signed the bill. "In my opinion the passage of this act alone is well worth the cost of the legislative session, because it means so much for the state and its people."

A photographer had made preparations for a flashlight picture, his camera being in position and everything in readiness for the event which was to form the climax of prohibition legislation in Oregon. At first Governor Withycombe's native modesty caused him to demur to this phase of the program, but he was finally induced to consent by the representation that thousands of people of the state, who could not be present, would be pleased to see a picture of the scene.

"Well, as long as we are to have a picture," said the governor, "I would like the camera focused so as to show the life-sized portrait of Governor George Abernethy there on the wall. I think it peculiarly fitting that on such an occasion his portrait should be included in the photograph. He was provisional governor of Oregon before the creation of the territory. I am informed that he signed the first prohibition bill ever coming before an Oregon legislative assembly in 1844, and that it was repealed over his veto two years later."

SOUTH AMERICA'S FIRST "LITTLE WHITE RIBBON PARTY"

A baby party, with dainty invitations printed in gilt for the wee guests, is the latest thing in W. C. T. U. activities in Montevideo, Uruguay, South America, where Miss Hardynia K. Norville, World's white ribbon missionary, is teaching temperance truths with fine success to children and adults. About seventy-five mothers, many of whom had shown no previous interest in the work, brought their babies, and the program was furnished by the kindergartners of Crandon Institute. A most attractive certificate of membership in "The Little White Ribbon Band," printed on heavy white paper in gilt, with a pledge for the mother to sign, "Trusting in God's help, I solemnly promise to teach my child to abstain from the use of alcoholic drinks, including wine, beer and cider; from the use of tobacco in any form, and from profanity," was presented to each baby. It made a charming souvenir of the occasion when the baby's name had been added on a blank line, the baby's picture put in a little space on the left of the certificate framed in a dainty gilt design, and the outline of the baby hand traced in gilt over the prophetic words, "Tremble, King Alcohol, We Shall Grow Up." No doubt these certificates will be kept in the homes for many years and will furnish a constant reminder to the parent and the child of the dedication of the young life to a righteous cause and the promise of the mother to give the necessary instruction in ways of temperance and purity.

BREAD OR WHISKY?

Noted Medical Authority Deprecates Waste

"What shall we now plant, barley to poison and kill our citizens, our young mothers and the unborn, or wheat, to grow bone and brawn and blood and brains and bravery for Britain?" asks Dr. C. W. Saleeby, F. R. S. E., the noted English medical authority, in an article in the Daily Chronicle of Manchester, England, entitled "Bread or Whisky? Which is the Greater National Need?"

He deprecates the worse than waste in raising barley to make beer and whisky; and turning food material into poison. He quotes the words of the Czar of Russia to his minister of finance, "It is not meet that the welfare of the exchequer should be dependent upon the ruin of the spiritual and productive energies of numbers of my loyal subjects," and urges his fellow countrymen "in this epoch-year of 1915" to "plant wheat instead of whisky; bread instead of beer; life instead of death," adding that "never, perhaps, was there a more fateful choice for the English nation."

Secretary of State William J. Bryan has promised to deliver an address at a popular temperance meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, to be held in Rochester, N. Y., on May 27. A nation-wide pledge-signing campaign is being organized and Mr. Bryan's address will be in line with this movement.

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

As we go to press, the "family" at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters are gathered in the editorial rooms to observe UNION SIGNAL DAY, the birthday of Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, March 1. A further account of the occasion will appear in next week's paper.

In the past six months the number of prohibition states has doubled. If we do as well in the next six months, we will have the required number—thirty-six—for a ratification of a Prohibition Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

"Tremble, King Alcohol, we shall grow up," cried the children twenty or thirty years ago, and the liquor men laughed and said, "Just hear the babies. What can they do?" They have grown up—those youthful champions of the temperance cause—and today in legislative halls they are making King Alcohol not only tremble but totter on his throne, and the liquor men—well, it is anything but a laughing matter to them.

"A TRIBUTE TO THE PROHIBITION STATES"

Numerous requests are reaching Miss Gordon to bring up to date her new playlet, "A Tribute to the Prohibition States." There were nine prohibition states, including West Virginia, when this program was prepared. In most of the new prohibition states the law goes into effect January 1, 1916.

Miss Gordon is anxious to bring the program "down," or "up" to date, but thinks it will be better to do so after January 1, 1916. It is suggested that when the program is used the presiding officer should make a statement concerning the additional prohibition states, securing her authentic information from THE UNION SIGNAL of February 25.

HIS LAST VOTE FOR LIQUOR

Many a member of our state legislatures is probably entertaining very much the same thoughts as were given expression to by the Arkansas legislator who, after voting "No" on the statewide prohibition bill, asked the privilege of explaining his action. While he felt in duty bound to his constituents to fulfill his promise to vote against the measure, he declared, "This shall be the last vote I will ever cast in the interests of the whisky traffic." As a representative of the labor organizations he gave it as his opinion that the time has arrived when their interests are best safeguarded by supporting the prohibition cause.

As a matter of fact that time arrived years before the gentleman from Arkansas came into this world, but he is to be congratulated on having even at this late day caught the vision of what is necessary to properly protect the interests of his constituents. "Big Business" with its strict regulations in regard to liquor drinking and an enlightened public sentiment have tended to create a clearer atmosphere through which the maker of laws has discerned the social and political necessity for removing from labor its greatest hindrance and enemy—the liquor traffic.

In every state there are legislators and voters who are "almost persuaded" to never again cast a vote for liquor. A little tactful persuasion or pressure on the part of their constituents may be all that is needed to encourage them to take this stand.

"BETTER BABIES"

"Better Babies Contests" are becoming increasingly popular and deservedly so, for they are proving a factor of real importance in educating mothers and fathers in caring for their little ones. "Better Babies" might well be one of the slogans of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for until the liquor curse is eliminated from our civilization, a great army of babies will stand little or no chance of attaining to the standards demanded of "Better Babies." The mothers of the race have a right to demand a social condition which will remove temptation from the fathers of their children and prevent, so far as laws can, wasting in drink the money which should be spent for the food, clothing, shelter and education of their offspring.

Every one of the winsome faced medal winners in the Better Babies Contest at Atlanta, pictured on page 5 of this issue, is an eloquent argument for a prohibition nation.

"Closed twenty years for repairs," is a sign that appears on one of the saloon windows of Des Moines, Iowa. Yes, and ten times twenty, for Iowa, having once started on the good road, is doing the thing thoroughly, and with statewide prohibition to go into effect January 1, 1916, and constitutional prohibition and woman suffrage on the way, there is little hope of the doors of Des Moines saloons ever again opening.

If the Hon. Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain, deems the fact that the productivity of labor in Russia has increased between thirty and fifty per cent, of sufficient importance to formally announce it in a speech in Parliament, it is worthy of the serious consideration of every voter of the United States in determining his action at the next election where the liquor question is an issue.

THE WHITENING MAP

We realized when we placed on the cover page of last week's SIGNAL a prohibition map labeled "revised to date" that quite probably before the paper reached our readers the map would be "out of date" by reason of other states enacting prohibition legislation, and we hoped and prayed that this would be the case. We were not disappointed. Hardly had the paper gone to press when a telegram was received at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters telling that Idaho had taken the final action to pass a statutory prohibition bill, and only a few hours later there came from Iowa a message, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow. Iowa is free." Six months ago we gloried in nine white states; today we count double that number—eighteen. In a few months that number should be increased to twenty-one, if the legislatures of Utah and South Dakota take the action that is expected of them, and the voters of the latter state and South Carolina live up to their privileges.

Meanwhile there was never greater need than today for a campaign of education with reference to the dangers of even moderate drinking. Realizing that the doom of the saloon is sealed, the liquor interests are bending all their energies to secure legislation to enable them to sell liquor at cafes, restaurants, hotels and similar places, something after the fashion which prevails in continental Europe. Already they are endeavoring to buy up the press of the country to publish articles on the food value of beer and the stimulating qualities of malt liquors and light wines. The public must be educated and warned by press and poster, from pulpit and platform, that the use of alcohol as a beverage or as a medicine in any form is fatal to health of body, mind and soul.

GENERAL VILLA ISSUES PROHIBITION ORDERS

General Villa has issued an order greatly restricting the sale of liquor in the province which he controls, nearly three-fourths of Mexico, and has threatened to punish with death any man caught disobeying his order.

GERMANY'S SUPPLY OF ALCOHOL SHORT

A cablegram from Berlin to the Associated Press indicates that Germany's supply of alcohol is so far below the demand that the so called "spirits central" organization, which primarily supplies the army's needs, has announced that it will be compelled to limit deliveries of brandy and spirits for other purposes, especially for drinking. About 40 per cent of the former amount will be allowed the larger industries for use in March and slightly more to small concerns. The supply of denatured alcohol for fuel lights also must be curtailed.

An effort will be made to save for human consumption a large part of the supply of potatoes now in distilleries and to induce distilleries to undertake the production of crude sugar.

W. C. T. U. HONORED

The high esteem in which the W. C. T. U. of Oregon is held by the legislators of that state was evidenced recently when the speaker of the house called to his desk the president of the state organization and entrusted to her the prohibition bill to be taken to the senate, and from there to the governor for his signature. The act was a recognition of the part taken by the women of the state in the recent statewide prohibition campaign.

"SALOONS MUST GO" ASSERTS UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM IOWA

In an authorized interview in Washington, Senator Albert B. Cummins of Iowa recently declared himself in favor of the abolition of the liquor traffic. In enumerating what he considers the vital problems of government of the present day, he said, "The saloon must go. Sobriety must be the rule of conduct for the future."

The Senator is believed to be taking this stand for national prohibition as the result of his careful study of the question and the effect of the traffic upon the nation as a whole.

The Philadelphia North American comments on the far-reaching political effect of this declaration—the first on the subject made by any recognized presidential possibility in either of the old parties. They refer to the fact that the leaders of the national prohibition movement have declared their intention to exert themselves to obtain the nomination and election of a presidential candidate who will be in sympathy with the movement and willing to aid in its promotion.

GENEROUS CONTRIBUTION TO BELGIAN RELIEF FUND

Busily occupied as are the W. C. T. U. women in legislative and campaign work, they are not forgetful of the needs of the war victims across the sea. Mrs. Lindon Bates, chairman of the American Commission for Relief in Belgium, writes to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters that the contributions received from the W. C. T. U. have been generous and the spirit accompanying the gifts a real inspiration. She adds:

"The situation at the front is becoming truly appalling. The report of the Rockefeller Foundation is published and they bear us out in much more than we have ever asserted regarding the situation in Belgium. They say that by the first of April the entire seven millions of people will be starving. We are hoping for intervention of the totally unforeseen before that time to avert catastrophe."

NEWS OF VICTORY RECEIVED WHEN "SOME GLAD DAY" WAS BEING SUNG

A Willard Memorial meeting had just been called to order in the home of Mrs. Ida Wise Smith, the president of the state W. C. T. U. and the assembled company were singing "Some Glad Day" when a telegram was received saying the glad day for Iowa had arrived, for the governor had signed the bill restoring statutory prohibition. Mrs. Smith excused herself from the meeting long enough to fly "Old Glory" and thus proclaim to the world the good news. "It was a strange coincidence that Governor Clarke addressed a Fathers and Sons banquet in Cedar Rapids that evening," writes Mrs. Smith, "and the W. C. T. U. sent to him, as a token of its appreciation, a sheaf of the finest roses the city afforded."

Spring fashions in the legislatures seem to run largely to prohibition and woman suffrage.

STRICT ANTI-DRUG LAW WENT INTO EFFECT MARCH 1

The Harrison bill, known officially as the Harrison Narcotic law, which is intended to prevent the increasing and illicit use of drugs, went into effect on March 1. It is believed by physicians to be the most far-reaching law relative to drugs ever enacted in this or any other country. The substance of the bill is as follows:

"On and after March 1, 1915, every person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes or gives away opium or coca leaves or any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, shall register with the collector of internal revenue of the district his name or style, place of business, and place or places where such business is to be carried on.

"Also on or before July 1, annually thereafter, every person who produces, imports, manufactures, compounds, deals in, dispenses, sells, distributes or gives away any of the aforesaid drugs shall pay to the said collector a special tax at the rate of $1 per annum."

FROM THE WAR ZONE

Unspeakably tragic is the news that comes to us from our comrades over the sea, who are in or near the war zone. Mrs. Anderson Hughes Drew, who will be remembered by all who attended the Portland (Ore.) National Convention and the Brooklyn (N. Y.) World's Convention, writes of some of the sad scenes brought to her attention, as follows:

"We in Southampton see perhaps more of the horrors of this terrible war than any other residents in England. All our noble young men, fresh and strong, embark from here for the continent and this is the port to which they return maimed and wounded. The sad Red Cross trains run many times a week—almost within a stone's throw of my window. My husband's duties take him frequently to the hospital near here, where there are many wounded German prisoners, also wounded Belgians, as there is no safe hospital left for them in their ruined little land. Here, too, are our wounded British boys.

"Many Belgian refugees come to Southampton. Among them a few weeks ago was a poor, wee mite of only twelve weeks whose two feet had been blown off by a shell, and another with one hand and one foot gone—a child of two years of age. There are many little ones who are so young they cannot tell their names, but who reach us with neither parents nor anyone who knows who they are."

NEW JERSEY PLANT INTERFERES WITH PERSONAL LIBERTY

An order has been issued by the Florence Iron Company, located at Florence, New Jersey, forbidding beer wagons to stop at any of the 300 houses owned by the company and occupied by employees. Any employee who occupies a company-owned house is forbidden to drink intoxicating liquors, and all agents of breweries are prohibited from soliciting upon the premises.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

THE LAND OF FREEDOM

KATHERINE CALL SIMONDS, FRANKLIN, N. H.

In this blessed land of freedom
Where aloft "Old Glory" waves,
Men have legalized the traffic
That a nation's life enslaves.

Hush, a mother's cry of anguish
Rises high as heaven above,
For a mother's boy has wandered
From the fold of mother love.

Mother hearts lie crushed and bleeding;
Mother eyes o'erflow with tears,
Mother lips in prayer are pleading
Pleading, lo, these many years.

Shall the lives of men be bartered
And a nation's honor spilled?
Licensed be th' accursed traffic
That our coffers may be filled?

No, thrice no. This land of freedom
While aloft "Old Glory" waves
Shall forever CRUSH the DEMON
That a nation's life enslaves.

Hush, I hear a song of gladness
Borne on wings of mother love,
And I hear the angels singing
In the Fatherland above.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. MARY J. BROWN, New Hartford, Mo., an honored and loved member of the local union.

MRS. STELLA HARRELSON, also of New Hartford, Mo., a charter member of the union and one who will be greatly missed.

MRS. CASSIE C. SAYRE, New London, Mo., district superintendent of the Flower Mission department, a loyal worker who delighted to carry cheer to others.

MRS. SUSAN HART, Bath, Mich., a loved member of the local union and a staunch friend of our righteous cause.

MRS. M. S. A. WEBB, Savannah, Ga., beloved honorary president of the local union.

AMANDA SMITH, the noted leader and evangelist of the colored people, did much to educate her race along temperance lines. She had a wonderful gift of song and used it to preach the gospel of total abstinence and prohibition. She will be remembered as having been present at the Asbury Park National Convention and other national meetings. She passed away at the age of eighty-seven. The committal service was held at Chicago.

FANNY CROSBY, the writer of eight thousand hymns, has gone to her reward at the age of ninety-five. Blind from her infancy, she had a wonderful insight into the needs of the human soul, and used her talents of versification in composing some of the best-loved sacred songs ever written, among them, "Saved by Grace," "Blessed Assurance," "Rescue the Perishing" and "Safe in the Arms of Jesus."

RED LETTER DAYS

MARCH 20—Prohibition Rally Day (birthday of Hon. Neal Dow)

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

SUPERINTENDENTS

TEMPERANCE AND LABOR

MRS. MAE M. WHITMAN

Wake up! Wake up! The song of the robin should be ours.

When our great body of women realize the importance of the labor vote; and how necessary to success are the sympathy and co-operation of wage-earners, we shall have gone a long way toward carrying prohibition in state and nation.

More and more is it being conceded that a powerful factor is this great army, hitherto so often manipulated by the enemy. There are many vital economic arguments for the reasonableness and advantages of total abstinence and prohibition which we need to make plain. Rightly understood, the labor department has to do with five fundamental activities, the home, the school, the church, the state and economics. The first three are already in the harness and are being made to serve the common people,—to a degree, at least; the fourth is in process of development and the fifth an ideal toward which we are working.

It would seem that never since the crucifixion of Christ has there been such turmoil in the world as exists today.

In our Declaration of Principles, we say, "We believe in a living wage; an eight-hour day; in courts of conciliation and arbitration; in justice as opposed to greed of gain; in peace on earth and good will to men." True to these fundamentals, let us use the powers of conscience and intellect in the practical application of the Sermon on the Mount, thus becoming true co-workers with God in the great work of overcoming evil with good.

Children of one Father, it ought to be possible to live as brothers and sisters even in the industrial world. Everywhere the world is clamoring for a closer harmony between capital and labor. It goes without saying that a nation can never rise to high efficiency so long as it is under the bonds of appetite. The problem of unemployment, or rather the need of a practical plan furnishing wide-spread employment, is looming up larger and larger. The cost of living steadily increases, yet many continue blind to the great economic waste resulting from the decomposition of fruits and grains so greatly needed as wholesome foods, but which are given over to the manufacture of health-destroying, brain-destroying, character-ruining drink, making wrecks of homes where peace and prosperity and happiness might have dwelt. If there was ever a time when our nation needed sober thinkers and clear thinking, it is now, for we as a nation are passing through a crisis, stupendous and far-reaching. Total abstinence has become an absolute necessity to wage earners. While we need their support for the fulfillment of our aims, they as truly need the help of total abstinence and prohibition.

Many laborers have little time to read leaflets, but would be impressed with prohibition and economic truths displayed on posters. During the 1914 prohibition campaign, many of us found that posters making simple, striking statements did work for us where leaflets were futile. In one campaign we had a hundred or so cheap easels on which to display posters in front yards of people willing to help in that way. These were printed in very large type, easily read even by passengers on the flying street cars. Then there are the anti-alcohol lantern slides with picture illustrations and scientific and economic truths.

Temperance and labor are both powerful agencies in the progress of the world. It is our privilege to unite them in a way that shall accomplish wonders for God and humanity. Reforms go hand in hand. The co-operation of great movements is the necessity of the hour and all need waking up to its imperative requirements.

HUMANE EDUCATION

MRS. MARY F. LOVELL

The department of Mercy is now called the department of Humane Education. For several reasons the latter seemed the more appropriate name. It was approved by the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Atlanta and is the name which has always been preferred by the World's W. C. T. U. As not every one sees the World's W. C. T. U. Report the following letter received from Mr. Kiyoshi Sugiura of Japan, may be of interest:

Yokohama, Japan, Jan. 17, 1915.

My Dear Mrs. Lovell:

Please accept my very cordial thanks for the attractive and beautiful book which you so kindly sent to me through Miss M. L. Hansee of Keiogizuku. "Black Beauty" is valuable in itself, but I shall doubly esteem it as a gift from you.

At the second annual meeting of the Keio Language Society of the Commercial and Technical School of Keiogizuku, November 21-22, 1913, I gave the recitation, "Webster's Speech in Reply to Hayne." Mr. M. Tsuboi was one of the Americans, Jefferson Winwood of the "Boston Tea Party."

I am a business man just now, and I daily discharge my official duties with no interruption from ill health. I am in the export business, and our company has just received an order for two thousand tons of beans from Liverpool and Marseilles. It will be my business to oversee the selection of these beans, examine the weight and send them on shipboard. There are about one hundred and thirty boys and girls employed to do this work.

For four years I had the pleasure of receiving Miss Hansee's kind instruction, so that now I—even I!—can speak and understand a little English—I mean now as I take my way through the world a life member of the Band of Mercy, the owner of the prized Yarrow Mercy button, and also a member of the Yokohama Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, to help mankind to the best of my ability.

Will you please send me one hundred pledge cards and one hundred of the sixth report of the World's W. C. T. U. department of Mercy. We intend to organize a Band of Mercy in Keio, and will do so as soon as Miss Hansee has time. She is so busy she does not have time to do all the Mercy work we should like to get her to do. Miss Hansee has friends in the Meiji University, and we hope to organize a Band of Mercy there soon. Please send me some literature to help us in organizing.

I have a strong desire to further any plan that will increase our knowledge of American institutions and that will help us in promoting peace. My wish is that the battleships of each nation may be turned into floating institutions of mercy.

Again thanking you for your beautiful and much appreciated gift and the kind thought which prompted it, believe me,

Very cordially yours,
KIYOSHI SUGIURA

1811 Negishi Machi, Yokohama, Japan

Mr. Sugiura's enthusiasm to help mankind to the best of his ability is surely worthy of imitation, and it is plain that he understands that the scope of the department of Humane Education is very wide and that its aim is to teach kindness to every living creature, thus laying a foundation of love and gentleness which is not only an earnest of good treatment and compassion for all that are helpless or suffering, but is also a necessary factor in the work of undermining and destroying the war spirit.

Jenkintown, Pa.

Mr. Frederick H. Wright, Ridgewood, N. J., superintendent of the Italian Missions of the Methodist Episcopal church, in the United States, has signified his desire to receive THE UNION SIGNAL in order that he may translate into Italian articles from it for use in the Italian Christian weekly, La Fiaccola, of which he is editor. Mrs. Ella B. Black, National superintendent of Work among Foreign-Speaking People, in forwarding subscription of Mr. Wright, rejoices in this additional medium through which temperance truths may reach our Italian population.

LEGISLATIVE NEWS

South Carolina

An anti-polygamy resolution has passed both houses of the South Carolina legislature.

Kentucky

One candidate for governor of Kentucky, Mr. J. W. Newman, has announced himself squarely in favor of statewide prohibition. The election of a governor occurs next fall.

Idaho

The senate of the Idaho legislature, on February 23, passed the prohibition bill heretofore passed by the house, providing for statewide prohibition by legislative enactment, to go into effect January 1, 1916.

Indiana

Both houses of the Indiana legislature have adopted the anti-polygamy amendment.

Limited suffrage for women was approved by the state senate on February 20 by a vote of 37 to 3.

Minnesota

By a vote of 66 to 62 (one more than the required majority) the Minnesota house of representatives, on February 24, passed the county option bill recently passed by the senate. The measure now goes to the governor, who has said that he would sign it.

South Dakota

A resolution calling for the submission of the question of statewide prohibition at the next general election was passed on February 24 by the South Dakota senate. The house is said to be in favor of the amendment. The house, on the same day, passed by a vote of 57 to 30 a resolution in favor of the submission of an equal suffrage amendment.

North Dakota

The lower house of the North Dakota legislature has passed a bill creating the office of state enforcement commissioner, the purpose of which is to place in the hands of a suitable person, who shall be appointed by the governor, general supervision over the enforcement of the law prohibiting the sale of intoxicants and other laws closely allied to it in spirit and purpose.

Iowa

The Wilson bill, providing for the submission of a constitutional prohibition amendment, which was recently passed by the senate of the Iowa legislature, on February 24 was passed by the house by a vote of 92 to 14. If acted upon favorably by the legislature which convenes two years hence it will be submitted to the people. A resolution for a constitutional amendment for woman suffrage, heretofore passed by the senate, was adopted by the house by a vote of 84 to 14.

Colorado

The Colorado house of representatives, by a vote of 63 to 0, on February 24, passed a bill for the enforcement of the statewide prohibition constitutional amendment. The bill differs from the senate measure by forbidding the sale of liquor by drug stores, or by any other agencies or individuals. It will be sent to a conference.

LIQUOR INTERESTS OPPOSE INDIANA'S SUFFRAGE BILL

Special Correspondence

The bill for partial suffrage for the women of Indiana passed the senate on February 20 by a vote of 37 to 3. The house had been canvassed and was considered perfectly safe. On the morning of the 22nd, the alarm having been spread among the liquor men, they dropped upon the state capitol like a horde of hungry vultures on a wounded horse, packing the corridors of the capitol, overriding the anti-lobby law, and stampeding the Democratic majority.

The situation has developed into practically a hand-to-hand fight between the liquor traffic and the noblest band of women in the state, with the moral forces of the commonwealth going to the aid of the women.

Secretary of State Bryan and Senator Owen of Oklahoma both urged the passage of a woman suffrage bill during the present session, but the liquor forces from all over the state have hurried to the capital to prevent it.

BLIND—OR NEAR BLIND?

KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON

So subtle is the human mind in its subconscious workings that no psychologist has as yet solved the problem as to whether the average man, if forced to a choice between the two alternatives, would rather be considered a knave or a fool. True, we shrink from the essential wrong doing involved in knavery, but do we not shrink still more from the aspersion cast upon our intellectual acumen in the charge of folly? To be considered foolish enough to think, say, or do certain things is often the last straw laid upon the burden which is crushing one's self-respect.

Other things being in any way equal, it is our firm conviction that the best of people would rather be considered a little wicked than very foolish. If this be true, it is a fact which those dealing in any public capacity with their fellowmen cannot afford to ignore. Many an oratorical spellbinder has been remanded to "innocuous desuetude" because he failed to attach due weight to the intelligence of his constituency. Many an argument has failed to convince because founded upon the hypothesis that certain fundamental facts were unknown to the opponent, or that he lacked the logical mind which would enable him to detect the errors in a certain line of reasoning. A very persistent strain of logic runs through the human mind and through society as a whole. Woe to the man who frames his public policy without regard to that logic. His fall may not be speedy, but it is sure.

"The bearings of these observations lie in their application" to the line of reasoning adopted by certain representatives at Washington when called upon by their constituencies to account for their vote against the Sheppard-Hobson bill. Two Massachusetts representatives, in particular, have spoken with no uncertain sound and, by one of those singular coincidences not infrequently noted in the political realm, their letters are almost identical in certain paragraphs. They both lay great stress upon the fact that, although not voting for the Hobson resolution, they did vote for the two Mann amendments, the one to strike out the words "for sale" and the other to refer the measure not to the legislatures of the several states, but to the direct vote of the people. Their contention is that these two amendments were much stronger than the original resolution and that by voting for them they proved their allegiance to the principle of prohibition.

Can it be possible that these learned gentlemen think they are dealing with a constituency of fools? Does not the veriest novice in the world of politics know that this is a favorite device of the opponents of any measure? An amendment may serve one of two ends. It may be presented to strengthen the measure under consideration and it may also be presented to overthrow and destroy that measure. Who can doubt the purpose for which the Mann amendments were offered? What did they mean when put into plain English? Simply the voting down of a practicable measure of reform through the pretense of substituting for it something manifestly impracticable and impossible. Representative Mann and those who stood with him knew that to strike out the words "for sale" was to present a proposition so drastic that it could not possibly pass through Congress since the manufacture of alcohol for the arts and sciences, to say nothing of certain other purposes, is still a necessity. They knew that to submit the measure to the legislatures of the several states was the simplest and most direct way of reaching the people of those states, since the calling of a constitutional convention is a method fraught with such difficulty and, in a sense, danger that it would be vigorously opposed all over the nation. They knew that the amendments which have already been made to the constitution of the United States have been made in the manner proposed. Do they really think that the people at large can be deceived by mere words and mistake a filibuster for a genuine effort to advance the cause of prohibition?

The American people long have shown themselves to be "near-blind" on this subject, but they are not yet stone blind. Already the signs are many and encouraging that the veil of blindness is being lifted. Possibly when the returns from some of their districts shall be counted another year these gentlemen who relied upon the ignorance of their constituents may awaken to a realization of this fact.

SEVEN FRAMED PICTURES OF MISS WILLARD FOR OKLAHOMA SCHOOLS

Mrs. Abbie B. Hillerman, president of the Oklahoma W. C. T. U., who has recently been in Payne county, writes as follows concerning W. C. T. U. activities: "I spent an afternoon and evening at Stillwater where a schedule of marvelous possibilities had been arranged by the county and local presidents. Beginning at 1:15 six framed pictures of Frances E. Willard were presented to the schools of the city and the Agricultural and Mechanical college. At the latter a fine audience of young people assembled in the beautiful new library building. A copy of the 'Compendium of Temperance Truth' was also presented, and the young people were urged to enter the essay contest and win a prize for Oklahoma. Splendid appreciation of the pictures was expressed by all the recipients and a beautiful tribute paid to Miss Willard by one of the college professors.

"The next morning we went to Perkins where a fine county institute was held. This union had also arranged to present a picture of Miss Willard to the beautiful new high school. The W. C. T. U. members attended in a body and were seated on the platform. The principal of this school is in hearty accord with the work of the union and after the presentation of the picture he expressed his great appreciation of it and we felt sure that so far as he could do it, the pupils would be taught to emulate the beautiful life of Miss Willard. That evening I spoke to a crowded house on 'Legislation Passed and Pending.'"

THE ONE WAY OUT

"A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM"

ALICE W. JENISON, Jacksonville, Florida

The three girls—Nan Robinson, her chum, Marion, and Nan's wee little sister, Doris—arrayed in their new winter finery made as pretty a picture as one could wish to see, as they walked down the avenue in the waning light of the autumn afternoon. Both Nan and Marion were very proud of little black-eyed Doris in her new red velvet cloak and bonnet.

As the girls drew near a large church which stood on the corner, they heard singing and Doris, who was passionately fond of music, begged to go in and listen. A W. C. T. U. meeting was announced on the bulletin board and the girls stopped to look at the notice. "Wonder what 'W. C. T. U.' stands for?" mused Nan, as they ascended the steps. Entering the door they were greeted by a bright-faced lady who showed them to seats. The music was greatly enjoyed by the girls, but it soon ended and a woman speaker arose to address the audience. Doris, her curly head nestled in sister Nan's lap, settled herself for a nap. The speaker had made only a few remarks when Marion, with a contemptuous look, whispered to Nan, "A temperance lecture! What would our fathers think to see us in here!" Noting Doris' comfortable position and drooping eyes, she sighed and whispered, "We shall have to stick it out, I suppose."

Nan made a gesture of impatience at Marion's interruption for, from the first word, her attention had been arrested and her heart was going out to the sweet-faced women about her, all of whom she noticed wore tiny white ribbon bows. No matter how scathingly the speaker scored the saloon, the girl's heart told her she was right and her father wrong, and as her mind eagerly accepted truths and facts she had never heard before, she made a prayerful resolve to go home and beg her father to close his saloon, for Nan's parent was a saloon-keeper.

Just as the speaker finished, little Doris, more charming than ever, awoke. The presiding officer, the president of the local W. C. T. U., asked that little children whose parents were interested in the work might be brought to the platform at that time, and be made white ribbon recruits. Marion mischievously whispered to Nan, "Wouldn't it be a joke on them to take a liquor man's baby up? Come on, Nan, let's do it!"

With an expression of sublime determination upon her sweet face, Nan arose, and the two girls, leading the lovely child, went down the aisle to the rostrum. A murmur of surprise ran through the convention audience when the liquor dealers' daughters were recognized.

As the president tied a dainty ribbon around Doris' dimpled wrist, she said: "With this snowy emblem we dedicate this baby to the W. C. T. U. Let us work to keep her pure little life forever untainted from the evils of the drink traffic, and let us help to prepare her and others to take up the work as we pass on."

Even Marion was sobered by the solemn words and when the girls turned to leave the platform, the serious look upon Nan's face prompted the president to say: "My dear, may I not place the white ribbon bow on you, too, that you may become a worker for your little sister's safety and happiness?"

Nan stood for a moment in deep thought, then her eyes brimming with tears, she nodded her head. Marion seized her arm, whispering, "Come on, Nan, your father would never permit you to do this silly thing!"

"Hush, Marion" Nan replied, "We both know that our fathers' business is wicked and wrong, and I am going to try to persuade him to give it up. You would better put on the white ribbon with me, and work for your father, too."

The bow was pinned on Nan, and her promise was given that she would come later and sign the temperance pledge. With an impulsive movement Nan put her arm around Marion's shoulder and coaxed, "You, too, Marion! We've gone into everything together; let's not separate now. It's going to be mighty hard for me, and I shall need your help."

Impulsive Marion responded to her friend's appeal, and the two girls and the baby walked down the aisle and out of the door with the tiny white bows gleaming against their glossy furs, while the convention joyfully sang, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow!"

Nan's thoughts on the way home were a strange mixture of prayers, fears and resolves, and when she entered the luxurious living room, where her parents were awaiting the summons to dinner, she was an animated firebrand. Her eyes glowed as she led Doris to her father, and in simple words told the story of the afternoon. Doris was the apple of her father's eye, and as she confidently climbed into his lap to show him her "pwetty wibbon," sure of his unfailing understanding of this new joy, the man's heart was strangely touched.

Removing her furs and cloak, Nan pinned the bow upon her dress, and smiling upon her mother, whose disapproval she greatly feared, she tremulously asked, "How do you like it?"

The mother's thoughts suddenly went back to her college days, and she remembered the consternation of her schoolmates when they found she was engaged to marry a saloon-keeper. She recalled how the girls had tried to be as friendly as before, but her own proud reticence had kept her aloof from them. She thought over her marriage, and the many thoughts and questionings that had haunted her through the past years. She went back in memory to the birth of her beautiful Nan, and recalled how thankful she had been that the baby was a girl, and so would not have to follow her father's business. In her heart she had hoped that the baby's coming would give her the courage to beg that a change of business be made. When, fourteen years later, Doris had been born, and she noted from the first her husband's utter devotion to the baby, she had dared to dream that her husband might voluntarily forsake his business. With both her girls on the right side tonight, a voice in her heart whispered, "Now is the time."

The room was electric with deep feeling, as Nan stood waiting for her mother's answer. Doris snuggled in her father's arms, her baby fingers smoothing the pretty ribbon. Her father's face was inscrutable, but his arm was tight around the baby's shoulder, as he, too, looked at mother, and awaited her answer to Nan.

Mother's voice trembled with deep feeling, as she exclaimed, "Joe, your 'women folks' are all against your business! For years I've prayed for strength to influence you to quit making drunkards, but it has taken our daughters, with their greater courage, to bring me to the speaking point. I am with Nan in this."

With a happy sob, Nan was in her mother's arms. Mr. Robinson put Doris down gently and began to walk the floor, thinking deeply. The maid entered to announce dinner, but Mrs. Robinson motioned her away, telling her to postpone the meal. Then Mr. Robinson stopped suddenly before Nan and her mother.

"I hate the business, too. I've always hated it!" he exclaimed. "But what could I do? As a young man, there was no other business for me but father's. When I was courting you, Jennie, I greatly feared you would turn me down because of it. After we were married, I found that it gave me the power to do so

AMONG OUR WORKERS

The Texas W. C. T. U. convention will be held at Houston, April 27-30.

The Evanston W. C. T. U. held its Frances E. Willard Memorial meeting in the reception room of National W. C. T. U. Headquarters. The program was participated in by Dr. Porter of Evanston, Miss Gordon, Mrs. Parks and Mrs. Hutchinson, who paid loving tribute to Miss Willard, and her work.

The New Philadelphia (Ohio) W. C. T. U. and Y. P. B. observed National Prohibition day, January 14, with an all day prayer and rally service. An excellent program was rendered in which all of the ministers participated, and a fine attendance of the best people of the town was secured. The young people and the Y. C. P.'s, under the leadership of Mrs. J. L. Guthrie, furnished musical numbers.

The W. C. T. U. of Martinsville, Va., was fortunate in the observance of Willard-tide this year. At the meeting previous to February 17 a program concerning the uses of the Willard Memorial Fund contained an account by the president of Mrs. Marmaroff and her work at Ellis Island. The local treasurer distributed small envelopes to the members present and forwarded others to those absent, asking, through an enclosed explanatory card, that every one should share in a self-sacrifice breakfast, February 17, and bring to the meeting the money equivalent of any luxury or other food done without. The response was most gratifying and sums varying from five cents to a welcome dollar note were received. Two pretty little school-girls became members. The treasurer found time to send an evergreen wreath tied with white ribbon for the Willard picture in the public school, where a country school fair was in progress.

As the beginning of an effort to drive the saloons from Kankakee, Ill., revival services under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. have been held in the Baptist church. On Ash Wednesday, Rev. Mary L. Moreland, National W. C. T. U. evangelist and pastor of the Congregational church of Mazon, Ill., conducted a Willard Memorial service. On the following day a co-operative missionary and temperance meeting was held, at which the various church missionary societies were represented and several of the pastors assisted, giving strong messages in the discussion of "Our Needs."

Miss Ellen M. Stone, National W. C. T. U. lecturer, addressed the audience while the judges made their decision at the grand gold medal contest held in Washington, D. C., February 19. Winfield Johnson, eleven years old, was awarded the medal for his delivery of the oration, "Where to Begin." The program was in charge of the Red Letter Day department, of which Mrs. Louise H. Earll is state superintendent. The Medal Contest superintendent co-operated by furnishing the seven contestants. On account of the large number of silver medal contests that have been held in the public schools during the past fourteen months Mr. E. L. Thurston, superintendent of schools, was invited to attend. In his reply he said, "I have learned with interest of the way these contests are working out, and I am inclined to believe that they are of genuine benefit to the pupils who take part in them, and those who are indirectly interested in them."

The service of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition as observed by the W. C. T. U. of Edgewood, Ia., began with a sunrise prayer meeting at eight o'clock, and closed with an evening meetings when a program of songs, readings and addresses was given. The morning and afternoon services followed the National W. C. T. U. program, concluding with a poster parade through the city at four o'clock, fifty school children leading the procession.

The board of education and teachers of Deshler, Ohio, were tendered a reception by the local W. C. T. U., Mrs. Kathryn D. Gebhardt being the guest of honor. On the day following Mrs. Gebhardt gave a talk on Scientific Temperance Instruction in the schools, as a result of which the scientific temperance charts will be used from the primary grades to the high school.

A union meeting in observance of National Constitutional Prohibition Day was held by the unions of La Junta, Swink and Holbrook Valley, Colo., in the Presbyterian church at La Junta.

The board of trustees of South Orange, New Jersey, has taken action to have enforced the law which prohibits the sale or giving away of cigarets or tobacco in any form to persons under eighteen years of age.

The Frances E. Willard union of Joliet, Ill., observed its seventh annual memorial meeting by presenting to "the little red school house on Washington street" a framed portrait of the renowned leader. A fine paper telling of the life and works of Miss Willard was presented by Mrs. Webster, and the other features of the program were of equal interest.

An executive meeting of the Delaware Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held in the Methodist Protestant church of Dover, February 4, with the president, Mrs. Lena H. Messick of Bridgeville, presiding. The child labor law was unanimously endorsed by the committee and the request was made that women be retained on the commission. September 24, 25 and 26 were selected as the dates for the state convention, which will be held in Harrington. At the close of the morning session a bountiful luncheon was served by the Dover union in the parlor of the church. At the afternoon session, J. B. Mills of Baltimore, the attorney for the Anti-Saloon League, spoke upon the temperance measures before the legislature.

The presentation of a picture of Miss Willard to the Fairfield (Fla.) school by the East Jacksonville-Fairfield union was an occasion of interest to the children and to visiting white ribboners and members of the Fairfield Mothers' club. The picture was accepted by the president of the Mothers' club.

Mrs. Ella A. Boole, vice-president-at-large of the National W. C. T. U. and president of the New York state W. C. T. U., gave several addresses at the institute of the Kent county (Del.) W. C. T. U. held at Wyoming, recently. National Constitutional Prohibition Day was observed by most of the unions of the state, the children being given a part in many of the meetings. An important executive meeting was held at Ellendale not long ago by the Sussex county W. C. T. U., the president, Miss Lillian Cade, presiding. The unions of Felton and Wyoming have each contributed $30 for the furnishing of a room in the Delaware Industrial School for Girls.

ALASKA'S FIRST TERRITORIAL CONVENTION TO MEET MAY 13-14

The first territorial convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Alaska will be held at Skagway, May 13-14. The occasion will be an historic one, for it marks a milestone in our progress as an organization in the far Northwest. Though rarely heard from, Alaska is struggling upward in the scale of social betterment, and it is confidently expected that at no very distant day the liquor traffic will be an outlaw in the Empire of the North. Sitka, the old Russian capital, is already dry under local option; saloons are closed on Sunday, by Federal law, all over the territory; and, through the petition of our W. C. T. U. leaders at Ketchikan and Juneau, the saloons of the first division were closed on the last two election days. Temperance workers and sympathizers have also contributed their quota of petitions to the National Congress for the Falconer bill for prohibition in Alaska, and for National Constitutional Prohibition.

MAY BE COFFEE

That Causes all the Trouble

When the house is afire, it's about the same as when disease begins to show, it's no time to talk, but time to act—delay is dangerous—remove the cause of the trouble at once.

"For a number of years," wrote a Kansas lady, "I felt sure that coffee was hurting me, and yet I was so fond of it, I could not give it up. At last I got so bad that I made up my mind I must either quit the use of coffee or die.

"Everything I ate distressed me, and I suffered severely most of the time with palpitation of the heart. I frequently woke up in the night with the feeling that I was almost gone—my heart seemed so smothered and weak in its action. My breath grew short and the least exertion set me panting. I slept but little and suffered from rheumatism.

"Two years ago I stopped using the coffee and began to use Postum and from the very first I began to improve. It worked a miracle! Now I can eat anything and digest it without trouble. I sleep like a baby, and my heart beats strong and regularly. My breathing has become steady and normal, and my rheumatism has left me.

"I feel like another person, and it is all due to quitting coffee and using Postum, for I haven't used any medicine and none would have done any good as long as I kept drugging with coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50 tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious, and cost per cup about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

In connection with the Frances E. Willard Memorial Day program of the Bellflower (Ill.) W. C. T. U., "The Life of Frances E. Willard," by Anna Adams Gordon, was presented to the public library of the township high school. Songs by children from the public school and a temperance address by Rev. Pull of Farmer City were interesting numbers on the program. The Bellflower W. C. T. U. sends The Young Crusader to each grade teacher of the town and has presented large framed pictures of Miss Willard to two of the schools. Under the leadership of Mrs. S. A. Brower the union is gaining new members and is a power for good in the community.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION PUBLISHING HOUSE

EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

IN MISSOURI'S SOUTHLAND

Jasper district, the banner W. C. T. U. territory of Missouri, is very much awake. The president, Mrs. J. T. Steele of Webb City, is striving for an increase of three hundred paid members this year. Mrs. La Mance was in the district in January, immediately followed by Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, National superintendent of Anti-Narcotics, and Rev. Berthe Bowers of Iowa, an expert on temperance and labor problems. She is the very one to get next to the miners and win them to prohibition. She will hold important meetings in Joplin, and the Joplin unions have been getting ready for her coming. Another wise move of Mrs. Steele's is to co-operate with woman's clubs and church societies in the four cities and numerous towns of the district. Mrs. La Mance addressed the Unity and Reciprocity clubs and the Baptist District Missionary association in Joplin, and a joint meeting of the unions of Webb City, Carterville, Oronogo, Prosperity and Tower of Light.

The liquor men passed over Howell county, with its live unions, but brought on a local option fight in Oregon county, by its side, an inland mountain county, where every W. C. T. U. had gone down. They did the same thing a little west of this, in passing over Stone county with its flourishing unions and attacking Taney county, the wildest and most mountainous in the state and where there was only one feeble union. Mrs. Coppage, an all-round campaigner, was hurried into Oregon county. She drove miles and miles and then some. She put in three unions, one at Alton, the county seat, and others at Koshkonong and Thayer. It was a well-fought battle and Oregon county has gone dry by nearly 700 majority. Mrs. La Mance could spare but a week for Taney county, but it was used to the limit. The worst roads in Missouri were at their worst, and every livery man but one charged extra for driving over them. In spite of mud, rain, snow and sleet, there were large audiences and much enthusiasm. We believe Taney county will go dry.

At Garber, the scene of "The Shepherd of the Hills," the speaker was entertained by "Old Matt" and "Aunt Mollie" of the story, and the characters are true to life. One of the neighbors hitched a span of strong mules to a strong spring wagon and literally "snaked" the lecturer over unbelievably bad roads, sideling, stairsteppy, steep, stumpy and ledgey, to the schoolhouse in sight of "the old trail." The road was too bad to return over before the night address, so after talking to the school, the speaker, school ma'am and the largest of the girls stayed there until the crowd came at night. A cold picnic feast spread out on the seats was thoroughly enjoyed. At night the schoolhouse was so crowded that every seat was full and farmers sat cross-legged all over the floor and in the aisles.

Hollister and Branson, strongholds of the enemy, were stormed. There was a revival in each town, but the evangelists not only gave up their services for the campaigner's appointments, but made rousing speeches themselves. Drives overland to Taneyville and Forsyth brought other leading towns into line, and two new unions were organized. Stone county had fine audiences wherever sleet did not hinder. Crane did itself proud, Galena ditto. At Galena, Mrs. Yocum, an old-time member who has never forsaken us, for more than sixty years a singer in the choir, sang for us. Not long since, Mrs. Yocum, her daughter, Mrs. Mary McCord, and the grandson, Charles McCord, sang a trio, alto, soprano and baritone.

Webster county had a series of meetings, and every one was a success. This county is as awake on equal suffrage as it is on prohibition. Prof. England had the entire high school of Rogersville take notes at the special suffrage lecture that was given. At Fordland, in this county, a little town of not over 500, in raising funds for state work, pledges were made by the W. C. T. U., the Y. P. B., the Christian Endeavor, the B. Y. P. U., both Sunday schools, and every member of the entire corps of teachers. What towns of its size can give a better record? Seymour, another small town, gained eleven new members. Marshfield, Niangua, Northview, all had enthusiastic meetings in spite of mud. Laclede and Phelps counties had flying visits as the speakers went through. Meetings were good. Other speakers will follow.

The Ozarks are full of minute men and minute women. They are ready for a battle to the death with the liquor traffic.

TEXAS W. C. T. U. ACTIVITIES

Special Correspondence

Mrs. Nannie W. Curtis, president of the Texas W. C. T. U., is on the wing, visiting unions and speaking to immense audiences. At Cleburne, although it rained, the Woman's club and missionary society gave her a fine reception and a large audience. In her home town, Waco, she spoke in the Presbyterian church, which was packed to the utmost, and many were turned away for want of standing room. In Tyler she had a fine meeting. In Terrell she spoke to a large audience and also to the public school pupils in their beautiful high school building just completed, and presented for the W. C. T. U., a large picture of Miss Willard. Mrs. Curtis goes so fast and does so much that not having an auto your correspondent cannot keep up with her. In Waco the Anti-Saloon League held a great convention at which Mrs. Curtis spoke on "The Woman's Part." The Waco W. C. T. U. has the promise that no more whisky advertisements are to be given away at the Cotton Palace Exposition. It seems that last year these were given to children.

Ennis women keep up their quiltings and comfort tackings to help their finances. Austin union is much interested in the Training School for Girls, also in the wages and general condition of working women. Fort Worth recently, in one week, held a rummage sale and a bake sale from which was realized something over $100. Mothers' meetings continue to improve in quality as well as quantity. Mrs. W. P. Lane, wife of the former state comptroller and candidate for governor, has returned to her home in Fort Worth and joined our union. Hon. W. P. Lane has stood by our organization in more than one hard fought battle for righteousness.

The superintendent of Medal Contests, Mrs. C. A. Crites, and her assistant, Miss Iva Gilbert, are doing such excellent work in their line that the writer is almost afraid to say that in one month Miss Gilbert held nine contests.

Recently Rev. George C. Rankin, D. D., the editor of the Texas Christian Advocate and one of the strongest men of our state, perhaps of the United States, passed away after a few hours' illness. Dr. Rankin was the founder of Home and State, as well as a Methodist minister and a strong prohibitionist. When our state convention met in Dallas several years ago the W. C. T. U., because of the help he always gave our cause, presented to him a handsome loving cup suitably inscribed. Until his death he loved to tell how he at one time introduced Miss Willard to an audience. A memorial to Dr. Rankin in connection with the Methodist University in Dallas has been started by Rev. J. D. Young. This will be a boarding house for poor boys who, as did Dr. Rankin, have to struggle for an education.

Two other Texas ministers who have been in sympathy with W. C. T. U. efforts and aims have recently been promoted: Rev. I. Z. T. Morris, who was in charge of the Texas branch of the Children's Home society, and who has placed in Christian homes more than a thousand children, and Rev. Homer T. Wilson, formerly of Fort Worth, whose lecture on "Frances E. Willard, the Uncrowned Queen," will be remembered. Mrs. E. M. Goode, a member of the Dallas union, has also been promoted. She lived and taught our principles and was a power for good.

RECRUITS FOR PROHIBITION FROM THE COLORED RACE

Mrs. Eliza E. Peterson, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Work Among the Colored People, writes most optimistically of the results of a recent visit to Indianapolis. She says:

"Mrs. M. A. Clark, Indiana's able superintendent of Work Among Colored People, with the co-operation of white ribboners of both races and the loyal-hearted ministers of the colored race, perfected arrangements for my two weeks' visit in Indianapolis, which resulted in a whirlwind campaign of rich seed-sowing and the most largely attended meetings among the colored people which I have ever witnessed in a city where there are so many things to attract the attention of the people. Ministers did not hesitate to give me an opportunity in their services for the presentation of the gospel of total abstinence and prohibition. Such wonderful white ribboners to help the earnest superintendent! Such wonderful ministers to encourage and to help financially the work among our people!

"Notable among those who testified that they would become total abstainers was Madam C. J. Walker, the philanthropist of her race, a woman of wealth whose richest possession is her heart of love for humanity. She declared that as a full member of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union she would do her best to help rescue man from the low estate to which he has fallen through the curse of drink. She at once took up the Loyal Temperance Legion work, with the able assistance of Misses Kelly and Barnes. In this same wonderful meeting, Mrs. Mollie Saunders, another fine woman, told how as a result of strong drink her boy lost his sight for a period of ten days, and through prayer and faith it was restored, but she had not before seen the need of joining the W. C. T. U. to help save other boys."

During her three weeks' campaign Mrs. Peterson delivered fifty-two addresses and distributed 30,000 pages of literature, as well as doing much personal work.

THE LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD
ANNA ADAMS GORDON

CLOTH, $1.50 MOROCCO, $2.50

Miss Willard's biography is an inspiring gift. I've given forty, I think, the last year or two and never have received more enthusiastic thanks, nor have I ever given books or other gifts which were more appreciated by my friends. One had it put into a high school library, another into a girls' dormitory, another read it to rest her before dinner, another just before retiring, to sleep on—for which hour she reserves her choicest reading, and so on.

THE ONE WAY OUT

much for your comfort that getting into something else seemed more impossible than ever. When the girls came, I gave up ever getting out of it, for there was so much I wanted to do for them. A man of my years cannot take up anything new. We shall just have to make the best of it, dears, and try to stifle the voice of conscience that, it seems, has been pleading with us all." He patted his wife's shoulder, and bent his lips to Nan's cheek.

"Oh, papa, how glad I am you hate it! Now I know you'll get out of it!" Nan exclaimed, and the mother, too, looked hopeful at this unexpected stand her husband had taken.

"There is no getting out of it," Mr. Robinson said wearily. "In these tight financial times, a change of business would ruin me. Let us say no more about it," and he reached for the evening paper.

"When a thing is wrong, papa, there is no moral excuse for its existence. You say we shall be ruined. Think of the many, many families which have already been ruined through your instrumentality. It is only fair that we should take our turn. The hard times are caused by the liquor traffic, as you yourself must know. The speaker today said that if all the dimes and nickels that pass over the saloon counters were kept in a vault and not put into circulation, in sixteen months there would be no dimes and nickels in the United States. I never knew before what misery we were causing to get luxuries for ourselves. I had never been told." Nan was crying now, and removing her gloves, she stripped off her rings, placed her bracelet and brooch on the little gleaming pile, and sobbed, "All bought with blood-money! I can never wear them again!"

Her mother put her arm around the girl's waist, and said, "I have had these thoughts so many times, dear. It is new to you, but I have often loathed the comforts I have, knowing the suffering caused to others through the sale of the poison which surrounded me with luxury."

Mr. Robinson was resting his head on his hand and the paper lay unheeded in his lap. He realized that a crisis had come, and his conscience approved, but the question of what to do loomed large before him. Finally he inquired,

"What did your lecturer suggest would become of all the men in this business if prohibition prevailed?"

"She didn't get that far, papa dear, but if you only decide to give it up, I am sure some way could be found for you to make a living. I will go to work, papa, so you will only have mama and Doris to provide for. I know I could clerk in a store, for I do so love to handle pretty clothes, and I know more about them than anything else."

The father's eyes were moist as he met Nan's eager look, and he said,

"You're so full of this, daughter, possibly you have an inspiration. Come, tell me if you have not thought of a way out."

With eager voice and sparkling eyes Nan told him of the vision of the way out which had come to her on the walk home with Marion.

"I thought that you could at once close the saloon, empty all the liquor into the river, and sell the building," she said. "We could move from this city which would always be haunted for all of us with memories of our sinful luxury. I think we ought to go to another place, so that Doris could grow up without having to face the stigma of being a saloon-keeper's daughter." At this the father winced, and the parents exchanged glances of intelligent understanding of what Nan must often have suffered in silence. Nan continued, "I think it would be right to borrow for the establishment of a new, clean business, but that which we would realize from the sale of the saloon, this house and furnishings, the auto and Doris' pony and cart, ought to give us a start. But, father, as soon as the new business were sufficiently established to spare the amount, I should favor putting it all into the treasury of some temperance organization to help rid the country of the evils of drink!"

"O Nan, Nan," her mother tearfully exclaimed, "God has inspired you with this plan. It is the way I have so often prayed about, the only way in which we can even approach restitution."

Nan's father put his hands upon the girl's shoulders, and gazing into her clear eyes, said,

"Thank God for a daughter with the courage of righteous convictions. Nan, mother, Doris, we are forever through with the saloon.

And Nan, happy and grateful, exclaimed,

"Thank God for a father brave enough to face all that will come to him in this fight!"

NATIONAL PRESIDENT SPEAKS AT KENOSHA (WIS.) FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL MEETING

The W. C. T. U. of Kenosha, Wisconsin, received a wonderful impetus in its work on the occasion of its Frances E. Willard Memorial meeting, at which Miss Anna A. Gordon, President of the National W. C. T. U., was the speaker. A large and representative company of women were in attendance. A tribute to Mrs. Mary C. Upham, former president of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U., was given by Mrs. Theodore Faville. "Saloons Must Go," written by Miss Willard, was sung by a chorus of boys, and a vocal solo was rendered most acceptably by Mrs. Fred Ingley. A reception followed the program, and many new members were added.

MRS. SAMUEL C. DICKIE ELECTED DISTRICT PRESIDENT

Mrs. Samuel C. Dickie, wife of the president of Albion College, has been elected president of the W. C. T. U. of the third district of Michigan. The Albion union, of which Mrs. Dickie has been president for a number of years, is the largest in the district, having a membership of over 400. It is known as one of the most progressive organizations in the state. Mrs. Dickie gives the secret of the success of the union in these words: "Every member in our organization is a recruiting officer, and I believe that it is their good work that has placed us so high in the ranks of the unions. We seldom hold a meeting at which one new member at least is not brought in. We are also catering to young mothers—and I do not believe that any union is complete unless there are several young mothers in the organization."

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should

You can be Strong, Vigorous — full of Life and Energy.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments—every organ of your body strong as nature intended.

You can have a Clear Skin.

You can have a Good Figure—as good as any woman.

You can increase or reduce your weight.

I no longer need to say what "I can do" but what "I HAVE DONE." I have helped 70,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.

What My Pupils Say:

"Every one notices the change in my complexion, it has lost that yellow color."

"Just think what you have done for me. Last year I weighed 216 lbs., this year 146, and have not gained an ounce back. I am not wrinkled either. I feel so young and strong, no rheumatism, or sluggish liver. I can breathe now, too. It is surprising how easily I did it. I feel 15 years younger."

"Just think! I have not had a pill or a cathartic since I began and I used to take one every night."

"My weight has increased 30 lbs. I don't know what indigestion is any more, and my nerves are so rested! I sleep like a baby."

"Miss Cocroft, I have taken off my glasses and my catarrh is so much better. Isn't that good?"

"I feel as if I could look every man, woman and child in the face with the feeling that I am growing—spiritually, physically and mentally. Really I am a stronger, better woman. I don't know how to tell you or to thank you."

Reports like these come to me every day. Do you wonder I want to help every woman to vibrant health and happiness? Write me your faults of health or figure. Your correspondence is held in strict confidence. If I cannot help you I will tell you what will.

My interesting book tells how to stand and walk correctly and contains other information of vital interest to women. You are welcome to it. Write for it. It is FREE. If you do not need me, you may be able to help a dear friend. I have had a wonderful experience and I'd like to tell you about it. I am at my desk daily from 8 until 5.

GOOD NEWS FROM GEORGIA

Woman's Missionary Conference Will Work For Prohibition

MRS. AUGUST BURGHARD

The following resolution, presented by the social service committee at the annual meeting of the Southern Georgia Methodist Woman's Missionary conference, in session at Cordele, Ga., February 5-9, was adopted by the conference (representing 8,500 women) without one dissenting vote:

"Whereas, the liquor traffic is the greatest evil in our land today, we recommend that a temperance committee be appointed in every auxiliary of the Woman's Missionary Society to co-operate with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and that every member, so far as practicable, be urged to become a white ribboner and use her influence in every way possible for National Constitutional Prohibition."

Rev. E. C. Dorgan, D. D., pastor of the First Baptist church of Macon, Ga., and president of the Southern Baptist Association, preached a series of Sunday night sermons in February on "Hopeful Signs in the Fight Against Alcohol," recalling the wonderful advance in sentiment and conditions since he introduced Frances E. Willard to a Southern audience thirty years ago.

It Does Not Pay

Seven (near) beer saloons in Macon, Ga., have decided not to operate because the business was not profitable. Educate, agitate against the use of beer.

A Leader in the Irresistible Conflict

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor is lecturing for a month in her home state, Georgia, where she attracts larger audiences than any visiting speaker of national reputation. She spoke twice recently in her home city, Macon, in two of the largest auditoriums in the city, which, even in a rain storm, were crowded.

The Anna A. Gordon L. T. L. of Macon (Mrs. M. B. Merritt, leader), held beautiful and elaborate Arbor Day exercises on February 12, planting a dogwood tree —the tree whose snowy blossoms are the glory of the southern forests in early spring. The Allie Kennedy L. T. L. (Mrs. Dr. A. Warlick, leader), had charge of the temperance Sunday exercises at the Tabernacle Baptist Sunday school in the morning and at Centenary Methodist in the afternoon. Both of these lively legions took part in the program at the Willard Memorial service, at which Rev. W. L. Pickard, D. D., president of Mercer University, delivered an eloquent address on "The Life and Influence of Frances E. Willard."

In the death of Mrs. Mable Evans, the Macon (Ga.) union has lost a valued member. She was rescued by white ribboners from an evil life and placed in Tabernacle Rescue Home, where she was converted and rapidly "grew in grace." The last five years of her life she was matron of the home and was used mightily in the salvation of many precious souls, among them a number of straying girls.

GREENE COUNTY DRY FOR THIRTY YEARS

Special Correspondence

Greene county, in the southwestern corner of the state of Pennsylvania, has been dry for thirty years, longer than any other county in the state, and during the last ten years three distilleries and one large brewery have been closed, and this year not a single license application has been filed. All this has been accomplished by remonstrating in the manner provided by law and proving violation of law under the so-called "model" but really infamous Brooks law, for in this county the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has stood upon the license court calendar against every retailer and manufacturer. Moreover the judges in Greene county have never posed as "dry." Many times they have been brought from license counties to preside, but they have been virtually compelled to withhold license under the provisions of the Brooks law, whose local option feature permits men and women of legal age to remonstrate. It is a hard and costly process, but we thank God for the victory.

A Call to Fearless and Faithful Service

In four states temperance and liquor forces are contending for and against state-wide prohibitory laws. In a fifth state a red-hot campaign is about to be precipitated, and we hereby call to fearless and faithful service every member of the Young People's Branch in the five great commonwealths of

South Carolina—Montana—Idaho—South Dakota—Ohio

To help hold prohibitory laws and to aid in their enforcement, we summon to fresh activities all young people in our grand prohibition states of

Maine	Mississippi	Oregon	Arkansas
Kansas	North Carolina	Washington	Iowa
North Dakota	Tennessee	Colorado	Idaho
Georgia	West Virginia	Arizona	Utah (bill awaiting governor's signature)
Oklahoma	Virginia	Alabama

To assist in creating a public sentiment that will demand and secure the coveted boon of state-wide prohibitory laws, we claim as Christian temperance soldiers every young patriot in

New York	Nebraska	California	Nevada
Delaware	Wyoming	Kentucky	Rhode Island
New Mexico	New Jersey	Texas	Wisconsin
Vermont	Illinois	Massachusetts	Connecticut
Pennsylvania	Maryland	Michigan	District of Columbia
Indiana	New Hampshire	Missouri
Florida	Minnesota	Louisiana

What is a campaigner's equipment for service? First, "the whole armor of God." Second, a whole-souled devotion in carrying out our admirable campaign plans. Talk, sing, pray, toil, shout, play for total abstinence and prohibition. Be a worker, never a shirker. Dear younger brothers and sisters of the Young People's Branch, we beseech you to be fleet-footed on the King's errands. Develop your own moral muscle, and inspire additional thousands of young people to become total abstainers, and active campaigners for prohibition.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS ADJOURNS—NUMEROUS APPROPRIATION BILLS PASSED BY SENATE—SHIP PURCHASE BILL DEFEATED—HOUSE DEVOTES LAST HOURS TO SPEECHES FROM PROMINENT MEMBERS—INVESTIGATION OF EXCISE BOARD SHOWS LIQUOR TRAFFIC FAVORED—BILL FOR ELLEN WILSON MEMORIAL HOMES PASSED BY BOTH HOUSES

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, Nat'l W.C.T.U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Interest in Washington this week has been centered on the Capitol, where the Sixty-third Congress has been holding all-day and some all-night sessions, preparatory to adjourning at noon Thursday, March 4. With the exception of a five weeks' recess, this Congress has been in continuous session since April 7, 1913.

The numerous appropriation bills, carrying over a billion dollars to pay the expenses of the government, were passed with the exception of the Indian and Postoffice bills, provision being made for them by continuing the appropriations of the present year. An attempt was made during the closing hours of the Senate to bring the ship purchase bill up again, Senator Fletcher making a motion for the Senate to ask the House for further consideration of the bill in conference, but, later, seeing that it was useless to press the bill further at this session, the Senator withdrew his motion.

In congratulating his colleagues afterward on the defeat of the ship purchase bill, Senator Lodge said, "This ends the greatest fight in the history of the Senate."

Ship Purchase Bill Defeated.

The defeat of the ship purchase bill led to the signing of a petition by forty-two Democratic senators just before the adjournment, calling on Senator Kern, chairman of the Democratic caucus of the Senate, to appoint a committee of five Senators to report to the Democratic caucus, at the beginning of the next session, a revision of the rules of the Senate which will permit the moving of the previous question. The Republicans will oppose this cloture on the grounds that it is un-American. To make this a success, the Senate committee must be able to convince the Senate that the freedom of the debate in that body is an evil and has been employed to defeat good ends. The whole effect of cloture will be to endanger liberty and freedom of discussion. This freedom of speech has saved the country from much dangerous legislation in the past.

While the discussion of the appropriation bills was going on in the Senate, the House was equally busy considering bills as they came from conference.

As the hour of adjournment approached in the Senate, a vote of thanks was given the Vice-President for the manner in which he has presided over the Senate, to which he replied, saying, among other things, "I know that I have made mistakes, errors, sometimes of the head, but, thank God, I can look you in the face and say to you that there has never been an error of the heart * * * * May God guard the republic and keep it long to the glory of humanity."

House Hears Speeches From Prominent Members

The House devoted its last hours to speeches from prominent members, Speaker Clark among the number, who, after praising the leaders for their excellent work, uttered a heartfelt, "God bless us every one." Women were singing in the galleries (which were packed to overflowing) and members were cheering when Speaker Clark declared this session of the House of Representatives "adjourned without date."

President Wilson had, as usual, gone early to the Capitol to sign bills passed by Senate and House during the last hours. He assured the legislators that, unless something unforeseen occurs, there will be no extra session this spring.

President Wilson Feels Gravity of Situation

One of the last acts of Congress was to pass a joint resolution, empowering the President to more rigidly enforce the neutrality of the United States, and to use the army and navy of the United States, if necessary, to carry out the purposes of the resolution. Although Congress has adjourned, President Wilson is so impressed with the gravity of the foreign situation and the possibility of complications that may involve the United States that he is unwilling to leave Washington at the present time. He may decide to abandon his trip to Panama in July for this reason and from the fact that Congress failed to provide the necessary appropriation for the expenses of such a trip.

The committee appointed by the Senate to investigate the excise board of the District, with Senator Sheppard as chairman, made its report to the Senate on Wednesday. The committee finds no evidence of corruption among the members, but scores them for "approving and encouraging plain evasion and perversion of the law." The report shows that the board has disregarded the underlying purpose of the law, favoring the saloon in every instance, and fostering the liquor traffic to the fullest extent, instead of acting in the interests of morality and good government.

A number of members of the Senate and House have promised to help, by speeches and otherwise, in the suffrage campaign. More than half these members are from non-suffrage states.

Modern Juvenile Court Proposed

A model juvenile court in the National capital, which would regard children coming within its jurisdiction, not as criminals, but as wards to be saved for the state, was proposed recently in a report to Congress by Attorney General Gregory. Children would not be called upon to answer the complaint of the criminal law, nor would they be arraigned nor put on oath with the requirement that they plead guilty or not guilty. The court would take testimony regarding the surroundings of a child, and after hearing, might allow it to remain at home, commit it to the board of children's guardians, or to a training school. Medical inspection, power to try adults who contribute to the delinquency of children, and authority for the juvenile court judge to certify exceptional cases to the criminal courts, are proposed.

Under the new law combining the revenue cutter service and the life-saving service under one head, commissioned officers of the new coastguard are now eligible for the national medal of honor awarded to military and naval men for heroic deeds. Under the old regulations governing the revenue cutter and the life-saving services this condition did not exist, and it was only brought about by a special amendment to the law which passed Congress recently. This gives great pleasure to the men of the coastguard service, as their deeds of heroism will now be fittingly recognized by the government.

Ellen Wilson Memorial Homes for Washington

The bill incorporating the Ellen Wilson Memorial Homes here in Washington was passed by both Houses of Congress before adjournment. This provides for the erection of a block of model sanitary houses in memory of Mrs. Wilson's personal interest in the housing conditions of the poor. These houses are to be erected by popular subscription by the women of the country. They will be rented to the poor at the lowest possible rental and will replace unsightly and insanitary houses that have been condemned by Congress.

A CHALLENGE TO THE Y. P. B.

DANIEL A. POLING

Millions of young men have been called to the colors and are fighting today under many flags on the battle-fields of Europe. They are dying, as they believe, for highest patriotism. From the frozen fields of Poland and out of the bloody trenches of Flanders their brave spirits are going up to God, whose Son is the Prince of Peace.

However we may reprobate war—pitiless, ghastly and craven, inflicting its costliest wounds upon the innocent and helpless—we will always treasure the courage and self-sacrifice of those who give themselves upon the altar of their country.

But the greatest battles are not the battles fought with sword and cannon. The more vital conflicts are the constructive conflicts of peace. The young manhood and womanhood of the United States are called to their colors today for the final battles of the world's greatest reform.

The Young People's Branch of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is playing a most important part in the educational and inspirational propaganda of the temperance and prohibition crusade. It is creating divisions of fighting men and fighting women who have been thoroughly educated as to the evils of alcohol and the liquor traffic and who are equipped in mind as well as in spirit to deal with the liquor problem.

What a day this is in which to live! What a privilege to face so great a task, conscious of the eternal righteousness of our cause, inspired by numberless past and present victories, and knowing as we do that ultimate triumph cannot much longer be delayed!

God is on our side! We cannot fail if we are true!

IOWA'S EMANCIPATION FROM THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

MRS. IDA B. WISE SMITH, President Iowa W. C. T. U.

Iowa, the seventeenth prohibition state by legislative enactment effective January 1, 1916; a resolution to submit a prohibitory amendment to the state constitution successful in its first passage, and the resolution for woman suffrage passed the second time and now ready for the vote of the men of the state—such is Iowa's situation today.

The prohibition history of Iowa covers a period of sixty years. The victories and defeats have been many, the defeats in their effect covering the longer periods of time.

In 1882, by a majority of almost 30,000, prohibition was voted into the fundamental law of the state. Because of a technicality, an error of the engrossing clerk, in no way affecting the sense of the measure, the amendment was declared unconstitutional. The next legislature sought to satisfy the demand of the people by passing a statutory prohibition law. This still remains upon our statute books. No provision was made for its enforcement, and the situation, especially in the river cities, grew to be very grave. Private individuals did very heroic work in law enforcement, sacrificing money, business, friends and, in some cases, even life itself. Iowa counts more than one martyr to the cause.

Political chicanery was at the bottom of it all and entered boldly here and gave to the state the most peculiar law ever placed on a statute book—a law authorizing, for a money consideration, the violation of another law. Its name—mulct—denotes its character. Webster says, "a fine, especially for a misdemeanor." Its provisions were local option in character. Great claims of good results have been made for it, but because of it twenty-two of Iowa's ninety-nine counties have the legalized saloon.

But this is soon to be history only. Through all the years the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and some other temperance organizations have not only sought to obtain resubmission, but also the repeal of the mulct law. Six years ago the Constitutional Amendment association was organized to deal specifically with this matter. Splendid local Business Men's Temperance associations have been formed to resist saloon petitions. The united efforts of these three organizations now bear fruit.

February 12, 1915, will be known as the high day in Iowa's reform history. In twenty minutes the senate passed favorably a resolution to submit constitutional prohibition to the voters. In the same time it passed a resolution to submit woman suffrage to the voters, and while we almost held our breath and wondered if we were dreaming, it proceeded to repeal the mulct law. Can you not imagine the spirit of Abraham Lincoln, who said, "when there shall be neither a slave nor a drunkard on the earth," abiding in benediction over such an act on his birthday!

Do not think this was an easy procedure. Every step of the way had been hotly contested, but the majorities were overwhelming.

The petition of the saloons of Des Moines, the capital, was in the courts, and the crowning glory was that on the next day the city council declared that on February 15 the saloons must close. The petition is defeated, the fixtures, many of them very costly, are removed, and last night I walked around and looked into vacant buildings where ever since I can remember I have seen the traffic carrying on its devastating work. It is accepted that this is the end in Des Moines.

The house of representatives decided to celebrate Washington's birthday in like manner. But the opposition of the liquor element grew so aggressive that on February 16 it passed the repeal of the mulct law and on February 23 the two resolutions.

The pressure was then directed to the governor to compel his veto of the repeal. But the loyal citizenship of the state rallied to his support and on February 25 he affixed his signature to the death warrant of Iowa saloons. There will be struggles yet, but Iowa has come to her own and will verify it by writing prohibition into her constitution "some glad day."

On that memorable evening the governor addressed a banquet of fathers and sons in Cedar Rapids. In behalf of the state Woman's Christian Temperance Union he was presented with beautiful flowers, and he paid a wonderful tribute to the organized white ribboners and their work in bringing about the result of the day.

The suffrage resolution having passed two legislatures now goes to the voters, probably in the primary election of 1916. Iowa is therefore a double campaign state.

The last legislature heard the seventeen-year-long prayer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union for the establishment of a woman's reformatory. The tax was levied and work will soon begin. Our bill this year related to commitments and establishment of industries, etc.

There seems an excellent prospect that the bill raising the age of consent to eighteen years will pass. In all this work Mrs. Anna M. Edworthy has been an efficient helper in the legislature.

UTAH WINS PROHIBITION BY GOOD MAJORITY

MRS. LULU LOVELAND SHEPARD, President Utah W. C. T. U.

Twenty-five years ago the beloved Frances E. Willard paid her first visit to Salt Lake City to organize the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and next September her faithful followers in Utah expect to celebrate their silver jubilee in a most fitting manner, for during all this quarter of a century the work she so carefully planned has been faithfully carried on, sometimes under discouraging circumstances and again under prosperous conditions.

Every bit of temperance sentiment in this state has been fostered by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, as we have had no Prohibition party and only five years of the Anti-Saloon League work. I have been present at every state convention except the first one, so I have been able to watch the growth of our organization and temperance sentiment as well, and the work now being brought to a culmination in the 1915 legislature is the victorious answer to the prayers and work of the faithful band of white ribboners.

Before our annual meeting in 1913, every minister in the state was asked for his co-operation in bringing about "Utah Dry in 1915," and almost to a man, we received their most hearty co-operation. President Smith of the Mormon church was consulted and he also promised me the support of his church. The next step was the organization of large committees in Salt Lake and Ogden to look after the election of men and women pledged to support our bill. The election of last fall resulted in our favor and the activity of our legislators in passing so many good moral bills has been the cause of much rejoicing on our part. Judge George F. Goodwin, who is fathering the bill in the house, was attorney-general of North Dakota when it secured prohibition, and we are proud of his work in Utah. For years he was closely associated with Judge Charles A. Pollock and we find in him one of our most helpful and loyal representatives.

The Wootten bill, as our prohibition measure is known, was introduced early in the session and passed the senate on February 12, with fifteen for and only three voting against it. With a large lobby continually at work, the liquor dealers have done everything possible to defeat our measure, but on March 1, after an all day's session, a vote was reached in the house with forty votes for and only five against, and we are rejoicing and praising God for the victory.

The Wootten bill is modeled largely after the West Virginia law and has some strong enforcement clauses. It is a good bill, but it will take time to show its defects and weaknesses. If the governor signs it—and we believe he will—it will become effective July 1, 1916, and Utah will be listed as the nineteenth dry state. It is hard to keep up with the prohibition movement in this day and age, we are making history so rapidly.

Liquor Advertising in Magazines Shows Great Decrease

The Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal church has just given to the public the result of a poll of the leading magazines on the question of liquor advertising. It publishes a list of over sixty "abstaining" magazines, not including women's publications, which it is assumed are all, or practically all, without such advertising.

This investigation has shown that the number of magazines refusing liquor advertising has increased during the last seven years at least fifty per cent.

In connection with the list of publications above referred to, there are given significant quotations from letters received from publishers of prominent periodicals. For instance, Outing and Golfers says, "We will not continue to carry liquor advertising when current contracts expire," and the advertising manager of the Strand Magazine says, "We have taken liquor advertising, but if I can get my way we will not in future."

"A very large percentage of the better magazines now refuse to print either whisky or beer advertising," comments Mr. Frank A. Arnold, president of the company which publishes the Countryside Magazine and Suburban Life, and he continues, "It has been found that magazines which adopt the policy of not printing whisky or beer advertising receive many times more favorable consideration by large national advertisers who wish to reach the best homes."

The Independent calls attention to the fact that it refuses advertisements of cigarets as well as whisky and beer, and the Youth's Companion makes the following emphatic comment:

"We do not think that the advertising of whisky or beer is half as injurious to the morals of the American people as the advertising of cigarets and tobacco. Not only are the boys of this country taught to smoke cigarets by the weeklies and monthlies of largest circulation, but the women are taking it up now. It's time that the Methodist Episcopal church and others take some action on this great evil."

Such high-class publications as the Atlantic Monthly and Scribner's do not accept advertising of strong liquors, but make an exception in favor of beer, ales and cordials. Quite a number of magazines which are not in the list below refuse whisky advertising, but accept beer. Some of them accept only advertising of malt tonics, which they do not class as an alcoholic beverage. A very few evade a direct answer. For instance, one says: "The ———— Magazine prints very few advertisements of any kind," and another, "No whisky or beer ads are in the magazine." But most of the replies are as frank as that of the American Sunday Monthly Magazine, which says: "Emphatically no!"

A few magazines express open hostility to the liquor traffic. One which accepts beer advertising says that each year several articles against the use of alcohol are given space. Physical Culture declares: "For over fifteen years it has been the policy of the Physical Culture Magazine to attack gluttony, alcohol, tobacco, drugs, prudery and muscular inactivity." And the publishers of Everybody's claim to be the pioneers in declining liquor advertising. They say:

"The Ridgway Company, Publishers of Adventure Magazine and Everybody's Magazine, has for many years made it a definite part of its policy not to accept the advertising of intoxicating liquors. In fact, Everybody's Magazine was the first publication of its kind to take a decided stand on this question."

"We have never accepted a liquor advertisement and have done all in our power to work against the accursed traffic," say the publishers of the West Coast Magazine.

The Out West Magazine, which is fast growing in circulation and influence, says that it actively supported the dry campaign in California last autumn, and will support it again when the next campaign opens. It outlines some highly interesting plans for effective participation in the forthcoming second battle for prohibition in the Golden State.

GREETINGS FROM THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. GENERAL OFFICERS

HELP OF THE YOUNG MEN AND WOMEN NEEDED

THE JOY OF SERVICE

MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, National Vice-President-at-Large

Not every state is engaged in a campaign, but every state needs the help of young people in the work for total abstinence and their active endeavors to make sentiment for National Prohibition.

The Young People's Branch is establishing young men and young women in temperance principles and this work is more valuable than any reformatory work can possibly be. Besides the need for the young people, they will find in the work of temperance reform what the joy of service means. Wendell Phillips once said, talking to young men, "Attach yourself to some great reform, even though an unpopular one, and fight manfully for it."

The trend of science, the emphasis on efficiency, the safe-guarding of public health, and even the preservation of our country emphasize the temperance reform as vital.

Every local W. C. T. U. should aim to enlist young women, even if it does not seem practicable to organize a Young People's Branch at once.

May the result of the observance of April 14, the birthday of Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, who gave so many years of her consecrated life to the work of young people, mean many new members in the Branch and increased interest in the campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition.

HELP IN OUR MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN

MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, National Corresponding Secretary

It is a great pleasure to meet you, dear young people, even on paper. If the membership campaign is as successful as it promises to be, we shall meet more Y. P. B. delegates at the National Convention in Seattle, Wash., than were ever before in attendance at one of these justly famous gatherings. And why should it not prove a successful campaign? One of the most hopeful signs of the times is that our young people are being grouped in great societies which are in touch with the vital movements of the day. No organization furnishes so great an opportunity or such inspiration as does the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Through it youth, with its optimism and its energy, is given a wide field for using its talents. Colleges are ready to assist in the progress of the temperance reform by their welcome of a well-informed, inspirational speaker. The young man or woman who can speak authoritatively on this live question is in great demand by Sunday schools, church societies of young people, and even by the missionary societies. Public schools are welcoming more and more temperance essay contests and debates. A constant stream of letters comes to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, asking for help along these lines. The Y. P. B. can become—and it will—that source of help for its school or community.

The need of training leaders for the Loyal Temperance Legion and Young Campaigners for Prohibition cannot be too frequently urged. It is not strange that as head of the department of organization, my first plea should be for increased membership; my second, for organized study of every phase of the temperance question, for there is nothing more dangerous than ignorance at work.

A SACRED MESSAGE TO OUR YOUNG PEOPLE

Written by MRS. L. M. N. STEVENS, for the Y. P. B. Campaign Edition, 1914

Loving greetings to you dear younger brothers and sisters of the Young People's Branch of the National W. C. T. U.

We know you are strong, courageous and obedient to the responsibilities crowding today upon you and upon all humanity-loving people. We look to you to aid in the development of our many departments of work. We confidently count on your help in furthering our great principles of total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state and nation. We believe you will faithfully endeavor to add to our membership and to strengthen and extend our organization.

We hail you as valiant fighters in the glorious struggle to secure National Constitutional Prohibition, and I am confident you will act well your important part in this wonderful campaign which is to end in victory.

It is a most blessed union we represent —a union of hearts whose desire is to overthrow the liquor traffic, a union of heads to devise the best and speediest way to do it, and a union of hopes that by 1920 this country will rejoice in nation-wide prohibition of the sale, the manufacture for sale, the importation, exportation and transportation for sale of all alcoholic liquors.

MESSAGE FROM FIRST WORLD'S AND NATIONAL "Y" SECRETARY

MRS. FRANCES J. BARNES, New York

A righteous cause may wage a peaceful warfare slowly but surely, but the long drills, the increase of knowledge and tactics, the work of the mothers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, lo! these many years, and the shout of the Loyal Temperance Legioners, "We shall grow up," together with the efforts of the brave young people who have grown up, have all combined to bring success for constitutional prohibition in many states.

There is inspiration in numbers and victories, but it is not time now to cease activity nor rest before our laurels are won. So with hearty good will and in unity of the spirit, I join my prayers most earnestly with yours and bid you press on and on until National Constitutional Prohibition shall be proclaimed from our Nation's Capitol at Washington.

WELCOME, NEW RECRUITS

MRS. ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON, National Treasurer

"I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, dear young comrades." You have our thanks for the splendid way in which you are helping supply the sinews of war in these wonderful days.

May you reach your membership goal and speed on far beyond it, giving us not alone the dues for our treasury, but far better—the new recruits who will help bring victory to state and nation.

HELP US PUSH THE BATTLE TO THE GATES

MRS. ELIZABETH P. ANDERSON, National Recording Secretary

It is a great privilege to be living in these days when we are seeing the consummation of the patient toil and sacrifice of the years that are past; when every morning paper brings news of victory; when the goal of National Constitutional Prohibition is in sight. It is a magnificent thing to be young in these days; to have the spirit, courage, enthusiasm and dash of youth.

We who have fought a score or more of years, salute you. We recognize in the Young People's Branch of the W. C. T. U. our trained reserves, our splendid reinforcements, and we depend upon you to help us push the battle to the gates and win National Constitutional Prohibition in 1920.

EQUIPMENT FOR SERVICE

MRS. SARA H. HOGE, National Assistant Recording Secretary

Our young people can do a great deal in campaign work. Every state should be doing campaign work, either for statewide or nationwide prohibition, or for both. Will you not help?

Plan parades, with attractive floats, and use stirring prohibition songs at all public and social meetings.

Most important of all—inform yourselves as to conditions in prohibition states and be ever ready to answer conclusively the oft-repeated assertion, "Prohibition doesn't prohibit."

Go out and enlist other young people to swell your ranks and let us all together give "Mother National" the best year's work she has ever known.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

"It is glorious to man a Lifeboat, but better to build a Lighthouse"

MRS. ROSS HAYES SCHACHNER, National General Secretary Young People's Branch, Evanston, Ill.

CAMPAIGN MESSAGE TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE

MRS. ROSS HAYES SCHACHNER

My calendar tells me it is February 22, the birthday of George Washington, and, therefore, a day long to be remembered by all true, liberty-loving Americans. What better time could there be to pen a "campaign" message to the young people of these United States who are enlisted in the name of God and Home and Native Land? Truly, ours is a patriotism of the highest order. And there is another day coming which shall be long remembered —the day which shall give to the United States of America National Constitutional Prohibition. That day is surely coming because in this "land where our fathers died, land of the pilgrim's pride" great forces of men and women for the sake of the common good and the common liberty are organized into a veritable Gideon's band to overthrow the chief foe of good and of liberty—the legalized liquor traffic.

Victory is coming, aye, that we know right well, but how soon it is to come may depend in large measure upon the enlisting of new recruits. The advance guard, in which marched Frances E. Willard, Neal Dow, Lillian M. N. Stevens and many others whose names are sacred to us now, has gone on before! The main body is now attacking the forces of the enemy. What an honor to be a part of the attacking force; to follow in the wake of such leaders as these! It is no longer a long distance fight; it is a hand-to-hand conflict between the forces of evil and the forces of right, and we must line up on one side or the other, for the count is being taken. It is a conflict worthy of noble men and women—it is a conflict worthy of the mettle and vigor of youth. Scarcely is the European war being watched with graver concern than is the war waged here in America on the ground of prohibition.

"Seeing, therefore, that we are encompassed about by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and run with diligence the race that is set before us." We have engaged, as it were, in a race during the month of April, because we know that competition fires the enthusiasm of youth, and we have set a few prizes before you, well knowing, however, that the all satisfying prize will be the consciousness of duty well done, and this prize shall be to all who run with diligence.

May April, filled with righteous, enthusiastic endeavor, but serve as a mighty impetus which shall spur us on until we reach the goal.

"My native country, thee,
Land of the noble free;
Thy name we love;
We love thy rocks and rills,
Thy woods and templed hills."

Do we love it enough to work and fight and pray for the overthrow of its greatest enemy—the liquor traffic? I think I hear you say, dear young people, "Of course we do," and I am sure you do. Then from this time forth, press on and on, enlisting others and yet others that by 1920 "the Star Spangled Banner in triumph shall wave, o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

WHAT ANY BRANCH MIGHT DO DURING THE MONTH OF APRIL

Are there in your community or neighborhood available billboards, barns, gates, fences, etc.? Then utilize them by painting thereon brief, telling statements which can be easily grasped or read by the traveler or wayfarer. In these days when we are hearing so much about "Safety First," why not print: "Sobriety First and Safety Follows," "Cut Out Booze, Safety and Success Follow," "A Saloonless Nation by 1920." It would be especially effective if such signs might be painted along interurban car lines, near railroad stations, postoffices or other places much frequented.

Secure some of the splendid posters of our National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, and have them placed in mills, factories, physicians' offices, rescue missions, etc. You will in this way compel men and women to read temperance lectures in one minute.

Have a Sunday school campaign in which members of the Branch will themselves visit the Sunday schools of the community, distribute literature to the young people, and endeavor to secure pledge signers and members at the close of the school. After such a campaign by the Branch of Liberty, Mo., forty-five young men in one class signed the total abstinence pledge.

Furnish leaflets to merchants of your town ("Temperance Talks for Busy People" are especially good) and ask them to include these in packages going to the country.

Order extra copies of this edition of THE UNION SIGNAL and circulate among young people, day school and Sunday school teachers, leaders of young people's societies, and others.

Save clippings from THE UNION SIGNAL, newspapers, current magazines, etc., read and discuss at meetings, put into scrapbooks, and place same in lumber camps, mines, mills, factories or any place where they may result in good.

Make an effort to have each member write an original campaign "yell" or rally cry. Offer a prize for the best composition.

Have a "peanut quiz" by writing on small slips of paper pertinent questions regarding the status of prohibition in this and other lands, and placing each question in an empty peanut shell tied up with white ribbon. The peanuts are distributed and each recipient reads the question contained therein. If desired, a small prize may be offered the one answering the most questions. Visitors may also be invited.

Secure permission to place posters in as many front windows as possible.

Make original posters by cartooning or printing on cardboard, or by cutting pictures and letters from magazines and pasting them on cardboard to illustrate a certain temperance truth.

All Branch members can use "Liquor Traffic Must Go" stickers (20 cents per 100) on personal correspondence and send campaign post cards (15 cents per dozen).

Any Branch can double its membership if each member will "Win One."

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S PART IN OREGON'S CAMPAIGN

MRS. LINNIE CARL, State Secretary

The value of young people in a prohibition campaign is sometimes underestimated. Having spent the greater portion of the two years preceding the Oregon election in active field work, and mostly with the young people, I have personal knowledge of some of the many things they accomplished. Had the young people been overlooked I feel safe in saying Oregon's victory could not have been so great. About two thousand of the young people of the state were organized for special campaign work. Full of zeal and optimism, what they do they do with a will. Their zeal demands consideration and their earnest appeals often touch the consciences of the wet voters, some of whom, at least, look back and consider how much better and more useful might have been their own lives had they not faced the ever present temptation to drink. The young people have a message of their own for which there is no substitute.

Y. P. B. FUND COIN CARDS READY

The Y. P. B. Fund coin cards are now ready. These contain space for ten dimes and can be obtained of Mrs. Fannie R. Danser, Skaneateles, N. Y., price 65 cts. per 100

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

NEWS ITEMS WHICH MAY BE HELPFUL TO BRANCHES AND SECRETARIES

All honor to Strong Y. P. B., Monmouth county, New Jersey! This is the Branch which won the pennant at Atlanta for having held the largest number of contests last year—twenty-nine in all, nineteen silver, eight gold and two grand gold. This Branch reports that at present there are four grand gold medals among its members and it hopes to make the number eight before Y. P. B. Day, when it will hold a diamond medal contest. Mrs. Carman, National superintendent of Medal Contest work, states that this will be the first Y. P. B. in the United States to hold a diamond contest with all contestants members of that Branch.

Mrs. Margaret C. Munns, corresponding secretary for West Washington, and National superintendent of Institutes, writes: "I have 'mothered' a Y. P. B. here in Seattle for the past fourteen years. It was organized as a result of the meeting of the National Convention in Seattle in 1899. I am glad to say it has had a continuous existence and has done a splendid work. Of course the same young people have not remained! Many of them have families of children now." And so the good work goes on. We trust Branches will "spring up like grasshoppers" in West Washington after the 1915 convention.

By mistake the name of Mrs. L. B. Hubbs, Dalton, Ga., the new general secretary for that state, was omitted from the Year Book. Mrs. Hubbs is laying splendid plans for young people's work in Georgia this year. In a recent letter to her state paper she seeks to emphasize the study course as follows: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be reproved." "The lack of efficiency is the greatest hindrance we suffer in our work. We can not interest others until we ourselves are well informed." In an appeal to W. C. T. U. presidents Mrs. Hubbs further writes: "It matters not how efficiently the work is conducted, there must be great loss in the end unless,in the meantime, there are trained recruits to carry on the work begun. 'It is better to train ten workers for service than to do the labor of ten workers yourself.'"

A most interesting program contest has been conducted by the Y. P. B. of Penn Yan, N. Y. On December 14 the young men rendered the program with appeals for prohibition and suffrage, numbers by the chorus with triangle accompaniment, humorous readings, and a presentation of the study, "Does It Pay," using blackboard and readings. We have not heard the decision of the judges which was to have been rendered after the young ladies had given their program.

In a letter to the Minnesota White Ribbon, the state Y. P. B. secretary, Miss Edna Larson, writes: "Branches are springing up like magic. Everybody is talking Y. P. B. I received six letters at one time asking how to organize and carry on Branches." Miss Larson further writes of a certain Branch whose members earn their dues together.

A most interesting little paper which comes to the desk of the general secretary at regular intervals is the Pennsylvania Joy Bells. It is a bulletin of plans and a messenger of good tidings to the Y. P. B's of Pennsylvania. Joy Bells seems a most fitting name for such a splendid paper.

Mrs. Althea G. Quimby, president of the W. C. T. U. of Maine, writes encouragingly of a brand new Y. P. B. at Gardiner, Maine, which is soon to be visited by Miss Winchester, the state Y. P. B. secretary.

The spirit of co-operation is most beautifully exemplified in a letter to the Wesleyan Advocate, the official organ of the North Georgia Methodist Conference from Miss Kate C. Pitts, conference second vice-president of the Epworth League. Miss Pitts urges the co-operation of Leaguers with all social agencies working for the prevention of vice and the uplift of humanity. She especially urges leagues to adopt the resolution favoring the Sheppard-Hobson bill, and to secure from National W. C. T. U. headquarters suitable literature for programs and distribution, emphasizing, "A Prophetic Message" written by Mrs. Stevens. Miss Pitts further urges the Social Service committees to lead the leagues into "becoming intelligent, progressive prohibitionists," and closes by saying: "Shall the North Georgia Conference Epworth Leagues go on record in this matter? The leagues can not afford to miss the manifold blessings sure to follow such concerted action."

The West Park Branch of St. Louis, Mo., has been requested by the pastor of the West Park Baptist church to assume charge of the temperance meetings of the Young People's Union which occur quarterly. The young people will comply and are now planning interesting programs for these meetings.

REMEMBER

That the third prize offered by the National W. C. T. U. to the Y. P. B—$10 in UNION SIGNAL subscriptions—is to be awarded the state securing the largest number of paid-up members during the month of April (names for subscriptions to be furnished by the state secretary), and that the National general secretary will award suitable prizes to the county Y. P. B. secretary organizing the most new Branches during the month and to the individual member anywhere in the United States securing during the month the most new paid-up members. It is desired, so far as possible, that the Birthday Post Cards to be secured from Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner, 5025 Maple avenue, St. Louis, Mo., be used in sending the names of new members to the National secretary in order that they may be used for demonstration purposes, but if these are not used the names must at least be certified by the local treasurer and reported before May 15.

That "I Won One" buttons should be presented at or before the end of the month to all who have gained new members during the month—a button for each member gained. Price, 3 cents each; 2 for 5 cents; in lots of 25 or more, 1 cent each. Order of Mrs. Schachner.

That a collection for the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund, the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund, or the Y. P. B. Missionary Fund should be taken at each meeting.

INTERSTATE CAMPAIGN CONFERENCES

The National W. C. T. U. General Officers have arranged a W. C. T. U. Interstate Campaign Conference for the Southern states, to be held in Jacksonville, Florida, March 24 and 25. Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, assistant recording secretary of the National W. C. T. U., will preside and Miss Minnie E. Neal, president of Florida W. C. T. U., will be associated with Mrs. Hoge in the conduct of this conference.

Plans for campaign conferences are a new departure for the National W. C. T. U. It is hoped such meetings will create added enthusiasm for all lines of W. C. T. U. work, while primarily promoting campaign methods and law enforcement plans.

A second conference for the group of states in the Northwest will be held at Boise, Idaho, April 7 and 8. Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford, state president of the Colorado W. C. T. U., will represent the National organization at this meeting, and Mrs. Nettie R. Chipp, president of the Southern Idaho W. C. T. U., will ably assist in local arrangements.

The holding of similar conferences in other sections of the country is now under consideration.

LIQUOR MEN FEAR COLLEGE VOTE

No greater compliment could be paid the college students of the nation than the efforts of the liquor interests of Wisconsin and Minnesota to deprive student voters of their right of franchise. It is an eloquent testimony to the commendable part played by them in prohibition campaigns, local and state. In the legislatures of Wisconsin and Minnesota bills have been introduced by the terms of which the legal residence of every student in any educational institution of the state, who is in any degree dependent upon his parents for support, shall be the home of his parents. Every such student will have the right to vote only at the home of his parents. This means that those students who are voters will be deprived of their franchise, not only in local elections, but in state and federal as well. In order to vote at the homes of their parents, they would have to reside there at least ten days prior to the election, something which would be obviously out of the question. As a matter of fact, if these measures become laws, they will deprive the students of a vote.

Naturally the indignation of the student body has been aroused by the introduction of these bills, and the students of the University of Wisconsin, at Madison, have already taken measures to defeat the one introduced in their legislature. The Daily Cardinal, a student publication of that university, refers in the following emphatic fashion to the proposed measures:

"This bill evidently aims to rule intelligence out of elections. Are we going to stand idly by and permit the precious right of suffrage to be taken from us? Without organized opposition, this bill may conceivably secure the requisite number of votes for passage. To defeat the bill we must get our point of view before the legislature. An ignorant, morally debauched hobo can cast a ballot in Madison, if he has been in Wisconsin for one year and been a resident of the precinct for ten days. Yet this bill would deprive the relatively intelligent student voter of the right to vote on the same terms."

A petition against the passage of such a bill has been widely signed; students have written to friends and relatives in every part of the state and meetings are being held in the interests of the movement. The liquor interests will soon discover that they have stirred up a veritable hornet's nest and aroused in students who had no pronounced convictions on the drink question, an aggressive antagonism which will count for much when Wisconsin enters her campaign for statewide prohibition.

The action of the liquor men in these two states ought to be a challenge to the students of the educational institutions of every state to demonstrate to the world that they, as a body, are precisely what the liquor men have shown they believe them to be—intelligent, conscientious enemies of John Barleycorn.

GOVERNOR CLARKE'S SHOWER OF TELEGRAMS

If Governor Clarke of Iowa had had any intention of vetoing the Clarkson bill repealing the mulct law, the shower of eloquent appeals in the form of telegrams received by him would certainly have led him to decide not to take such action. As reported in the Des Moines (Iowa) Leader, messages by the hundreds came pouring into his office from business and professional men, educators, heads of organizations and individuals.

"I have five boys. For God's sake sign the bill," wired a Waterloo business man.

"We feel that the best interests of Waterloo will be protected if you sign," was the message of the Association of Charities of the same city.

"As a grocer and a coal dealer I favor the mulct law repeal," read another telegram.

"May the Almighty Father guide the governor's pen these days," was the plea of the editor of the Farm and Home.

"In the name of humanity screw down the lid on that coffin by signing the mulct repeal as it is before the effluvia arises therefrom," was the wording of one message.

"Can the prayers of a redeemed drunkard help you to sign the mulct repeal bill?" was the query of one citizen.

The traveling men of the state were well represented among those making contributions to the "shower." The president of the National Gideon Association, an Iowan, wired the governor not to listen to the liquor interests, but for the sake of the citizenship of the state to sign the bill.

ANOTHER ARGUMENT FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

Temperance advocates see in the recent decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the Kirmeyer liquor case only another argument for National Constitutional Prohibition. Kirmeyer went across the river into Missouri, established a warehouse there, and continued to deliver beer in Kansas. The Kansas Supreme court held that his removal was a mere device to evade the Kansas liquor law, and that the trade was not interstate commerce "in good faith." The U. S. Supreme court held that Kirmeyer was entitled to protection for his trade as interstate commerce and dismissed an injunction issued by the Kansas Supreme court.

So popular was the issue of February 11 in which appeared a number of programs for the young people's work, that it was soon exhausted. By special request we are reprinting in this number some of the most important of the program material.

HOME-GOING OF MR. STEVENS

On March 3, after a brief illness during which his beloved daughter, Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, was by his side, Mr. M. Stevens of Portland, Maine, passed on to the Homeland not far away. Among the treasures in Frances E. Willard's Den, the sacred shrine in Rest Cottage, is a pretty, attractive picture of a fine old colonial home. In Miss Willard's characteristic handwriting is inscribed, "Stevie's Home in Maine—A Weary Woman's Rest." It was in this substantial home eighty-two years ago that Mr. Stevens was born—of a family whose honorable and God-fearing ancestry can be traced through many generations. It was here on Friday, March 5, 1915, that the last service in his memory was held.

It is not quite a year since Mr. Stevens, mourning with profound grief the earthly loss of his wife, our late beloved president, Lilian M. N. Stevens, was solaced by hundreds of tender messages sent by sympathetic white ribboners from all over the world.

Mr. Stevens' magnanimity, his unselfish joy in the service Mrs. Stevens rendered to humanity through her activities in the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, are well known to a large circle of friends. Since his great loss, his most frequent written and spoken message to those long associated with Mrs. Stevens has been, "Do not forget to give my love to all the white ribboners." In coming close to them he seemed to be in touch with her whom he so sorely missed. For him the light of the home so rich in beautiful memories and in bountiful hospitality had gone out forever, and during his brief illness, with pathetic earnestness, he repeatedly said, "I want to go Home."

In the prohibition campaigns of the state of Maine, and in all the W. C. T. U. work of the world, Mr. Stevens was always deeply interested. In his own city ward, he was often the first voter at the polls, and was a great help in securing new friends and voters for the prohibitory law and its enforcement. He will be greatly missed, and the loss of the two who have made the century-old home a beacon light for temperance and reform leaders and for the friendless and lonely, seems irreparable. The tenderest sympathy of a great host of white ribboners is extended to the now doubly bereft daughter, our own beloved comrade, Gertrude Stevens Leavitt.

TRIBUTE TO MR. STEVENS

The high esteem in which as a citizen and business man Mr. Stevens was held is voiced by one of Maine's leading papers, the Portland Evening Express. An extract from the tribute in the issue of March 4 follows:

"The business associations of Mr. Stevens were connected with Portland in the early sixties and even before. He was a member of the once noted salt packing firm of Stevens & Co., William H. Stevens, a nephew, being the only survivor of those early days of business activity. The company owned and operated salt mills, the headquarters of the business being on Commercial street.

"Mr. Stevens was a good business man, and he showed his astuteness in many ways. The price of cloth of which bags in which salt was shipped were made, soared with other manufactured products during the civil war, and Mr. Stevens showed his resourcefulness by conceiving the idea of shipping his product in wooden boxes. The plan was adopted, and after the price of cloth dropped following the close of the war and there was a return to more normal prices, the wooden box continued to be used as the more desirable means of shipping the product. Other dealers followed the practice of this firm by using the same means of shipping in wooden boxes. Mr. Stevens was recognized by all as the originator of the plan, and his firm the first to use it.

"Another way in which Mr. Stevens showed his business acumen was in seizing opportunities for advancing the interests of his business in a way that would give permanency to it.

"All through his life Mr. Stevens took more than an ordinary interest in the politics of his home city, his state and the nation. Those who knew him personally state that he was a politician in ability, but he always chose to keep in the background excepting as he without reserve gave of his efforts to secure the support of men and measures in which he believed. His advice was often sought, and even to the last state election he was determined in his effort to do all he could for the support of the side which he espoused. At half past five election morning, with his grandson, Ralph Ames Leavitt, he started out by automobile to take voters to the polls and lend what support he could in bringing out a good vote in his voting precinct.

"As a temperance advocate Mr. Stevens had always been more or less prominent and pronounced. He took pride in his personal acquaintance with some of the great temperance leaders, among them Gen. Neal Dow, Miss Frances E. Willard, Miss Anna A. Gordon, the president of the National W. C. T. U., who in this position succeeded Mrs. Stevens, for sixteen years the head of the organization.

"Mr. Stevens married Mrs. Stevens in 1867, and throughout her active life in the temperance work, he seconded her every effort. As promotion came to her and success in the task which she undertook there was no one more pleased than the husband at home. He was an advocate of the ballot for women, and for many years took the keenest interest in following the progress of the movement."

THE UNION SIGNAL AT HOME

In the large, sunny, editorial rooms of THE UNION SIGNAL the National W. C. T. U. Headquarters "family" gathered at noon on March 1 for a simple luncheon, and for the observance of UNION SIGNAL DAY, the birthday of Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens. Miss Anna A. Gordon, editor-in-chief of THE UNION SIGNAL, conducted sympathetic and appropriate exercises. Brief quotations from Mrs. Stevens' addresses, typewritten on the back of dainty cards bearing her picture and the message, "The Blessed Tie," were read in turn by the assembled workers. To each card was attached with a bow of narrow red ribbon a red carnation, red being the day's colors. The General Officers and THE UNION SIGNAL and Publicity department heads participated in the Red Letter Day program. An acrostic descriptive of the sterling characteristics of our promoted leader and comprising the letters of Mrs. Stevens' name, was given by Miss Gordon as follows:

S—STRENGTH; sympathy
T—TOLERANCE; thoughtfulness
E—EAGERNESS; earnestness; encouragement; endurance
V—VALOR; veracity; vigor
E—ENTHUSIASM (God in us); enterprise; energy
N—NOBILITY (dignity and high-mindedness)
S—SAGACITY; sanity; sincerity

A telegram of greeting was sent from the meeting to Mr. Stevens, to Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, and to a sister of Mrs. Stevens.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

PUT IT THROUGH!

Something that you want to do?
Put it through!
You can do it if you will,
Think so now, and think so still
In the doubt and failure hour.
Strong desire will summon power.
To your wish be bravely true—
Put it through!

Has a vision come to you?
Put it through!
Never mind what others say.
All the world will come your way
Once you make the thing you mean
Stand out bold and firm and clean.
If you start it, finish, too—
Put it through!

Does your way seem queer and new?
Put it through!
Seek no model—have no fear.
What you are, is first time here.
Keep your dream before your eyes
In your earthly enterprise.
Live the life that's born in you—
Put it through!

"IF THEY ALL HAD A VOICE"

A clever cartoon in a leading cosmopolitan daily, represents a warlike figure presiding over a great convention—composed of rulers, soldiers in full uniform, women and children. "All in favor of continuing the war, say aye!" cries the presiding officer, who wears a helmet and all the accoutrements of war. A conspicuous row of masculine, crowned potentates seated in private boxes, are the only ones who respond, each one eagerly crying, "aye;" The negative is not put, and the gavel, grasped in a powerful fist, pounds the desk as the sanguinary president shouts, "The ayes have it!" Vast multitudes crowd the convention, but they are absolutely voteless. The women, the soldiers and the children have no voice. "If they all had a voice it would be different," is the caption of this cartoon—that so strikingly teaches a great truth.

In order to give power and pre-eminence to the moral forces of the home, the voice of the home needs to be heard. It should be a vital factor in the decisions of government. In the homes of this nation hundreds of young men and young women are engaged today in constructive study—the study of governmental and patriotic questions. The things that damage, demoralize, and eat out the life of the nation must go! Already the voices of the young men and young women in eighteen prohibition states have been heard. From the remaining thirty states the deadly liquor traffic that destroys more lives than "war, pestilence and famine combined" must be driven out. All those against it, say NO! Young people, let your clear, ringing, protesting voices be heard! Help keep our country in peace, and give to it the priceless boon of statewide and nationwide prohibition.

SOCIAL MEETINGS AND RED LETTER DAYS

Dear Young People:

The department of Social Meetings and Red Letter Days should be a great help to you in educating public sentiment to the standard of total abstinence and prohibition, in gaining members, and in making this nation, even before 1920, "A Saloonless Nation."

April 14, Young People's Branch Day—the birthday of Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, our first National and World's "Y" secretary—should be observed by holding a meeting in every Branch at which should be read her life sketch prepared by her personal friend, Mrs. F. S. Evans, and published by your National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Social Meetings and Red Letter Days. The booklet may be purchased from Mrs. Tomlinson or from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Illinois. Price, 10 cents.

Yours to assist,

MRS. MARY DAVIS TOMLINSON

212 E. 7th St., Plainfield, N. J.

ROUTE-MAKING FOR ORGANIZERS

ROSE A. DAVISON

At the Atlanta National W. C. T. U. convention the organizers and lecturers thought it well to call the attention of route-makers to certain conditions that make for success or failure in arranging public meetings. For this purpose they wish to recommend the use of such leaflets as those prepared by Mrs. Sara H. Hoge and Mrs. Silena M. Holman, to be enclosed in letters sent out by state, district, or county president, or secretary, to the local unions to which a speaker is to be sent. By underscoring certain paragraphs in these leaflets, or by letter, the local unions should be taught the importance of advertising and having all details well arranged before the meeting. Circumstances do not always warrant a lecturer going into a town and advertising her meeting after she arrives, as one plucky woman did last summer, by means of a "tin band" (that is, a crowd of street urchins pounding on tin pans and buckets!)

If the route-maker does not become familiar with map and time-tables, when making appointments, she is apt to find that the speaker is left to sit half the night in a waiting room at some little junction point where it is impossible to get any train for her destination until it is too late. First, it is of utmost importance to know positively that the trip you wish the speaker to make is possible, and, second, that it is practicable. Night travel and very early morning trains should be avoided if the worker is to lecture every night.

Organizers need to be supplied with a copy of the state paper, a report, state hand-book and other literature giving special state plans. They appreciate very much, also, having sent them as early as possible a list of appointments, including the name of correspondent, or the hostess, for each place, and a little information regarding the town. The name of a town in a strange section means nothing to the organizer and it is far better for her to know before she arrives whether her meeting is to be a reception among city people, or whether she is to be taken to a country schoolhouse over muddy roads where a reception gown would be decidedly out of place. A clear, definite outline of plans prevents many difficulties.

PRIZES FOR BEST CARTOONS

At the National W. C. T. U. Convention at Atlanta, Ga., Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., offered a $25 prize for the best cartoon on any phase of the liquor question, d awn by a high school boy or girl, and asked that local, county or district and state contests be held. It is her hope that this may be made an annual prize, the awards to be made at the National Convention, where all cartoons may be exhibited. In Kentucky as many as six contests in each district are required.

The National superintendent of the Christian Citizenship department has offered a prize of $35 for the best cartoon drawn by a college student.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

The Baroness de Laveleye, president of the Belgium W. C. T. U., is working in the Belgian Field Soldiers' Hospital at Dunkirk in the north of France. She is well and very busy, writes Miss Agnes E. Slack, honorary secretary of the World's W. C. T. U.

The white ribboners of Lehigh county, Pa., have this year published in each of the five local papers, as a paid advertisement, the names of signers of applications for licenses in the city of Allentown. The liquor interests have retaliated by publishing the names of remonstrants in the county, and the fight is on.

Framed pictures of Miss Willard were presented by the Kendrick (Fla.) W. C. T. U. to the church and school of the community on the occasion of the memorial service to Miss Willard on February 23. Arrangements have been made by this union for a medal contest in Fesenden academy, one of the largest colored schools under missionary support in this section.

A number of very successful contests have recently been held in Iowa. The last three reported the following respective receipts: $32, $25 and $40. One of these contests was held in a country place where there was only a store and a postoffice. In addition to the field contest workers the state makes use of the services of Miss Richmond of Gibson, Ill. In a new country union she recently trained two classes, every member of which signed the pledge. She hopes to organize an L. T. L. and a Y. P. B.

The president of the Oklahoma W. C. T. U. writes that on one day, framed pictures of Frances E. Willard were presented to six schools of Stillwater, Okla. Are the schools of your city supplied with a picture of the great leader, and have you presented to your public library a copy of "The Life of Frances E. Willard," by Anna Adams Gordon?

Those who attended the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day meeting of the Fitzgerald (Ga.) W. C. T. U. at the Christian church found the platform furnished as a cosy sitting room, decorated with potted plants and flowers. The chief feature of the program was "An Evening with Frances E. Willard," published in THE UNION SIGNAL of January 21, which was rendered by members of the North Methodist church. Other numbers on the program were the quiz, "Frances E. Willard," by the "Sunbeams" of the Baptist church, quotations from Frances E. Willard by a boys' class of South M. E. church, and the reading, "How Still She Stands," by a young girl. Special music included the solos, "Victory," and "Won't You Come Home Sober, Papa," and the quartet, "Wine is a Mocker." A generous sum was realized.

MASSACHUSETTS' UNIQUE CAMPAIGN

KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON, President Massachusetts W. C. T. U.

In all states and in all communities "conditions are peculiar," if the verdict of their citizens is to be accepted. We who have been at the forefront of the battle in many parts of the field have come to accept those words as a grim joke. I know at least a hundred towns or cities which are "the hardest places in the world for temperance work." Probably every other state president or National worker knows an equal number. In vain does logic affirm that there can be but one "hardest." Each community is sure that itself is It! Really the one peculiarity not as yet discovered would be that section of the nation which should boast that it was not "peculiar."

And yet we must all admit a foundation of real truth in the hackneyed statement. No two states, no two communities meet exactly the same conditions; in no two can the selfsame methods be trusted to produce similar results. Other things being equal those who live in a given community ought to be the best judges as to what would work for its highest interests. It is not to be wondered at that they feel this and that they often place restrictions upon the methods to be employed by those not "to the manner born." And yet, who of us has not seen a perfect stranger enter a community and proceed at once to shatter all preconceived opinions as to what would or would not "do" in that particular section? Sometimes the plea of peculiarity is only another name for undue caution or unrecognized cowardice.

We grant all this and yet dare to claim that Massachusetts is a peculiar place for certain forms of white ribbon activity, more especially those forms which are claiming our present best endeavors, namely, statewide and nationwide prohibition of the liquor traffic. Local option has been considered for so many years the one perfect method of dealing with the liquor problem that any doubt or criticism as to its effectiveness seems to the majority to savor of treason. Nothing can be hoped from the state legislature since the fixed policy for several years has been to make no change in the license law and to grant no concessions either to friend or foe. The Prohibition party is a mere handful in the state, brave in its agitation, but powerless to effect results. It becomes clearly manifest, therefore, that a campaign for prohibition in the Old Bay state, if it is to accomplish anything, must be planned along new lines. Such a campaign is in process of evolution. Let me unfold the tale!

The basic thought emanated from the Prohibition party and is not a new one, but is a modification of the plan already tried with but small success for years, namely, an effort to secure the signatures of at least fifty thousand voters to a pledge to vote only for men nominated by a party which will put a straight prohibition plank in its platform and nominate a candidate for governor who will stand openly for the principle and policy of prohibition. The unique feature appeared when William Shaw, general secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, consented to allow his name to appear at the head of the ticket providing the following paragraph was inserted in the pledge:

"As this is a movement for the recognition of a principle rather than the success of a person or party, it is understood that, in the event of the recognition of this principle and the insertion of an unequivocal state and National Prohibition plank in its platform by either of the dominant political parties, and its acceptance and advocacy by its candidate for governor, Mr. Shaw will withdraw his candidacy, and the signers will be released from their specific pledge and will be free to vote for the candidate so pledged to prohibition."

It is too early to prophesy results from this movement, but one thing is already manifest, it will mean a tremendous shaking up in partisan camps and such an advertisement of the principle and policy of prohibition as the Old Bay state has not known since its constitutional amendment campaign of 1888. Already the movement is assuming large proportions. Already it is exciting strong opposition from both the liquor traffic and from partisan politicians. Not all the friends of the temperance reform are united as to its wisdom, but the vast majority are standing by what we believe is the one definite challenge it is possible for us to make with any hope of attracting attention. In no state in the nation have temperance and prohibition interests been more relentlessly sidetracked than in Massachusetts. If nothing else comes of this movement, we shall at least have come into the open with a policy rather than a petition.

Of Mr. Shaw's fitness for the position of governor there can be no question. He is a self-made man in the very best sense of the word and has made himself along highest lines. He is known all over the world in his official capacity, is a forceful writer, a fervid, eloquent speaker, a master of assemblies, a born leader. Should the seemingly impossible transpire and he become governor of Massachusetts, he would make a governor of whom any state might well be proud and would take high rank even in the brilliant line of prohibition governors the nation over.

We are quite well aware that this plan of campaign may be without value to any other state, which fact brings us to our original proposition that Massachusetts has "peculiar conditions." No less an authority than Richmond Pearson Hobson has aptly characterized it as "the most rum-doped state in the nation." That characterization exactly fits the situation. We may not be as rum-soaked as are certain other states, but we are rum-doped, and the mind and conscience of our citizenship are necessarily lethargic for this reason. If the William Shaw campaign does not arouse them, nothing can and Massachusetts, the home of the pilgrims, must be left to be dragged into the goodly land of prohibition by the votes of states with clearer vision. Will not the white ribbon sisterhood, the nation 'round, join with special fervor in the prayer so often uttered: "God save the commonwealth of Massachusetts."

LEGISLATIVE NEWS FROM MICHIGAN

MRS. E. L. CALKINS, President Michigan W. C. T. U.

A statewide prohibition bill was introduced in the Michigan legislature by Senator Straight, on March 30. The senate committee of the whole had spent two hours in a heated debate over liquor bills: First, Senator Straight's bonding bill to curb the Michigan Bonding Company, was attacked by Senator Murtha of Detroit. He said, "I am a total abstainer; nevertheless I am opposed to all of this foolish legislation against the liquor traffic." Then Senator Damon's screen bill added fuel to the fire. In the midst of the debate Senator Murtha, who is the leader of the liquor men in the senate, said, "What is the use of pestering and picking at this particular business with such bills as these? Introduce your statewide prohibition bill and I'll amend it so that it will be as bad for the man who drinks as for the man who sells. Now go to it." Senator Straight, who had been holding his statewide bill in abeyance for some time, waiting for the co-operation of the Anti-Saloon League, accepted the challenge and introduced the bill.

All of the temperance forces of the state will combine in an effort to secure its passage, and while it will be one of the most strenuous battles in the history of the state, we believe that we have a good chance to win. If the bill passes it will come before the people in the fall of 1916.

PUBLICITY METHODS IN HAWAII

The temperance leaders of Hawaii are maintaining a live educational campaign under the leadership of Mr. John W. Wadman, superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, and Mrs. J. M. Whitney, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. They have recently made an ingenious use of the Press Paragraphs issued by the Publicity Bureau of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, by printing on the reverse side of the sheet items of local interest. These sheets they circulate extensively throughout the island.

ALBERTA IN CAMPAIGN

Mrs. I. G. Burbeck, corresponding secretary of the W. C. T. U. of Alberta province, Canada, represented the Woman's Christian Temperance Union at the time of the presentation to the provincial legislature of the petitions which resulted in the government naming July 21, 1915, as the day for a vote of the people on the question of province-wide prohibition. In the campaign now on the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is holding essay contests among the school children and preparing for many medal contests. Each union is being provided free of charge by the provincial union with all the literature that it can wisely distribute. Special work will be done to educate the foreign vote. Later, campaign speakers will be placed in the field.

STRENGTH

Without Overloading The Stomach.

The business man, especially, needs food in the morning that will not overload the stomach, but give mental vigor for the day.

Much depends on the start a man gets each day as to how he may expect to accomplish the work on hand.

He can't be alert with a heavy, fried-meat-and-potatoes breakfast, requiring a lot of vital energy in digesting it.

A California business man found a food combination for producing energy. He writes:

"For years I was unable to find a breakfast food that had nutrition enough to sustain a business man without overloading his stomach, causing indigestion and kindred ailments.

"Being a very busy and also a very nervous man, I had about decided to give up breakfast altogether. But luckily I was induced to try Grape-Nuts.

"Since that morning I have been a new man; can work without tiring, my head is clear and my nerves strong and quiet.

"I find that Grape-Nuts, with a little sugar and a small quantity of cold milk, makes a delicious morning meal, which invigorates me for the day's business."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

HIS ONE CHANCE

PHRONIA ECKES SMITH, Winfield, Kansas

"Tom," said Mrs. Bradley to the new hired man, "I heard yesterday that you drink. You see I am coming to you for the truth about the matter instead of going to some one else."

"I wish I could deny it, Mis' Bradley," said the man shamefacedly.

"Why don't you stop it, Tom? We like you as a hired man but we can't tolerate whisky on the place. It makes a fool of a man. It robs him of his muscle as well as his brain. You can't do your best, Tom, in anything if you don't let liquor alone."

"I know it, Mis' Bradley. I know what it's going to do for me. I knew before ever I tasted whisky jest what it would do. I saw my father die of delirium tremens. For the sake of my mother I steered clear of liquor until I was grown.

"Five years ago I was bit by a rattlesnake. It was an awful bite. The man I was working for said I'd die if I didn't have whisky. I said I'd rather die, but they poured it down me, a spoonful at a time, until I had taken a pint.

"They said I preached a mighty good temperance sermon while I was drunk. I guess it must have been good for the old man decided that he wouldn't keep whisky on hand any more for snake bites and colds.

"But it treated me jest as I had expected. It started a craving in me, and whenever I smell liquor I can't let it alone. I don't hanker after it, though, unless I smell it and then I've got to have it."

"You must stay away from town, Tom," said Mrs. Bradley earnestly, "and I can assure you that we will never offer it to you even as a medicine, for there is always something else that is better."

"I don't want to die such a death as my father did, and I was going to ask Mr. Bradley not to send me to town any more," Tom continued.

"If you would sign the pledge, Tom, it would help you."

"O Mis' Bradley! It would be awful to break a promise and I can't keep from drinking. I ain't got the will power. Seems like I was born that way."

Many times Mrs. Bradley begged Tom Hunter to sign the pledge, but he continued to refuse even though he was eager to promise that he would stay away from town.

One evening Pete Cummins saw Tom plowing in the field and rode over to him. "We've missed you, Tom," he said. "We've been having some high old times down there at Pat's place. Say, don't they give you anything to drink out here? You look mighty dry. Have something de-e-licious." He uncorked a bottle as he spoke and thrust it under Tom's nose

Tom emptied the bottle but there was no satisfaction in so small an amount. It was tantalizing. It was maddening.

"Give me more," demanded Tom.

"Plenty more down to Pat's place," said the other grinning at the misery he had caused.

Tom unhitched and went to the barn, then, taking the best horse, he followed Pete to town and began a long debauch. Mr. Bradley searched for both man and horse but they could not be found Evidently Tom, with others, had gone to one of the mountain resorts where there was no danger of arrest for disorderly conduct.

A week later Tom rode slowly into the yard. As he dismounted he said penitently, "I'm awful sorry, Mr. Bradley I'll pay all damages. If Pete Cummins hadn't offered me that bottle I would have been all right here. The smell drove me crazy and I couldn't help myself."

"Tom," said Mr. Bradley sorrowfully, "I hoped to see you conquer in this fight, but I will have to get some one else to do my work, some one I can trust."

"I don't blame you, Mr. Bradley. I can't keep from it as long as they keep the stuff around and I s'pose there will always be saloons in Reedville."

For a year after Tom left the Bradleys, he led an up and down life, most of it being down. He could not secure steady employment for it was known that he could not be trusted. When starvation was staring him in the face, he returned to Mr. Bradley and again he was hired.

Mr. and Mrs. Bradley felt such an interest in the young man that, even though he was gone occasionally on a spree, they kept him in their service hoping to be able to help him.

One day when Mr. Bradley was talking to Tom about the curse of drink, the young man exclaimed piteously, "Oh! if there wasn't a saloon in all the country! If they'd stop making whisky, some of us would have so much better chance to live."

"I have a brother in Kansas," said Mr. Bradley. "How would you like to go to live with him? You know they have no saloons there."

"If I could get some place where I could keep from whisky for a year, I believe I could get over the habit. If you would help me get away from here I'd be so thankful."

Soon the arrangements were made for Tom to go to Horace Bradley, who was a Kansas farmer, but before he left Mrs. Bradley again begged that he sign the pledge.

"I'll tell you what I'll do," said Tom jubilantly; "when I've been in Kansas a year I'll sign the pledge and send it to you. If I signed it here I might break it."

Mr. Bradley drove to town with the young man, purchased his ticket, and sat with him in the depot waiting for the train. Suddenly he was called to the telephone. He was gone but a minute, but during that short time Pete Cummins and his bottle had done their work. When Mr. Bradley returned Tom and Pete were starting across the street to a saloon.

"Tom, you musn't go over there," called Mr. Bradley.

"I've got to, Mr. Bradley, I've got to have one more glass before I leave. I've had a smell of liquor and that's enough."

"Tom, you are not going to that saloon," declared Mr. Bradley, running after the young man and seizing him by the arm.

"Let me go, Mr. Bradley," begged Tom piteously; "let me go. I've got to have one more glass."

"The train is almost here. You must come along with me, Tom."

"But I must have one glass first. You don't know anything about this awful craving. I'll die right here if I don't get something to stop it. I must have a drink." With a quick jerk he eluded the grasp of his friend and ran toward the saloon in the door of which stood the grinning bar-tender.

Again Tom was caught, and then began a desperate struggle during which he pleaded for a drink with tears running down his cheeks, and then fought for "jest one more glass;" but gradually he was forced back across the street to the station platform.

Orders for the birthday post-cards and "I Won One" buttons should be sent to Mrs. Ross Hayes Schachner, 5025 Maple Ave., St. Louis; all other orders to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill.

Order in time.

HERE AND THERE

The state secretary of the Young People's Branch of Delaware, Mrs. L. V. Atkins, expects to carry out the National plan of making April the campaign month and will secure a Y. P. B. speaker to visit the state during that time. The plan of each one winning a member is being urged by Mrs. Atkins in suggesting methods of work to the Branches throughout the state.

A temperance instruction feature has been added to the extension department of the National Young Woman's Christian Association, the department which has in charge the industrial work of the organization. Mrs. Deborah K. Livingston, National superintendent of Franchise, is supplying Y. W. C. A. field secretaries with all possible helps.

A large body of students of Cornell College, Mount Vernon, Iowa, are very active workers in its Prohibition club, which is taking a leading part in the crusade against the Cedar Rapids saloons. A team will go out over the county week ends, holding mass meetings and securing signatures to petitions to the city council to renew no saloon licenses. The club has a study course and hopes soon to have a temperance course as a part of the college curriculum. It will hold a prohibition contest this spring. One issue of the Cornellian was devoted to the interests of the club.

FRANCES J. BARNES MEETING

On or near April 14 it would be well for the W. C. T. U. and Y. P. B. to hold a joint meeting. At this time, have read the messages of National Officers, Mrs. Barnes and others from the March Y. P. B. Edition of UNION SIGNAL, also the life sketch of Mrs. Barnes. There should follow a talk from the W. C. T. U. president or a member, on "Why We Need the Young People in the Campaign for National Constitutional Prohibition," and a response from the Y. P. B. president or a member on "Our Aims." Intersperse the program with good music and follow with a social hour.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S PROHIBITION RALLY No. 1.

Songs from Y. P. B. Chorus Book, by chorus

Scripture—Isaiah 1:4-20; or a number of texts bearing on temperance and prohibition may be given out previously to young people

Prayer

Song—"The Time Is Now" (Song Leaflet)

Story of the Crusade—Let this be given by a young man or young woman, dwelling on the part played by the son and daughter of Mother Thompson

Solo—"The Battle Song" (No. 68, Temperance Songster). Have a line of young people (graduating in size from the tiniest child obtainable to the young people of the Branch) march in, singing chorus after last verse. They may sing the chorus after other verses in an ante-room of church, where they can be heard but not seen

Voice of the States—Let each state be represented by a young woman, preferably dressed in white and carrying an umbrella covered with red, white and blue and having in large letters across front, "Colorado (or whatever the state may be) expects to stay dry." If desired each representative can give a word, sing a song or otherwise represent her state. Then let a young man dressed as Uncle Sam come in carrying a red, white and blue umbrella under his arm. When he reaches the platform he raises the umbrella, on which are the words, "United States expects to be dry in 1920," and as he does so let chorus sing the chorus of "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," repeating it as the young people march off the platform. If desired, Uncle Sam may tell of the vote taken in House of Representatives on December 22 and any other up-to-date facts, and the chorus sing, "Help It On" as they march off the stage

"The Outlook"—Ten-minute address

Song—"A Song of Consecration" (Song leaflet)

Reading and adoption of resolution endorsing Sheppard-Hobson amendment

Appeal for pledge signers and members by a member

While cards are distributed and members secured sing No. 34 and "Helpers' Song" in Chorus Book

Students of the American School for the Deaf at Hartford, Connecticut, were recently given the opportunity to sign the temperance pledge following a chapel lecture concerning the dangers of drink. The more than sixty who signed were organized into a temperance society.

"Take my team home, and tell my wife I had to go with Tom," said Mr. Bradley to a friend. "I am determined not to give him a chance to drink again." With the aid of his friend he took Tom into the car.

One year later, Mrs. Bradley, with tears streaming from her eyes, sat holding a pledge which bore in straggling characters the signature of Tom Hunter.

"That's what prohibition does for one of the least of these," she said aloud. "Horace says that Tom is one of the most trustworthy men he ever had on the ranch. Oh, think of the thousands who will be lifted to manhood, and from whom temptation will be removed altogether, when we have National Prohibition. God hasten that happy day."

SALOONLESS TOWN ONLY SAFE PLACE FOR STUDENTS

"Whisky, muddled brains, a fight—and I would be called on for bond," a resident of Columbia, Missouri, and a conductor of the Wabash railroad, told a Kansas City Star reporter was his frequent experience with the students of the State University of Missouri when Columbia was a liquor city. He went on to say that in the last three years since Columbia voted out the saloon, he had been requested to furnish bond only once, and that case had nothing to do with whisky. Formerly it was remarkable if four or five students were not in jail every Saturday night.

A Beer-Drinking Physician's Experience

TOTAL ABSTINENCE FROM BEER PRODUCES REVOLUTION IN HIS LIFE

The transformation of a so-called moderate drinker of beer and wine to a total abstainer and the pronounced beneficial effect of the change is told by Dr. Wilhelm Pfaff, a leading physician of Germany, residing at Kuchen, in a recent issue of The Vindicator. This, in substance, is Dr. Pfaff's story:

"Partly on account of physical troubles, and partly to see if I could carry out a program of abstinence, I gave up, on the first of January, 1903, all use of alcohol, and since then have lived entirely without it. Thus I have been able to know the difference between the influence of alcohol and a life of abstinence.

"I must first state that nothing else has been changed in my physical and other relations except the giving up of alcohol, and that afterwards it became possible to do more and more intensive work outside of my regular calling. From the year 1890, I had not been able to rest well, and could not relax except for a very short time. But soon after I stopped using alcohol, my whole physical and mental condition strikingly improved.

"I would not mention this if I were the only one who had had such an experience. When I have been among associates who have thrown alcohol overboard and have asked them about it, they have related to me the same experience, and you may safely conclude that it would be the same with every one after he had completely freed himself from alcohol and had conquered the longing which makes itself felt at the beginning of abstinence, and which is the result of changes which alcohol has produced in the body.

"If I now say to you that by reason of my experience nothing can persuade me to drink alcoholic liquors again, so long as I have a will of my own, you can not wonder, after what I have told you, and this will be still more intelligible to you if I detail somewhat my special experiences.

"I must first mention that I had no unpleasant sensation or symptoms at the beginning of abstinence, and comparing former feelings with those of abstinence, casual longing for beer or wine immediately disappeared or changed to the opposite.

"My experiences were as follows:

"1. Whereas formerly when out making calls, I became more quickly tired than now, and upon returning home at evening much fatigued, was unable to do a large piece of mental work, and often became sleepy at once; now, notwithstanding much physical fatigue, I walk from ten to twelve and more kilometers (eight to fifteen miles), every day. I can work several hours, if necessary, at mental work.

"2. Whereas formerly I often awoke in the morning more weary than when I went to bed, I now have refreshing sleep, and rise in the morning thoroughly rested.

"3. Whereas formerly I was constantly peevish and easily thrown 'off the hinges' by trifles, now I have become calmer.

"4. Whereas formerly I became fearful and anxious in the face of professional difficulties, now I am calm in every situation.

"5. Whereas formerly, and particularly if I had taken no alcoholic drink during the day, I experienced at evening a certain unrest that almost drew me to the tavern; now it always requires some resignation to have to go out on account of society.

"6. Whereas formerly I measured 1.1 meters around the waist, I now measure not quite 1 meter.

"7. Whereas formerly I could count from four to fifteen intermissions of the pulse in a minute, today I have to wait a long time to find one intermittent beat.

"8. Whereas formerly I became almost breathless in mountain climbing, now the steepest climb gives me no more difficulty than did then an easy Alpine path.

"9. Whereas formerly I was fond of acids and pungent foods, today the use of spices in my kitchen is greatly reduced, mustard and vinegar are almost vanished, and sweetmeats and fruits have become my delicacies.

"10. Whereas formerly I experienced much thirst and often had the feeling, particularly about four o'clock in the afternoon, as if I should faint—as a rule I took no alcoholic drinks before four o'clock in the afternoon—I am now seldom very thirsty; at least, I never feel the need of great amounts of liquid, not even in summer, when my calling keeps me long hours out upon dusty country roads.

"11. Whereas formerly, on going to bed after company in the evening, although I always drank moderately, I always had a fear lest I should be called out on a difficult case and not find myself quite clear; today it is different, the most difficult case finds me now at any time, mentally fresh and normal, and physically strong. It is this that makes abstinence a moral duty for the physician, because only by living abstinent can he be certain at all times to be equal to acting in the best manner possible if he is called suddenly to a severe case.

"I think that the enumeration of these points, taken specially from the realm of the sensations, will suffice to show what a great revolution abstinence has made in my whole life. It made this great difference in spite of the fact that I was a very moderate drinker, using seldom more than four glasses of beer or three glasses of wine a day, seldom drinking at home, and at meal time only when I had guests."

MISSISSIPPI'S SLOGAN, "NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION"

Special Correspondence

While the activities of the Mississippi W. C. T. U. are not of the intensely lively kind perhaps, yet we desire to be listed with those who are moving steadily onward in the propagation of the truths and principles for which our organization stands. From pulpit, rostrum and press we are feeding and fostering the growing sentiment in favor of National Constitutional Prohibition.

The state W. C. T. U. is pushing S. T. I. work through prize essay contests in the schools, offering in the grades a $10 prize; in the high schools a $10 prize; a teacher's prize of $25; in the colleges and universities a prize of $25 named after its donor, "S. E. Stanley prize."

We are laying plans and making ready to strike, when our legislature meets next year, for a prohibition law that will absolutely prohibit, at the same time taking interest in the enforcement of the laws we now have.

We are also seeking to reach and go beyond our apportionment of the 50,000 new members set as a goal for this year.

Miss Russell, National organizer, and Miss Crane, our Y. P. B. secretary, are doing splendid work afield, gaining new recruits and awakening and arousing old organizations to activity.

Mrs. E. E. Peterson will enter the field in March in the interest of the colored work.

Busy at home, we still find ample time to rejoice and swell the pean of praise for the mighty works accomplished in our sister states. "The Lord of Hosts is With Us."

"THERE'S VICTORY IN THE AIR"

HERE is a great song. Its words grip, its music thrills you. It sets to soulful song the grand thought of nation-wide victory over booze. Use it in all your temperance and prohibition meetings. It is a remarkable song and it is cheap. Two for 10c; 12 for 20c; 100 for only $1.00. Get a supply for church, Sunday school, W.C.T.U., prohibition rallies, etc. Set the community to singing, "There's Victory in the Air." Order today of REV. L. L. PICKETT, ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA

FRECKLES

Now is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots.

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

AVOID ALCOHOLIC NOSTRUMS

"One thing the anæmic individual must carefully avoid is the alcoholic nostrum," writes Dr. William Brady, M. D., in The Chicago Daily News. "There are a number of 'blood tonics' on the market which gently intoxicate the victim and mislead her in the fancy that she is getting better. In fact they make her worse—they carry her along on false stimulation (it is really narcotization), and then when the dope is discontinued she discovers she is not as well as when she began taking it."

The Methodist Temperance Society, in making the inquiry of the magazines, expressly stated that it had no desire to list those magazines which do accept liquor advertising, as it might seem as if an effort were being made to create an unfriendly feeling toward them in certain circles, but as the publishers of Puck seemed to desire to go on record as not wishing the friendship of prohibition advocates, the text of letter is given in full, as follows:

"Replying to your letter of the 13th relative to our accepting liquor advertising, we are very glad to say that we have a few of such accounts represented in our columns, and it pleases us to accept these orders.

"We are sufficiently old-fashioned to believe in personal liberty for every man; sufficiently patriotic to believe in the essential principles of democratic freedom on which our government is supposedly based; and sufficiently rational to believe, as useful citizens do, in moderation.

"It is a matter of the greatest indifference to us whether or not 'you say anything about it'—we are busy in our efforts to do away with real evils, and have very little time to waste regulating the personal habits of our neighbors.

TWIN EVILS

Ex-Governor Oswald West of Oregon

In his farewell message to the legislature Governor West said:

"In studying this question of the drink evil it will be found that alcohol and habit-forming drugs—twin evils—are largely responsible for the population of our penitentiary and asylums. By voting the state dry the people have taken a long step toward removing one of the causes. It is incumbent upon you, therefore, to take the next step, and through appropriate legislation restrict, if not prevent, the sale of habit-forming drugs. Measures aimed to check this awful evil have heretofore been launched upon the legislative sea, but have been driven upon the rocks or sent into port in a battered and worthless condition. Under our laws a hundred gates are open to those who would engage in the illicit traffic of these drugs. No man should be permitted to capitalize the weakness of an unfortunate brother, and he who engages in or protects this traffic will have much to answer for when he stands before the great last tribunal. Should this legislature perform no other duty than that of restricting the sale of habit-forming drugs, it will be entitled to the thanks of all good people."

WHAT SOME PEOPLE ARE DOING

Minnesota subscribes for twenty-five weekly UNION SIGNALS for its libraries and fifty Campaign editions for its pastors.

Centenary Union of St. Louis has a membership of fifty-one, and every member takes THE UNION SIGNAL.

I am sending you $1.00 that was given me last evening with the request that I should ask you to send as many copies of the Campaign edition as the $1.00 would pay for. This friend intends to write a personal letter and mail letter and paper to doubtful voters in our community, for he says that there are no more convineing statements than are found in THE UNION SIGNAL.

WASHINGTON SUBSCRIBER.

Garfield W. C. T. U. of Chicago has a membership of forty and has twenty-six subscribers to the Campaign edition of THE UNION SIGNAL. They are working to have each member a subscriber.

One of my pupils was so impressed with THE UNION SIGNAL stories I had been reading to the school that she took a copy home and obtained permission to subscribe for it.

A TEACHER.

"Enclosed please find 25 cents in stamps for a year's subscription to your Young Crusader. My daughter brought home a copy of the Crusader from school the other night, and we both liked it so much. I said I would send in a subscription in her name, as it is such a nice little paper for children. She is 11 years old, just the age to become interested in such a cause."

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

"I know you will be pleased to learn that in my circle THE UNION SIGNAL is watched with great care. The news which it gives of the struggle for prohibition and suffrage is accurate and pleasing, and it is practically invaluable to all who would keep track of the stirring events through which we are passing.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF A DRINKER

"I'll tell you what it is, boys, if this here town goes dry it'll kill business deader'n a door nail. Just see what it'll do fer me. My wife washes clothes for three or four saloonkeepers' families every week and they pay a good price for it. Now if these here crank prohibitioners close up the saloons the saloonkeepers' wives may have to do their own family washing, and that will be taking bread out of my children's mouths. No siree, yer bet yer life I ain't going to vote against the saloons. My wife would if she had a vote, for she says if it wasn't for the saloons I would work and save my money instead of giving it to the saloonkeepers. That's just like a woman. What do the women know about business and politics? Don't the Bible say if a woman wants to know anything let her ask her husband. And don't the Bible say to take a little wine for your stomach's sake. Yer bet yer life it does and I am a fellow that's going to stick to the Bible."—Britain (S. D.) Sentinel.

Latest Victories

The Poster Advertising Association, at its national meeting at Palm Beach, Florida, March 9-10, passed resolutions that no further contracts for advertising whisky, distilled or spirituous liquors will be accepted, and that under no circumstances will existing contracts be continued beyond December 31, 1915.

By action of the Kansas legislature, September 28, or the school day in each year nearest that date, has been designated as Frances E. Willard Day, for the purpose of giving instruction and conducting exercises upon said day relative to the history and benefits of prohibition. The bill has been signed by Governor Capper.

The senate of the Vermont legislature, on March 11 concurred in the previous action of the house, by passing a referendum statewide prohibition measure, providing for the submission of the question to the voters March 3, 1916. The bill has been signed by Governor Gates.

On March 15 by a vote of 37 to 11, the senate of the Pennsylvania legislature passed the joint resolution proposing a woman suffrage amendment to the state constitution which had already passed the house. The question will be submitted to the people next November.

Kansas Legislature Inaugurates Frances E. Willard Day in Public Schools

By enacting a law providing for the annual observance of a Frances E. Willard Day the legislature of the state of Kansas has inaugurated a movement of far-reaching importance. Alabama and New Mexico annually observe a Temperance Day, the day in New Mexico bearing the name of Frances E. Willard, but Kansas is the first state to place upon its statute books, by action of the legislature, such a measure. Its passage was secured through the efforts of the Kansas Woman's Christian Temperance Union and in recognition of that fact, Governor Capper presented to Mrs. Lillian M. Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U., the pen with which the bill was signed. The text of the measure is as follows:

An Act

Designating Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools of the state, and requiring instruction and appropriate exercises relative to the history and benefits of prohibition upon said day.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas:

SECTION 1. That September 28th, or the school day in each year hereafter nearest to said date, shall be set apart and designated as "Frances E. Willard Day"; and, in every public school in the state of Kansas, not less than one-half of the school day shall be set apart for instruction and appropriate exercises relative to the history and benefits of the prohibitory amendment to the constitution and the prohibitory laws of the state of Kansas. It shall be the duty of all state, county, city, and school district officers, and of all public school teachers in the state, to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its publication in the statute book.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Education, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 432, An act designating Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools of the state, and requiring instruction and appropriate exercises relative to the history and benefits of prohibition upon said day, has had the same under consideration, and instruct me to report the bill back to the senate with the recommendation that it be passed.

A. B. CARNEY, Chairman.

Poster Advertising Association Bars Liquor Posters

Mrs. C. E. Lindsay, National superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings, on March 11, received from Mr. Barney Link, president of the Van Beuren and New York Billposting Company of New York, a telegram to the effect that the Poster Advertising Association, in session at Palm Beach, Fla., had passed a resolution that no further contracts for whisky, or distilled and spirituous liquors would be accepted; that all existing contracts would be carried out but under no circumstances would they be continued beyond December 31, 1915.

This association will be remembered as having used its billboards during the slack season in the advertising business for religious and educational posters brought out at its own expense.

It has most cordially and generously co-operated with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in placing posters in New York and other states, and has evinced a growing interest in and sympathy with the movement our organization represents. Mrs. Lindsay, who has been in correspondence with Mr. Barney Link, has taken every opportunity to urge him to use his influence to have the association take action against liquor advertising.

Vermont Legislature Passes Prohibition Referendum Measure

The senate of the Vermont legislature, on March 11 concurred in the action of the house, and passed the referendum statewide prohibition bill providing for its submission to the vote of the people on March 7, 1916. The bill has been signed by Governor Gates.

At the recent town elections in Vermont, Montpelier, the capital, voted out the saloons, as did also many other towns of importance.

Minnesota Acquires New Dry Territory

Special Correspondence

Of the 250 Minnesota towns voting on the license question March 9, 144 outlawed the saloon. This added 42 towns to the prohibition list. A few towns had heretofore passed on the question, making in all 147 out of 261 which have this spring voted against the saloon. There will probably be further victories at the April elections.

A bill providing for a constitutional prohibition amendment was introduced at the instigation of the W. C. T. U., in the senate, with good prospects of its receiving favorable action by that body. This was done because of the introduction of a similar bill in the house by the liquor interests while the temperance forces were waiting for the county option and statutory measures to be acted upon. The W. C. T. U. bill known as the Gandrud bill will probably pass the senate, and an effort will be made to have the house pass it also. A bill for the reading of the Bible in the schools also has been introduced.

LOCAL OPTION BILL HANGING IN THE BALANCE IN NEW JERSEY

As we go to press no word has been received of action of the house of the New Jersey legislature on the local option bill passed by the senate on March 2, by a vote of 11 to 9.

PLEA OF W. C. T. U. LEADER MOVES SENATOR TO TEARS—NEW YORK LEGISLATORS LISTEN TO APPEAL FOR PROHIBITION

With tears streaming down his face, Senator Samuel A. Jones of Chenango broke down and left the assembly chamber of the New York legislature as Mrs. Ella A. Boole, vice-president-at-large of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and president of the New York Woman's Christian Temperance Union, pleaded with the members of the senate and assembly excise committees to report the Wilson bill for statewide prohibition.

"On behalf of the women of the state who are the ones who suffer," said Mrs. Boole, "I plead with you to report this bill which would remove the preventable cause of intemperance, insanity and crime. On behalf of the women and girls, I plead, and on behalf of the children yet unborn, who may be brought into the world with a heritage of unsound bodies, I plead with you."

Senator Jones frequently wiped the tears from his eyes as Mrs. Boole spoke, and at last left the hearing room.

The bill as introduced would make statewide prohibition mandatory, but Assemblyman Hamilton Fish, Jr., of Putnam county, announced his intention of introducing an amendment which would provide for a referendum to the people on the question.

Mrs. Boole appeared as a representative of the Allied Forces for Civic and Moral Betterment. Rev. William Milton Hess, former professor of philosophy in Yale University, spoke for the measure, urging, "For God's sake and for men's sake, wipe out that which is making nil much of the work of the churches and schools."

Rev. Father George T. Zurcher of Buffalo, editor of Catholic and Prohibition, declared that the foreign element in the state was largely in favor of the bill. He quoted the words of Pope Pius, uttered shortly before his death, "Let Catholics everywhere come to the forefront in the fight for prohibition." "America sober will be invincible forever," declared Father Zurcher, "but America half drunk will be in constant danger from within and from without."

Mr. Nathan H. Very, master of the state grange, spoke for the bill on behalf of the grange, and Mr. Gordon H. Paine, representing the Good Templars of the state, read a letter from Governor Capper of Kansas telling of the benefits of prohibition.

Mrs. Boole presented a petition signed by 11,474 voters favoring the bill, and also various resolutions, and a telegram from Buffalo saying that the bill had been endorsed at a ministers' meeting representing forty churches.

"They have said that if prohibition comes, the laboring men would object," said Mrs. Boole. "I wonder how the wives feel. There are many women starving in New York because their husbands lost their jobs through drink and can't get another. There are many children going breakfastless to school because the money that ought to go for food goes for liquor. The argument has been advanced that real estate would depreciate under prohibition. The boyhood and the girlhood of the state and its homes are worth far more than the real estate. If the 28,000 saloons in New York are kept open this year, somebody's boy is going to be ruined. There is no financial question in the state that can compare in importance with this great liquor problem."

Mrs. Van Valkenburgh presented resolutions in favor of the bill from the Women's Home Missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal church of Gloversville. Neal Dow Cranmer of Elmira spoke for the Intercollegiate Prohibition association; John W. Cummings of Brooklyn for the Brooklyn Sunday School Union board of managers; Dr. C. O. Sahlor of Kingston for the Ulster county civic league, and J. F. Burke for the Anti-Saloon league.

William H. Hirsch, representing the New York State Brewers' Association, in rebuttal declared that true temperance is not secured by law but by appeal to brains and conscience.

The assembly chamber was thronged with advocates and opponents of the bill

Big Business Protests Against Sale of Liquor Near Its Plants

Three big industrial plants of Philadelphia, Pa., the Midvale Steel Works, Link Belt Company, and the George W. Blabon Company, manufacturers of oil cloth, have taken a decided stand against the sale of liquor near their works. This attitude was made known when these concerns opposed the granting of a license to a saloonkeeper who wishes to establish his business in the neighborhood. Counsel for the companies pointed out that where thousands of men are employed in occupations involving great risk, it is an absolute necessity for them to be in perfect command of their mental faculties if accidents are to be avoided. "It requires the consumption of a very small quantity of alcohol," counsel informed the court, "to deprive a workman of this perfect self-control, and thereby imperil his life. For this reason these three establishments are strongly opposed to temptation being placed in the path of their men near the works."

In the case of another saloonkeeper who sought a transfer of his business to a temperance community because his property was in line with the parkway and had been condemned by the city, the president of the Law and Order Society declared: "Philadelphia is big enough and its treasury rich enough to reimburse in dollars and cents saloonkeepers who are forced out of business, but they should not be reimbursed at the expense of the morals of another section of the community."

COAL AND IRON COMPANY FORBIDS MINE OFFICIALS TO DRINK

The Pennsylvania Coal company and the Hillside Coal and Iron company of Scranton, Pennsylvania have issued orders forbidding officials of its mines and offices to drink intoxicants, either on or off duty, and threatening dismissal as the penalty for violation of this order. This order is said to be one of the most drastic issued by a Pennsylvania company. The reason given for the action was that drinking detracts from the efficiency of employes.

GOVERNOR OF WYOMING VETOES BOXING BILL

Governor John B. Kendrick of Wyoming for the first time exercised the power of veto imposed in the chief executive's office when he vetoed six measures passed by the state legislature, among them a bill providing for boxing matches. In a letter to the secretary of state of Wyoming, Hon. Frank L. Houx, Governor Kendrick makes the following statement concerning the bill:

"In withholding my approval from this measure I am actuated not so much by the question of the principle it violates but by a determination to balk the vicious influences and unworthy conditions which surround and characterize such contests.

"Our state is now expending one-fifth of the money raised by taxation for the education of its children along the lines of higher and better ideals and, in view of this fact alone, it would seem unfortunate to take any step calculated to nullify the influence of such teaching."

The Northwest Federation of Indian Tribes, in session in Tacoma, Washington, passed a resolution asking Congress to appropriate $150,000 to suppress the liquor traffic among the Indians.

HONORABLE LLOYD GEORGE'S PRONOUNCEMENT

Miss Agnes E. Slack, honorary secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., who, for a week during the month of February, was a guest in the home of Mrs. Lloyd George, wife of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, at the official residence in Downing street, London, sends the following statement recently made by Hon. Lloyd George in a speech before the House of Commons:

"Russia, since the war began, has enormously increased her resources by suppressing the sale of all alcoholic liquors. It is hardly realized that by that means she has increased the productivity of her laborers by something between thirty and fifty per cent. It is as if she had added millions of laborers to her labor reserve without increasing the expense of maintaining them. Whatever the devastation of the country may be, Russia has more than anticipated its wastage by that great act of national heroism and sacrifice."

TO PREVENT LIQUOR SALES THROUGH UNITED STATES MAILS

Prominent prohibitionists of Alabama were elected by the state legislature to present to the United States Congress a memorial to prevent the solicitation of liquor sales through the United States mails. The delegation was well received by President Wilson and the Postmaster General, and Judge Weakley of Birmingham was asked to frame a bill patterned after the anti-lottery law. Mrs. Annie K. Weisel, president of the Alabama W. C. T. U., writes that the white ribboners of Alabama are confident that all the temperance forces in the Uniou will rally behind this bill to protect dry territory from liquor advertisements and solicitations for orders, and that Congress will enact such a law.

PENNSYLVANIA'S COUNTY OPTION BILL

According to the press, Governor Martin G. Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania is determined to carry his campaign for the enactment of a county option law to a successful issue. The governor has declared himself gratified by the action of a majority of the house law and order committee, in sustaining his request that they refrain from reporting out the bill until he gives the word, and has also announced that if the legislature fails to pass the bill he will make it an issue in the state campaign two years from now, when a new legislature is to be elected.

A petition has been sent to the legislature from a mass meeting of citizens of Pittston, Pa., numbering 3,000, respectfully and urgently praying that honorable body to enact the county option bill.

From the number of letters and telegrams reaching the governor from various parts of the state, he is satisfied that the people are supporting him in the fight against the liquor traffic.

Meanwhile, the liquor organization is preparing to introduce a counter measure which will provide for local option in counties outside of incorporated cities and boroughs, permitting the latter to vote separately. A law similar to this has been tested in Massachusetts, New York, Kentucky, Illinois, Ohio, and other states and found wanting.

It is stated on good authority that seventy per cent of the cases handled by the Humane society of Youngstown, Ohio, are the direct result of the drink habit.

Chicago Divine Resents Approval of Liquor Interests

The day has passed when it is safe for a minister of the gospel, or indeed any man of prominence, to fail to be outspoken in favor of any agency of reform. Rev. Martin D. Hardin, pastor of the Third Presbyterian church of Chicago, up to a few days ago, refused to endorse the invitation extended by sixty-five churches to "Billy" Sunday to conduct a series of meetings in Chicago. The noted evangelist insisted that he would not come if Dr. Hardin and the Third Presbyterian church did not join in the invitation. Suddenly Dr. Hardin announced that he had changed his mind, and gave the following explanation:

"I found that I was the only pastor on the west side not advocating Sunday's coming. This made me a 'sane and sober citizen' in the eyes of the liquor interests. My name began to appear in their publications. Finally paragraphs of praise—pages of adulation—began to fill their magazines and pamphlets, and I thought then it was about time to go to the other side. Sunday is an avowed enemy of the liquor people. The Third Church will do all it can to make Chicago 'dry' next year."

"The climax came when the saloon advocates counted me as their friend," Dr. Hardin explained. "Now, if there is anything I hate with all my soul it is the saloon. When I was pastor of the Presbyterian church of Charlotte, N. C., I helped drive the saloons out of the place."

KENTUCKY DISTILLING HOUSES GO INTO BANKRUPTCY

The Mattingly & Moore Distilling company and the F. G. Walker Distilling company, two of the oldest concerns of the kind in Kentucky, filed voluntary petitions in bankruptcy in the United States District court. The Mattingly & Moore company lists its liabilities at $289,939 and assets $204,394. The F. G. Walker company schedules liabilities of $110,252; assets, $91,770. The largest liability in both lists is a mortgage for $60,000 given by both corporations to a Louisville trust company.

ANOTHER BREWING COMPANY GOES OUT OF BUSINESS

A receiver has been appointed for the Hammond Brewing company of West Hammond, Ind., scheduling liabilities of $327,000.

PROHIBITION LOWERS THE TAX RATE

The tax rate for Juniata county, Pa., has been reduced from 6 to 4½ mills. As there was a decrease of $33,000 in the debt of the county during one year of curtailed license and two years of absolutely no license, the county commissioners felt they could afford to grant this reduction to the taxpayers. Juniata county maintains no almshouse and finds little use for one even under the present business depression.

DELAYED VICTORY FOR DELAWARE WOMEN

The woman suffrage amendment recently before the lower house of the Delaware legislature failed of passage, the vote being 22 to 8 against it.

AN EPOCH-MAKING DECISION

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF YOST LAW UPHELD

MRS. LENNA LOWE YOST, President West Virginia W. C. T. U.

The decision handed down January 13 last by the United States circuit court of appeals, sitting in Richmond, Virginia, is regarded by many as the most decisive victory ever won in the interest of prohibition.

The decision means that the constitutionality of the Yost law is upheld, in so far as it relates to the interstate shipments of liquor and to the solicitation through the mails by circulars, letters or otherwise, of orders for intoxicants.

This tribunal reversed and remanded the decision of Judge Keller, in the United States district court for the southern district of West Virginia in the case of the state of West Virginia versus the Adams Express company, in which Mr. Fred O. Blue, commissioner of prohibition for the state, sought an injunction to restrain the express company from delivering intoxicants in this state. The suit was first brought in the circuit court of Kanawha county and Judge Littlepage granted the injunction. The express company appealed the case to the Federal court and Judge Keller refused to sustain the injunction. The state then took an appeal to the United States circuit court of appeals, which resulted in the encouraging and satisfactory interpretation of the West Virginia law governing the sale of intoxicants.

It is true that the common law, in dealing with a mail order transaction, regards the sale as taking place at the vendor's principal place of business; but the statute law of West Virginia provides, in the exercise of the state's police power, that, in the case of mail order sales of intoxicants, the old common law principle shall not prevail. When liquor is shipped into West Virginia by a seller and received by a buyer, our law provides that the sale shall be considered as taking place at the point of delivery.

Heretofore the passage of intoxicants from one state to another has been treated by the Federal courts as a part of interstate commerce, and the states have been forbidden to exercise powers of regulation or limitation infringing upon interstate commerce.

This Federal court decision arms every state that adopts prohibition with complete power to exclude from its territory alcoholic liquors of every kind and if the opinion rendered, which is substantially a reversal of the court decisions during the past one hundred years, is sustained by the Supreme court of the United States, it will establish a new theory of law, and an entirely new procedure as applied to the liquor traffic.

The following paragraphs from the court's decision are most significant and should be carefully read and given wide publicity by every prohibition advocate:

"1. In trying to comprehend the legislative purpose in prohibition statutes it is important to remember that the ultimate end sought in prohibition legislation is not the prevention or restriction of the mere sale of intoxicants, but the prevention of their consumption as a beverage. The sale being the most usual and obvious means by which drinking is accomplished, legislation is more often directed against the sale. But it is upon the recognized evil of individual consumption as a beverage that the right of a state under its police power rests to enact prohibitive legislation; and in the exercise of that right it cannot be denied that the state may legislate not only against acts which would constitute a sale at common law, but against other acts within its borders, such as deliveries by common carriers, which tend to defeat or weaken its public policy of preventing the consumption of liquor as a beverage.

"We are not concerned in this case with the question whether the state legislature or the state legislature and the Congress in conjunction can forbid a citizen to drink intoxicating liquors or purchase them in another state and bring them into the state of West Virginia for his own consumption; but with the very different question, whether the state may forbid the sale of liquor in its borders and make the delivery by a carrier a sale at the place of delivery and whether the Congress can prohibit the transportation in the state by the common carrier of liquor so to be delivered contrary to the law of the state. We think it can be demonstrated that this question must be answered in the affirmative—that it can be made perfectly manifest that shipments into the state and deliveries by common carriers, by which liquor dealers outside of prohibition states were enabled to thwart the efforts of state governments to save the people of the state from the liquor evil, have been forbidden by state legislation made valid by the withdrawal of the protection of interstate commerce from such shipments under the Act of Congress known as the Webb-Kenyon Act.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

"7. It makes no difference that the United States mail was used for the solicitation. The Federal government does not protect those who use its mails to thwart the police regulations of a state made for the conservation of the welfare of its citizens. The use of the mail is a mere incident in carrying out the illegal act, and affords no more protection in a case like this than a like use of the mails to promote a criminal conspiracy, or to perpetrate a murder by poison, or to solicit contributions of office holders in violation of the civil service law, or to obtain goods under false pretenses, In Re Palliser, 136 U. S. 257; U. S. vs. Thayer, 209 U. S. 39; Hayner vs. State, 83 Ohio 178; State vs. Morrow, 40 S. C. 221, 18 S. E. 853.

"As to intoxicating liquors, though universally recognized as deleterious, the Congress has not seen fit to exclude them entirely from interstate commerce, but has made the exclusion on this condition, namely, that they shall not be transported by common carriers into particular states when such transportation would be especially injurious to the public interest in that when they reach the state, they will derange and make inefficacious the police measures for the control of intoxicants which the state has seen fit to adopt. The courts can hardly find room to doubt that this qualified exclusion made in aid of the efforts of a number of the states of the Union to combat one of the greatest evils of human life is founded on deep reason and enlightened public policy."

Alcohol Potent Factor in Physical and Mental Degeneration

"The factors which enter into the cause of physical defects are many and may be classified under three headings: Congenital, acquired, and accidental. Alcohol is the principal factor entering into the three classifications," says Dr. Edward Wallace Lee, in an article on "Physical Defects, a Factor in the Cause of Crime," published in a recent number of the New York Medical Journal. "I emphasize alcohol because I believe it to be the most potent factor in physical and mental degeneration. It will take one hundred years of sobriety and abstinence even to begin to mitigate the physical harm it has done to the human race. . . . To sum it up in a very few words, alcohol as a beverage is a curse—it makes good men bad and bad men worse.

"Drink makes men and women not only gross and sensual, but also negligent, imprudent, and irreflective. The saloon takes men from their homes, while drink directly diminishes population. Other things being equal, it is found that the nations which abstain from alcohol, or those which are moderate consumers, are more prolific than those addicted to drink. Statistics show that a single drinking bout may have a blastophthoric effect. From this, and from other causes, result the deplorable consequences of coitus which take place during drunkenness. As already pointed out, alcohol greatly deteriorates the quality of man by blastophthoria, and we must agree with Darwin, Gladstone, Cobden, and Comte that alcohol, even in so-called moderation, does more harm to a nation than war, plague, and famine combined.

"The day will come when medical men who are addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors, and who prescribe alcoholic beverages as stimulants and tonics, will be considered a menace to the best interests of society, because it will be realized that the use of alcohol under such conditions leads to the formation of habits and desires that it is almost impossible for the average man to resist. As I have said before, it has been proved that alcohol is nothing but a narcotic when taken internally.

"I have witnessed eight legal hangings, and three or four that were not legal—the primary cause in all being alcoholic intoxication."

REGULATION SAVES THE SALOON, PROHIBITION SAVES THE HOME

MAJOR DAN MORGAN SMITH

(Excerpts from address delivered at Springfield, Ohio)

[Major Dan Morgan Smith was general counsel for the National Model License League (composed of brewers, distillers, wholesalers and saloonkeepers, one of the three largest anti-prohibition organizations in America) from 1908 to 1912. He was assistant corporation counsel of the city of Chicago during 1905 and 1906, and special assistant United States attorney of Chicago during 1913 and 1914. He is now judge advocate of the Illinois National guard, with the rank of major. He was born in Virginia and spoke for the liquor interests throughout the entire United States during the period from 1908 to 1912. Early in 1915 he declared himself for prohibition.—EDITOR.]

The saloon as it now exists stands convicted before the bar of public opinion. Its every defender admits its guilt; the question is simply one of sentence. The liquor lawyers plead that the saloon be regulated; protesting citizens insist that it be abolished.

Prosecutor and defender alike realize that the liquor business as now conducted is a corrupter of political parties, a menace to the youth of the country, a debaucher of virtue, a destroyer of intellect, a wrecker of homes and an impediment to eternal salvation. It is a stench in the nostrils of decency. Liquor lessens efficiency, increases crime and robs not only its victim, but his wife, parents and children. The saloon is a curse to its owner and its patron; to the city that licenses it, the nation that taxes it, and to the voter that is responsible for its existence.

Its ablest defenders are its severest critics, for prohibition is defeated only by the plea that I entered on its behalf: "Regulation that regulates is preferable to prohibition that does not prohibit!"—a plea that must be disregarded, for the defendants will not submit to regulating laws being enacted, and with the passage of the Webb-Kenyon law prohibition does prohibit. The promise to pass model license laws has been broken so often that only the uninitiated longer regards the promise as more than an attempt to fool the voters, something to be talked of before and forgotten after election.

As the experienced criminal lawyer admits, with a great show of candor, that the previous record of his client is bad, so the speakers for the "wets" admit the evils that are chargeable to the saloon, and none are louder than they in advocating reform before election.

Eloquently they plead for regulation, artfully they attack prohibition, skillfully they insist that the saloonkeeper can be legislated into righteousness, then loudly proclaim that prohibition is impossible of enforcement because mankind cannot be legislated into righteousness!

"Thou shalt not" will force the saloonkeeper to be good—"Thou shalt not" will lead the boys into temptation.

Absurd! If the hardened offender can be made to reform by law, why not the innocent boy?

There are those in the liquor business who would gladly make good on their promise to pass model license laws, but they are in the hopeless minority. Those in real control of the liquor forces are too arrogant to submit to control, too lawless to desire reform, too shortsighted to understand that decent voters only vote "wet" when they believe laws will be passed taking the liquor business out of politics and the law-breaker out of the liquor business.

Those in control of the liquor forces applaud speeches favoring regulation, for such speeches persuade the decent voter that he may vote wet without endorsing present conditions. They endorse regulation, because regulation is a vote-getter. They subscribe funds to the Model License League, for that organization wins elections, but they pigeon-hole model license laws, for they fear such laws would cut down profits. They do not regard regulation as a remedy for evil, but as an argument to defeat prohibition.

Regulation saves the saloon; prohibition saves the home.

With the passage of the Webb-Kenyon law making prohibition that prohibits not only feasible, but an established fact; with the failure of the liquor forces to pass a model license law or a model license ordinance anywhere in the United States, the voter no longer has the refuge of expediency

If his excuse for voting wet is one of loss of trade, without arguing the truth of such loss, I ask him, "Are you willing to admit that you put dollars above decency?"

If he excuses his vote on the grounds of financial support to the government, I ask, "Can this government in times of peace less afford to make the reform than autocratic Russia in time of war?"

If he seeks excuse in the example of Biblical characters, I ask, "Do you seriously believe that you forward the interests of Christianity when you vote wet?"

If his excuse be that prohibition interferes with personal liberty, the answer is this, "Does not the individual necessarily surrender certain personal privileges when he becomes a part of a community?" Can it be maintained that one can drink liquor without setting a bad example, without leading others into temptation, without danger to oneself, without wrong to one's wife or one's children? Can it be denied that personal liberty is the greatest possible freedom of the individual consistent with the rights of others? Can it be gainsaid that the use of liquor is an interference with the rights of contemporaries and posterity? Why not give up the right to drink for the good of mankind?

Another reason for voting dry is

Liquor Domination of Politics

The attempt of the liquor forces to dominate all branches of government should persuade all well-wishers of the United States to vote dry, for they have become a menace to the purity of the ballot, to the sanctity of the law, to the independence of legislators and the honesty of government.

The saloonkeeper, liquor dealer and brewer combine irrespective of politics to support the man who publicly stands for personal liberty and privately stands for personal interests—aldermen, legislators, mayors and governors are flattered, supported, condemned or threatened, cajoled or bought to do their bidding. They ask but one question, "Do you stand for liquor?" If so, they very reasonably assume he will stand for anything!

BUSINESS AND BOOZE POOR PARTNERS

In discussing the rapidly awakening conscience of men on the drink question the Duluth (Minn.) Herald tells the following incident:

"Not long ago something less than a dozen men, business men mostly, were together two or three days on a trip that was half business and half pleasure.

"Toward the end of the trip—it was on a special train—somebody suggested a drink. The button was pushed in due and ancient form, and the slave of the ring promptly appeared to take orders. Two took old fashioned drinks; the rest took charged waters.

"Later, comment arose over the fact that only a few years ago it would have been different. The suggestion of a drink would have come the first day, and pretty early, instead of the last day, pretty late. Instead of only two men taking real drinks, most or all of them would have spurred their systems with an alcoholic shock; and there would not have been one drink, but many.

"The discussion developed the fact that only a few years ago it would have been this way even if the same men had formed the party. One man said he quit because he found it didn't agree with him. Another man said he quit because he found himself getting underneath the habit instead of on top of it—it was becoming his master. Another man said: 'I found I couldn't keep up the pace in my business—it's pretty swift, you know—when my head was fuddled with drink or cobwebbed with the katzenjammer after-effects. So I quit it.'

"Still another man confessed that he had found himself saying and doing indiscreet and foolish things, when he had a few drinks aboard. 'I thought that I probably hadn't been endowed with any more brains than I needed,' he said, 'and I concluded I'd better not be imbibing something that would cripple what brains I did have. So I quit.' And he wasn't a man anybody would suspect of a lack of brains, either.

"The fifth man said his doctor told him that he would have to quit drinking or quit living—'and I was no soak, either.'

"And so it went. The two who had taken whisky for theirs looked rather shamefaced, said the other fellows were wise 'in cutting it out,' and added that they were thinking of doing the same."

A STORY WITH A MISSION

If you want to bring to the attention of some young friend facts concerning that evil of evils—the liquor traffic—place in his hands a copy of that attractive, thought-arresting volume, "Little Sir Galahad," by Phoebe Gray, published by Small, Maynard & Company, price, $1.35. The story has been called the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of Prohibition," "a book with a blessing," and a picture of "Christianity triumphant in practical life." To become acquainted with "Little Sir Galahad" and the friends whose lives were transfigured through his influence is to have a new vision of the opportunity of service. When you pass the volume on to your friends, put a marker between the pages on which appears the conversation of the great surgeon, Doctor Billy, with the "bad, good man," Francis Willett. It is worthy of careful reading:

"Do you think," commenced Doctor Billy, "that I should be kind if I spoke very frankly to you at a time like this? Or do you think it would be hitting a man who is down? No? Well, then, you will be surprised when I say that you are in a way personally responsible for the unhappy occurrences of the last few days. I remember that campaign here in Sheffield, six years ago. I remember you went to Europe, and I heard that a few people were bold enough to say that—well, if you had stayed at home the result would have been different. This may or may not be true; but so much is true; if you had been deeply concerned for the outcome, you never would have gone."

"But my opposition to license, my vote against it, has been no secret," returned John Willett. "I have always contributed liberally; in fact, that very year I doubled my usual contribution. How can you—"

Willett looked as puzzled as a child. He was hurt, even a little offended, or as much so as one could well be with Billy Jackson.

"You are," said Jackson, "what might be called a bad, good man. This splendid country of ours is teeming with men like you. You are the despair of the community. There seems to be no argument that can reach your hardness of heart until it is touched by some great personal grief."

John Willett, whose heart was so tender that it sometimes hurt him, said not a word. He stared straight before him at some quite impertinent object on the mantel, but he did not see it. What he did see was a bandaged head and a pale face on a pillow, with a mother bending over it in an agony of misery and hope. Did he do that? Had he struck that blow? He groaned with the pain of conviction that Doctor Billy was right.

Yes, Doctor Billy was perhaps more nearly right than he himself realized. A part of the profit on the very poison which had caused this thing might be his, since it had most likely been bought at the Waldemere.

"It is—like—striking a man when—he is—down," he said. "But—go on!"

"I hate to preach," said the physician, "but no one more than the doctor realizes the insidiousness of this evil. It not only destroys those who drink it, but demoralizes those who do not. It lowers the whole tone of the community. An intoxicated man is no curiosity. Even the children on the streets will not turn to look a second time at him. He's the regular thing in most cities.

"Your boy—not alone yours, but every boy in the community—grows up to see men like you, good men, honored men, men of prosperity and influence, wink at this thing. You salve your conscience by a single vote once a year and perhaps a check. You say to yourself that you have done your duty, that you have expressed your preference for the right thing, that you have set a good example.

"You don't drink; you don't want your boy to do so; but you, or most men like you, often say you 'have no objection to a man's drinking moderately, if he knows how to handle it.'

"It's all been gone over so many, many times," continued Doctor Billy, sadly. "There is no new argument; the whole question has been threshed out and out and out. Yet whole communities go on poisoning themselves. The Chinese government, whose civilization we presume to scorn, has forbidden its people to drug themselves with opium; the Mohammedans, whom we regard as heathen and barbarians, are forbidden by the law of their faith to use alcohol, and they are singularly free from the curse. But we, in civilized, Christian America, allow this daily temptation to surround our children; and it is the 'good' people of the community, the exemplary citizens, like you, John, who are, in their enlightenment, more guilty than the very makers and sellers of it, because you can stop it and won't.

"Forgive me, if I have hurt you so terribly, John. But I am a surgeon; it is my business to hurt people, I am sorry to say. Thank God it is often through that hurt that they are made whole."

Doctor Billy stopped, sank his face in his hands, and seemed to suffer from the pain he had inflicted. But John Willett stood quite erect, his gray careworn face lighted up with a kindling and sublime hope. He advanced toward his old friend, his hand outstretched; and as Doctor Billy looked up, the morning sun burst into the dim room, flooding it with the promise of a new day.

TRACING THE RESULTS OF BILLY SUNDAY'S "BOOZE" SERMON

Whether or not one approves the methods of "Billy" Sunday, no right-minded man or woman can fail unreservedly to approve some of the results on individual lives which follow his straightforward fashion of presenting the gospel. The Philadelphia Ledger, in a recent attempt to tell what effect "Billy" Sunday's preaching is having on the city of Philadelphia, relates the following incidents:

A saloonkeeper and his bartender sat in the rear of the tabernacle at a recent service. As Sunday gave his invitation the bartender took a bunch of keys from his pocket and pushed them toward his employer. "I'm done," he exclaimed, "here are the keys to the place." "Nonsense," remonstrated his employer; "put them in your pocket; you'll need them tomorrow morning." "I'm done," repeated the bartender. "I'm going forward to shake 'Billy's' hand." "Don't be a fool," protested his employer, and he refused to take the keys. "I'm done, do you understand me?" cried the bartender, and throwing the keys into the sawdust, he rushed down the aisle and grasped the hand of the evangelist.

Down in the neighborhood of Fourth and York streets, a certain part of the population is deploring the conversion of a popular saloonkeeper. The liquor dealer heard "Billy" preach his famous "booze" sermon. He went home, told his wife he was done with the saloon business forever and immediately advertised his place for sale.

The proprietor of one of the saloons in Tioga was noticed to be in a gloomy mood. "Confound it," he remarked to a friend, "between 'Billy' Sunday and Lent the bottom has dropped out of my business."

A student of the University of Pennsylvania, one of "Billy's" converts, tells this story: He said he was studying economics at the university and receiving financial aid from certain liquor dealers, who expected him, in return for their assistance, to use his university education in opposing the temperance sentiment sweeping over the country.

"After hearing Sunday's 'booze' sermon," said the young man, "I was done with the liquor business for good and all. I went down the trail as an evidence of my sincerity. From this hour I shall not take a dollar from my former friends, and throughout the rest of my life I intend to fight the liquor traffic to the last ditch."

SENATOR CUMMINS IN LINE WITH IOWA SENTIMENT

The majority of Iowans are proud of the stand taken by United States Senator Cummins on the liquor question. "Senator Cummins is now simply in line with Iowa sentiment," comments the Perry (Ia.) Chief, "and with two such men as Senators Cummins and Kenyon in the United States Senate, this state is sure to be proud of its share of the work of transformation and reformation which will soon be enacted into a national law—for the time is not many years distant when such will have been accomplished."

THE BRITISH CHANCELLOR HAS MUCH TO LEARN!

The Kansas City (Mo.) Times suggests that the American liquor men ought to set Hon. Lloyd-George, chancellor of the exchequer, aright on the matter of prohibition in Russia, and makes the following comments:

"Mr. Lloyd-George, chancellor of the exchequer, asserts that the prohibition of the sale of vodka in Russia has increased the efficiency of the Russian workers from thirty to fifty per cent.

"Evidently the British Chancellor has a lot to learn. Doesn't he know, for instance, that prohibition doesn't prohibit, and that the issuing of the no-vodka regulation was the signal for a much greater consumption of liquor in Russia than ever before? Hasn't he heard that if people are deprived of liquor—which they can't be—they will debauch themselves with drugs, and so be worse off than ever? Isn't he aware that Kansas has been virtually ruined by prohibition; that its desolate cities, its waste acres, its crowded jails and poor-farms are all testimony to the demoralizing influence of doing away with whisky?

"If Mr. Lloyd-George would only communicate with the American distillers and brewers he would learn how horribly mistaken he is about Russia, and how the truth is that the workers of the empire are simply demoralized and made inefficient by being prevented from going on their weekly drunks."

WHISKY AN ENEMY OF PRINTERS

"More printers are harmed by whisky than by all the insanitary shops in the world," President Wright of the Typographical Union No. 16 of Chicago, is reported to have recently said. "Every week dozens of jobless printers come to our relief committee for aid, medical and financial. Whisky is their trouble."

ENFRANCHISEMENT OF WOMEN INDICATION OF ADVANCE OF CIVILIZATION

HON. JOHN M. EVANS, Congressman from Montana

(Excerpts from address delivered in the House of Representatives at the Hearing on the Equal Suffrage Amendment)

Suffrage depends fundamentally upon the fact that the individual members of the human race were created free and equal and that the consent of the governed is the essential requisite in any republican form of government.

As I view the matter, the women have a fundamental moral right to vote, but they have not the legal right, and the only reason they have not that legal right is because our constitution and laws have been made by the other half of the population, and they have been too selfish to permit the enactment into law of the privilege of the franchising of women.

In my judgment, the female portion of our country have essentially the same qualifications as the male and are in all respects the same except in sex, and yet we deny to women the right to exercise this high privilege. We have thus far denied them this privilege, and under the law we have the power to continue to deny it, and we stand here today exercising the "privilege" which our forefathers gave to us, that of making the laws and of continuing to make them in such manner and fashion as to deny those equally qualified with ourselves a like privilege with ourselves. We say in effect to the women of this country, you shall be governed by the laws we make. You may own, buy, and sell real estate, do business in the commercial world, make contracts, collect wages, enter into marriage relations, raise your children, help pay the taxes, and generally bear your share of the burdens of the government, be amenable to the laws of the land, but you shall have no voice or vote in the determination of what the laws shall be. Such a situation is simply the doctrine of force. I can see no other explanation, no logical reason for it or sense to it, except as suggested that the men of the country have the power and hesitate to divide with the women.

Woman Suffrage Movement Shows March of Progress

This great movement for woman suffrage convinces me that civilization is advancing and that it can be only a comparatively short time until universal suffrage will be recognized by all the leading nations of the earth. It is simply a part of the continual and eternal march of progress of the human race toward a genuine democracy. The present civilization cannot, and will not, much longer permit the physically stronger half of the human race to ignore the plain rights of the weaker half. It has been very well said upon the floor of the House:

"The disfranchisement of woman is a brutal usurpation of power, a relic of primitive barbarity, when might made right, which has become unworthy of chivalrous modern manhood."

It has been suggested that equal suffrage would increase the number of electors who are poorly qualified mentally to exercise this right. In answer I wish to say that more girls than boys attend the public schools and, in my judgment, are as well educated as men, and the statistics show that of the criminals of the country only one of every twenty is a woman. And I think that every one will admit that if the women of the country had a voice in the making of the laws they would take as much interest and exercise as wholesome an interest in the enforcement of the law as do the men. With those who believe that the woman's social sphere is in her home I am in perfect accord, and yet I indulge the belief that the few hours devoted to the casting of the ballot would not deprive the home of the presence of the woman to any material extent. And with the influence and exercise of that ballot the home would be very much better protected.

No one will deny that women now enjoy many more rights and privileges than they did in the day of our forefathers. Why not make the emancipation complete, and this talk of emancipated women would then disappear in this and all other discussions? Except on the one question—the right of franchise—she has already been emancipated, and that one right is denied to her, not because of any physical infirmity, because, as heretofore suggested, she performs many of the arduous physical duties of her brother. Surely it is not because of mental weakness, because in the schools and colleges she competes with and wins equally high honors with her brother. Surely not because of lack of moral character. No one, however much he be opposed to woman suffrage, would make that suggestion. Every man, I think, within the sound of my voice will admit that she possesses at least an equal share of morality, and many of us freely admit she possesses much more. Surely it cannot be because of lack of patriotism. The history of the land is full of evidence of her heroic self-sacrifice, not only in times of war, but in times of peace. We do not relieve her from any burdens of taxation; we do not relieve her from burdens for any violation of the law, for her punishment is the same as that of men.

Now, if she possesses the qualifications above stated, why, I ask you in all candor, should she not be accorded the right to vote? And the only answer is that she is a woman; that she differs from us in sex. Is there any reason why sex should be a barrier against voting? It is not a barrier against conducting a business, or managing a farm, or editing a paper, or writing a book, or clerking in a store, or teaching in schools, or working in a factory. We do not consider the question of sex when we impose a tax or inflict a legal punishment or build school-houses for the education of the young. And if all these things be so, why not make intelligence rather than sex the test of citizenship? Why not make intelligence and morality and civic virtue a standard of excellence in this country? And when you do you must of necessity accord to women at least an equal privilege with the men.

Woman a Power in Moulding Public Opinion

From the very earliest days of our civilization down to this moment she has played an active and often controlling part in both the domestic and governmental affairs of nations. Statesmen have paid homage to her ability and power. Authors, poets and sculptors have done likewise. Every succeeding period of the world's history has been marked by her achievements and recorded in poetry, art and literature. There is no field of human endeavor, however humble or exalted, in which she has not played her part and influenced the history of the time. All the world recognizes that she is potential in molding public opinion, instilling the principles of good citizenship into the youth, husbands and fathers of the land; that in all charitable, philanthropic and humanitarian works she is always in the lead.

It has been suggested that in the equal suffrage states no improvement is perceptible in its politics or its policies. This may be an accurate statement of facts; but, on the other hand, I challenge any opponent of this resolution to point to a state where equal suffrage exists and prove that its policies or politics have in any manner retrograded since women were clothed with the right to vote. It may be only a coincidence, but it is my observation that those influences largely inimical to clean politics have been universally found opposed to woman suffrage. Those interests that desire for their own selfish ends to control political conventions and elections; to name the men who shall execute the law—are almost invariably opposed to equal suffrage.

For my part, I am not afraid that politics will be polluted by the participation of women, nor am I afraid that the good women of this country will be polluted by their participation. On the other hand, I am morally certain that the women will preserve their own high standard and that they will have a tendency to raise the standard of our politics and politicians and the men chosen to make and enforce the laws.

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

IMPORTANT

If any individual gives one dollar or more to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund, she is entitled to one subscription to the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL.

Twenty-five cents in payment for this subscription should be deducted from the contribution and sent to the National W. C. T. U. before division of the balance is made between the National and state organizations.

Please bear in mind that twenty-five cents must be deducted by the state treasurer from the contribution and sent to the National treasurer in payment for the Campaign Edition before further division of the amount is made. (See plans for National Constitutional Prohibition for April on this page.)

ELIZABETH P. HUTCHINSON,
National Treasurer

A CHEERING OFFER

Doubtless many local unions are planning to send contributions to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund. Every amount, whether small or large, will be gladly received by the state treasurer.

A W. C. T. U. friend, whose name by her request is withheld, promises to send a check for the generous amount of $100 just as soon after the publication of this notice as the National W. C. T. U. receives from all sources the sum of $200 to be added to the fund.

This is a cheering challenge, which we believe will soon be met.

National Constitutional Prohibition Plans for April

1. If your local union or Young People's Branch did not hold a public meeting in March and secure an offering for the Lillian M. N. Stevens Campaign Fund, you are urgently requested to hold a rousing meeting in April. Here is a great opportunity to enlarge the state treasury as well as the Campaign Fund and your community needs this agitation and education.

2. Have a poster day and a poster parade. Invite the Sunday schools to arrange a poster parade for the intermediate or primary department.

3. The Young People's Branch will observe its special plans for April, all of them in harmony with efforts on behalf of National Constitutional Prohibition, and each local union is urged to heartily co-operate with the young people in the observance of their Red Letter Day, April 14.

Send to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., for the new Prohibition Map (price, 15 cents each; two for 25 cents) to display at all public meetings as proof of the progress toward nationwide prohibition.

Envelopes for subscriptions to the Lillian Stevens Campaign fund have been prepared by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. These envelopes are to be furnished to the states at cost, to be sent by them free to every local union agreeing to place them in the hands of all members and as many others as possible, with the suggestion and hope that in March every local union will send a contribution to this Fund, averaging ten cents per member. This money should be sent through the regular W. C. T. U. channels.

The envelope form of pledge is as follows:

PATRIOTIC OFFERING
WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
THE LILLIAN STEVENS CAMPAIGN FUND (STATE AND NATIONAL)

My Offering is $.....

Pledges should be paid to W. C. T. U. treasurer within thirty days. Contributors of one dollar or more will receive for one year, the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL, the price of the paper (25 cents) being deducted before funds are divided between the State and National W. C. T. U.

The revised leaflet descriptive of the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund can be secured at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and should be widely distributed.

HONORING FRANCES WILLARD'S MEMORY

Happy indeed is Kansas's choice of memorials to Frances E. Willard. By the observance once a year of a Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools of the state, the wonderful personality of the great leader and the mighty movement of which she was so large a part, will be given proper prominence in the minds of the youth of Kansas. If the legislatures of every state in the Union would follow the example of the Sunflower state it would tend to hasten the movement for statewide and National Prohibition. What the Kansas legislators have done should be brought to the attention of the law-makers of other states. The text of the measure in full is given on page three and can be used to advantage in urging the passage of a similar bill in other legislatures.

SIGNIFICANT ACTION OF POSTER ADVERTISING ASSOCIATION

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union feels a special gratification over the passage by the Poster Advertising Association of a resolution barring all future liquor advertising. It heartily congratulates the members of the association on their action in thus lining up with the forces of righteousness. It is to be hoped that all friends of the anti-liquor movement will take early opportunity to express their appreciation of the commendable action of the association.

THEY WELCOME THE PROTECTION OF THE LAW

The suffering which the enforcement of the Harrison Anti-Drug law is causing the victims of the drug habit is making serious-minded people realize how great was the necessity for such a law. Not only did the unfortunates need the protection of the law but without it they were absolutely helpless to control their appetites. Many users of drugs express their gratitude for being deprived of them and say they are willing to endure their present tortures in order to aid the physicians in effecting a cure.

Not otherwise is it with the victims of the liquor habit. It is a well-known fact that many a dry victory has been won by the aid of the votes of drinking men who knew they were powerless to free themselves from the slavery of drink with the saloon so diabolically accessible; who earnestly desired to be deprived by law of their personal liberty, and to that end gladly cast their votes for prohibition.

How long can a government founded on the principle that every individual has a right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, ignore the needs and demands of the thousands of men and women whose will power has become weakened and often well nigh destroyed by drink. A long step in the right direction has been taken in enacting the anti-drug law; the next step must be the enacting of a national law which will make it difficult, if not impossible, for men and women to secure that poison of poisons, alcohol.

WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS OF SWEDEN APPEAL FOR PROHIBITION

The executive committee of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Sweden has just presented to the government and parliament a petition signed by women representatives of 400 organizations, asking for prohibition of the liquor traffic as long as the war lasts.

INCIDENT OF CLOSING HOURS OF CONGRESS

Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, one of our National W. C. T. U. representatives at Washington, D. C., in a personal letter writes graphically of the closing hours in the House of Representatives, alluding to the musical features of the occasion as follows:

Miss Ellen Stone and I stood in the gallery near the Southern members, who were grouped together. They sang, "Way Down on the Suwanee River," "Aunt Dinah's Quilting Party," "Farewell, My Own True Love," "The Old Oaken Bucket," "Dixie," "America," "Three Cheers for the Red, White, and Blue," attempted the "Star Spangled Banner," sang "Nearer, My God to Thee," and "Old Black Joe." When the Congressmen joined in singing "Old Black Joe," I said to Miss Stone, "Let us sing, 'All Around the World the Ribbon White Is Twined,'" and we did sing two verses—with all our hearts. I think our Mrs. Stevenson never dreamed her hymn would be sung in the House of Representatives. Congressman Heflin of Alabama started "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," and gallery and House united in the dear old hymn, the men joining hands, giving us a realizing sense of the fact that we are brothers and sisters working for the same cause—the cause of God and of humanity.

PERSONAL MENTION

The son of Mrs. J. P. Nye, superintendent of the Press department of the Iowa W. C. T. U., Mr. John A. Nye, has been appointed vice-consul of Ceylon by Secretary of State Bryan. Mr. Nye sailed on February 20 from San Francisco for Colombo.

A SUGGESTION FOR OTHER UNIONS

The local union at Dexter, Maine, has the good habit of always beginning its local union meeting with the repetition or the singing of the "Invocation" in the "Temperance Songster." This same local union proposes to close each of its meetings with the repetition of Mrs. Stevens' message, "The Blessed Tie."

DES MOINES BENEFITED BY CLOSING OF SALOONS

No, it was not one of the temperance radicals who said it, but The Chicago Banker, a bank periodical, which, in its issue of February 27, under "Iowa Banking News," gave the following optimistic statement of the situation in saloonless Des Moines:

"Des Moines banks did a big business last Saturday, supplying cash to merchants and grocers. At first the cause for the sudden demand for coin was not apparent to the financiers. Then they realized that the saloons of the city had been closed a week. Workmen, who had been cashing their checks in the thirst parlors on Saturday nights and leaving a goodly share of the exchange in the saloonkeeper's till, were, instead, getting them cashed in legitimate places of business. Des Moines has been dry two weeks now. If business has been injured, as the wets so long predicted, there is no evidence of that fact. Already the merchants see a stimulation of business, and money which formerly went for booze is already beginning to go for food and clothing and in the payment of honest debts."

Requests for the revision of the leaflet, "Put 'Em on the Dry Line," are being received. As in the case of Miss Gordon's playlet, "The Children's Tribute to the Prohibition States," noted in a recent paper, it seems advisable to defer the matter of bringing this leaflet up to date until after January 1, 1916, when the laws in most of the new prohibition states will go into effect.

The passage of the statewide prohibition bill by the Arkansas legislature will close what is said to be the largest fruit distillery in the world, the Mason and Carson Distillery Company.

A bill to establish a dead line for all saloons one-half mile from the Kansas state line has been introduced in the Missouri legislature. It is said that the head of one of the large packing plants has written urging its passage, as have many others along the border line.

The significance of the fact that all but one of the forty-three Representatives who voted against the Palmer Child Labor bill in Congress also voted against a nationwide suffrage amendment, is being brought to the attention of the public by the suffragists. In both cases the states' rights argument was used.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

MEDITATION CORNER

One of the joys Christ gives His disciples is the joy of service. The brook that turns the mill wheel sings on its course; it is the stagnant pool that has no song.—N. Fay Smith.

The people in all lines of duty who do the most work are the calmest, most unhurried people in the community. Duties never wildly chase each other in their lives. One task never turns another out, nor ever compels hurried, and therefore imperfect, doing. The calm spirit works methodically, doing one thing at a time, and doing it well, and it therefore works swiftly, though never appearing to be in haste.—J. R. Miller.

In the quiet of home, in the heat of life and strife, in the face of death, the privilege of speech with God is inestimable. I value it more because it calls for nothing that the wayfaring man, though a fool, cannot give—that is, the simplest expression to his simplest desire. When I can neither see, nor hear, nor speak, still I can pray so that God can hear. When I finally "pass through the valley of the shadow of death," I expect to pass through it in conversation with Him.—W. T. Grenfell.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

Mr. J. Burritt Smith, Madison, Wis., husband of Mrs. Marcia A. B. Smith, National organizer and lecturer. Mr. Smith was in the front ranks of temperance workers in his state, and was intensely interested in many lines of reform. As a writer he was of great aid to the cause of prohibition, his story, "High Joe" being recognized as of especial value. The hearts of white ribboners will turn to Mrs. Smith with loving sympathy in this, her hour of bereavement.

Mrs. M. E. Wheeler, Geneva, Neb., for many years a missionary in China. She was a long time friend of the organization and a constant reader of The Union Signal, which she delighted to pass on to others.

Mrs. Ethyl Matthewson Paine, Prescott, Arizona, a W. C. T. U. worker since early womanhood and for two years recording secretary of the state organization.

Bishop Henry L. Barkley, who for twenty-five years has served as an Oregon pastor, presiding elder and bishop, passed to the homeland on March 7. Mrs. Barkley, who survives her husband, is a devoted friend of the W. C. T. U., and in her years of effort for our organization she always had the loyal support and encouragement of the bishop. The sympathy of white ribboners is extended to Mrs. Barkley in her bereavement.

MEDAL CONTEST NOTES

Rev. J. F. McKenzie, pastor of the Presbyterian church of Bartlett, Texas, writes: "We will soon hold our fourth silver medal contest, and when we have held our sixth we will hold a gold contest. In spite of the rain and the mud our last contest was a decided success. We had the largest attendance of any we have ever had. The interest is growing fast, and we believe that through these contests we are doing a great deal for prohibition; in fact more than we could do through regular lectures. We expect to keep the good work going."

Rev. R. B. Fisher of Monticello, Ill., who has held over seventy contests in the different churches of which he has been pastor, recently wrote that he is more interested in the work than ever before and hopes to keep it up.

How the Individual Benefits

Among the testimonials received telling of the benefits of contest work to the individual, the following are especially interesting:

"I maintain I am greatly indebted to the W. C. T. U. for the interest and special attention given me during my contest career. This course has been of benefit socially, because it has taught me how to meet people. Morally it has established a foundation for a resolute Christian character, and educationally it has enabled me to uphold and sustain the standard of total abstinence and prohibition."—CLIFFORD NADEN of Illinois state university.

"When I entered W. C. T. U. medal contest work it proved a turning point in my life, because it caused me to take an interest in the welfare of our country and to become a fighter against the liquor traffic. These contests not only make orators, but they also do what is far more important—build sturdy citizens."—ECKART VISSERING.

"The W. C. T. U. contest work has been an important factor in my life, and I feel I owe it a debt. It has helped me to choose my life work, the ministry, as it taught me I had a mission to fulfill. It is my aim and prayer that I may prove worthy and thus in some measure pay the debt."

—ROBERT ENSELMAN

In preparing for their life work, it is hardly necessary to say that whatever vocation these young men may choose, they will forever stand arrayed on the side of prohibition.

Frances E. Willard Bronze Tablets Presented to Chanute (Kansas) High School

The seventeenth anniversary of the heavenly birthday of Frances E. Willard was observed in the public schools of Chanute, Kansas, by the unveiling of two beautiful bronze tablets bearing the likeness of the great philanthropist and reformer. These bas-reliefs, one for each of the new high school buildings, are the work of Lorado Taft, the great American sculptor, whose services were donated, through the solicitation of Mrs. Mary L. Parsons, chairman of the committee in charge, the W. C. T. U. paying only the actual cost of the two castings from the model of the sculptor. The tablet in the junior high school building has been placed in the principal corridor at the right of the entrance, facing a bronze tablet bearing Lincoln's Gettysburg address.

Mrs. Lillian M. Mitchner, president of the Kansas W. C. T. U., formally presented the tablets to both the junior and the senior high schools, J. F. Hughes, superintendent of the city schools, presiding at the meetings afternoon and evening. Mrs. Mitchner spoke eloquently of Miss Willard's early life and of her success as an educator at a time when the profession was a new one for women. She told how she came to take up the great work which she carried through to successful completion, and dwelt feelingly upon the wonderful faith by which she was sustained and strengthened.

At the afternoon service more than five hundred students of the junior high school voluntarily pledged themselves to promote sobriety and a saloonless nation, at the suggestion of Franklin Brinegar, spokesman for the student body of the junior high school. At the exercises at the senior high school in the evening, Morgan Booe, spokesman for the student body, promised that when he and his comrades looked upon the tablet, they would remember the high ideals for which Frances Willard stood and would strive, like her, to serve their day and age.

A letter was read from Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., urging the students "with patriotism of true Kansans to help secure for the nation the law that today blesses the Sunflower state—prohibition, and prohibition enforced."

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Those who attended the Saratoga county mid-winter institute at Schuylerville, Pa., March 2, had the privilege of listening to profitable addresses by prominent educators and W. C. T. U. workers. That the cause is moving forward in the "dear old state of Pennsylvania" seems to be the popular verdict.

A courtesy, the first of its kind in the history of the state organization, has been extended to the W. C. T. U. of Alabama by the State University in an invitation to Miss Christine I. Tinling to speak at that institution. The privilege was secured through the efforts of Mrs. Ellen Peter-Bryce of Tuscaloosa.

"A Prophecy of 1920," published in THE UNION SIGNAL during 1913, was a part of the Willard Memorial day meeting of the Parishville (N. Y.) union.

Mrs. Leila O. Stratton, National organizer and lecturer, in a four weeks' itinerary through southwestern Alabama, organized fourteen unions and assisted in the organization of Mobile county. She also organized the first colored union in the state at Mobile, with Mrs. E. Grey Snell and Mrs. M. H. Leath, both wives of prominent pastors, as president and secretary, respectively. Mrs. Anna Brown Hall, president of Mobile county, in a follow-up trip of eleven days, organized five new unions, held a silver medal contest at Thomasville and secured subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL.

Mrs. Sylvia B. Norrish, corresponding secretary of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., was the speaker at the institute held at Kane, March 6. The children of the second, third and fourth grades of the Clay street school furnished musical numbers and gave a rousing temperance yell.

At the close of an all-day meeting in memory of Miss Willard held by the city federation of unions of San Diego, Mrs. Helen M. Stoddard, on behalf of the federation (of which she was the retiring president) presented to the newly elected president, Mrs. Eva C. Wheeler, National organizer and lecturer, a valuable gavel made from the limb of a cedar tree which was planted by Miss Willard in her childhood. Visitors from Illinois, New York, Colorado, Wisconsin, and Nebraska were present at the meeting.

Mrs. Eliza E. Peterson, National superintendent of Work Among Colored People, was one of the speakers at the funeral service in Chicago, of Amanda Smith, of whose home-going mention has been made in THE SIGNAL. Mrs. Peterson told what a blessing had come to her in having had the aged saint as her associate in her W. C. T. U. work since 1913. "She could not travel. Her voice was not to be heard from the platform in righteous protest against evil, as of old," said Mrs. Peterson. "That was not her purpose. God gave to her heart the burden of our department of Work Among Colored People, that while she abode in her beautiful home in Florida, she might pray for us and hold us up in the arms of her faith; and during her connection with my department, the women of my race have taken hold of this work with an interest surpassing anything in my past experience."

Mrs. Laura B. Hale, Iowa's state organizer, is at work in the Sixth district. In Council Bluffs alone, she gained 82 active members and eleven honoraries, securing ten subscribers to The Young Crusader and eleven to THE UNION SIGNAL. She will continue work in this district throughout the month of March and then go to the Fifth district, through the Fourth, Third and Second.

The Lewisburg (Tenn.) union, of which Mrs. Florence Ewell Atkins, National organizer and lecturer, is president, reports a most successful Willard memorial meeting on a Sunday night in February at the Methodist church. The program consisted of eight-minute speeches by pastors, Rev. Atkins speaking on "The Mother-heart of Frances Willard," the recitation, "How Still She Stands," by an elocutionist, and the presentation of the Memorial Fund with an address by Mrs. Atkins on "How We Seek to Honor Miss Willard." For the first time in the experience of Lewisburg white ribboners a W. C. T. U. meeting drew a full house, and a good collection was received, ten dollars of which was forwarded for the Memorial Fund. During the two months that Mrs. Atkins has been president, the union has gained eighteen new members, and the aim for the year is an increase of one hundred. The work of the union will include an effort to place the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL in a large number of homes, to secure an appropriation from the county court for a rest room of which the W. C. T. U. will take charge, and where posters and literature will be displayed. Special work is being done in the public schools and over six hundred blotters and several hundred cigaret arithmetic stickers have been distributed.

CHILDREN SHOWED IT

Effect of Their Warm Drink in the Morning

"A year ago I was a wreck from coffee drinking and was on the point of giving up my position in the school room because of nervousness.

"I was telling a friend about it and she said, 'We drink nothing at meal time but Postum, and it is such a comfort to have something we can enjoy drinking with the children.'

"I was astonished that she would allow the children to drink any kind of coffee, but she said Postum was not coffee, but a most healthful drink for children, as well as for older ones, and that the condition of both the children and adults showed that to be a fact.

"I was in despair and determined to give Postum a trial, following the directions carefully. It was a decided success and I was completely won by its rich, delicious flavor.

"In a short time I noticed a decided improvement in my condition and kept growing better month after month, until now I am healthy, and do my work in the school room with ease and pleasure. I would not return to nerve-destroying coffee for any money."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50 tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost per cup about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

A TRIBUTE TO EVA

JENNIE N. STANDIFER, Gulfport, Miss.

"So Eva Carroll is dead!" I exclaimed

"Yes, she passed away more than ten years ago," said my friend with a sigh. "You knew her as a lovely young girl, but I wish you could have known her as a charming, Christian woman."

"I heard nothing of her after I left the community," I said. "Tell me a little about her life."

"Well," began my friend, "the Carrolls, as you know, were wealthy before the Civil War. They lost everything before Eva grew to womanhood except their plantation home, which was heavily mortgaged. To make matters worse, Mr. Carroll and his only son died the year after Eva finished school. Eva taught in the woman's college in our town and helped support her mother and younger sister, Annie.

"One summer, a Dr. Holbrook, newly graduated from an eastern medical college, located at Linden Hill. The old physician had died and all were glad to welcome the handsome, friendly young doctor. He boarded with Mrs. Carroll. Before the summer was half over everybody knew that the young doctor was heels over head in love with Eva. She seemed to return his admiration, and as they were thoroughly congenial, it seemed to be an ideal match. The community waited eagerly for the announcement of the engagement. Eva had resigned her position as teacher in the college, and the marriage might be expected to take place early in the autumn.

"One day Dr. Holbrook went to the railway station to get a package of medicines sent him by a city druggist. When he returned that evening, Dave Winters was driving the buggy and the doctor was huddled down by the dashboard, limp as a rag. Dave said it was a case of acute indigestion, and the Carrolls and everybody else believed it for a while. The neighbors were very sympathetic and much concerned about their popular young doctor. But one day Mrs. Carroll made a discovery. The maid who put the doctor's room in order found a number of empty flasks which had unmistakably contained whisky. The young man, when asked to explain, acknowledged having been on a spree, but declared that he would never again yield to the temptation of drink. The neighbors, one and all, expressed decided disapproval of such conduct. Later when another drunken bout showed that the drink habit could not be cured by a mere promise, the people became indignant. Dr. Holbrook had not only deceived the entire community, but had won the affections of a lovely young woman.

"Eva applied for her position in the college, and all knew that the engagement with the doctor was broken. No one was surprised when he left Linden Hill for a neighboring city to accept a position in a hospital. Many predicted that he would soon be dismissed because of his habit, but he was not, and in less than two years he had gained the reputation of being the most skillful surgeon in the state.

"Separation from Eva did not cure the young doctor's love for her. He made frequent visits to our town and at last it was rumored that the engagement had been renewed. When I was married Eva was one of my bridesmaids, and she confided to me that she had put the doctor on probation for a year. She still taught in the college.

"The year passed. Eva's marriage was to take place a few weeks after the college commencement. Dr. Holbrook was to come the very day his probation ended and there was to be a quiet home wedding, with only a few intimate friends present.

"I went to the station the evening the doctor was to arrive, to meet my sister, who was to spend her vacation with me. Eva and Annie Carroll were sitting in a surrey waiting for the train. I joined them and we jested and talked about the marriage until the train came. Uncle Ned, an old family servant, held the horses when we went forward to meet the expected arrivals.

"A crowd had gathered on the platform and we were forced to stand some distance from the train. My sister got off and then Dr. Holbrook with two other men. They were talking loudly and reeled as they walked. I met my sister and we joined Eva and Annie. I could see that Eva's face was white and drawn as from bodily pain. Her lover and his companions passed so near us that we could smell the whisky of which they had partaken liberally.

"Of course, the two girls could not return to their home at Linden Hill with only the negro driver at that late hour of the evening. I directed Ned to go home and tell Mrs. Carroll that her daughters would remain with me that night. Eva consented to my plan and went to her room before supper was served, requesting to be alone. She did not shed a tear, but the agony in her face haunted me for months.

"Next morning I sent a note to Dr. Holbrook at the hotel which he frequented, telling him that Eva would see him in my parlor at ten o'clock. He came at the appointed time—the picture of remorse and humility. After he left, Eva told me that she had consented to give him another trial.

"That summer Eva's sister married and went west. In August her mother died and the old place was sold. There was little left after debts were paid, so again Eva resumed her position as teacher in the woman's college.

"Throughout that year Dr. Holbrook continued to visit Eva and each time he confessed to having broken his promise of total abstinence. He still held his position in the hospital, but it was probably because he kept his habit hidden from the managers. Soon after school closed that year he came to see Eva and insisted upon an immediate marriage. He argued that she needed a home and he needed her to help him reform.

"She firmly refused to marry him or to name a day for the marriage, declaring that he must prove his reformation. He was very angry when they parted and asserted that she could not care for him or she would help him to be true to his vows. A week later the city dailies contained an account of the marriage of Dr. Holbrook and a Miss Bradford, a society belle.

"I went at once to Eva. She was now boarding with the housekeeper at the college. I found her lying on a couch in GETTING MORE POPULAR.

Portland [Ore.] Evening Telegram

From west to east, from south to north,
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!

Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.

HER BOY

Cecile L. Houghton, Elkhorn, Wis.

"Hello, mother" shouted Glen, bursting into the little dining-room. "Is supper ready? What's this I'm getting mixed up in?"

"My chiffon," laughed his mother. "It stuck to your coat as you passed. Here, thief, bring it back!"

"What are you doing with such thin stuff?" asked Glen, carefully feeling the texture between his thumb and fingers.

"I'm trying to fix over my hat. It looked very well," she added half apologetically, "until after the picnic when we were caught in that shower. This gray will be rather pretty with my suit, I think, don't you?"

"H-m-m," agreed the boy, "only—" and he eyed his mother's work critically—"shouldn't there be something bright on it somewhere?"

"How observing you are, Glen! Yes, I was thinking that some pink roses or buds, perhaps, would look pretty tucked in there. I haven't anything in the house that I can think of, though." Not to have anything like that in the house usually meant doing without, so mother merely laid aside the hat and said, "Sit down, laddie, and I will bring our supper. You must be tired after your long walk."

"I'm in a hurry, mother," said Glen. "I'm going after my wheel tonight. Listen!" He merrily jingled some change in his knee pants' pocket. "The paper route won't know me when I go sailing around it Monday. Wasn't it lucky I saw that ad.? The bicycle is almost as good as new. You shall see it for yourself tonight—tonight, mother!"

"I am glad," responded his mother. "It will make your work so much easier. My! Doesn't it make me feel rich to know I have a son big enough to be out—in—business? Times were pretty hard for us when you were a little chap. More than once I have wondered where your next pair of little shoes was coming from. They wore out so fast, you know, and they cost most as much as big ones. But now for more than a year you have clothed yourself, haven't you, laddie, and saved enough for the wheel besides."

"Soon I'll be buying your shoes and dresses, too, and paying the rent. You won't have to work at all." Glen straightened proudly at the generous thought, while the mother's face shone with a pleasure which lasted long after her little business man had finished his hearty supper and gone gaily away on his errand.

"He will make good, I'm sure he will," she said to herself a dozen times. "Not all our difficulties are over yet. He does not know just how hard it is to make ends meet, but he is a boy to be proud of! To think of his planning for my happiness!" Suddenly Glen's rosy face was displaced in the woman's imagination by another resembling his but slightly older. She saw it as she had often done in the days that were past—full of love, contrition and hope. "He meant to be kind to me!" she assured herself. "When he did not drink, how happy we were! Let me forget the unhappy days, the cruel whisperings of his neglect by those who understood not the power of his temptation. For the boy's sake—our boy—I will think of him only as he was in the time of his victory." The busy fingers hastened to arrange the gray chiffon so as to cover the faded places on last year's hat. Before the work was finished, however, a light step was again heard on the porch and the door opened to admit an excited boy bearing a small parcel which he exultingly laid in the midst of the trimmings on his mother's lap.

"Open it and tell me if they are right!" he cried.

"Your wheel, dear, where is your wheel?"

"Oh—that can wait. I saw something I wanted worse just now. Will they do?"

"Will they do?" repeated the mother in surprise, admiring the rosebuds and the green leaves. "And what is this? Gloves—gray gloves to match the suit! Oh, Glen, boy, you shouldn't have done it!" and then Glen did not quite understand why a great wet tear splashed on his coat as his mother drew him close in her arms.

MARCH OF THE LEGIONS

Bring the good old temperance pledge,
And then we'll sing a song,
Sing it with a spirit that
Will start the world along;
Sing it, Loyal Temperance Legions—
What a mighty throng!
While we go marching to victory.

Chorus

Hurrah! hurrah! we bring the jubilee,
Hurrah! hurrah! the pledge will make you free,
So we'll join the chorus with the nations o'er the sea,
While we go marching to victory.

License high and license low
Is everywhere a sin;
War against King Alcohol
The children may begin;
"God and Home and Native Land"
The watchwords that will win,
While we go marching to victory.

We're young in years but strong in faith,
We'll fight him with a will,
Drive him right and drive him left
From every vale and hill;
Where sorrow reigns in many homes,
The hearts with joy shall thrill,
As we go marching to victory.

A TRIBUTE TO EVA

her room, the paper containing the announcement of the marriage of her lover in her hand. I was shocked at the change in her appearance since I had seen her the day before. Her face was bloodless and her eyes sunken as from continued illness. She accepted my sympathy with a gentle dignity and whispered with a suppressed sob: 'We will never speak of that matter again, dear friend.' Two months from the day the news of Dr. Holbrook's marriage reached her, Eva quietly passed away.

"One October afternoon I was driving through the old family cemetery when a man came down the roadway. I looked up to face Dr. Holbrook. His head was bared and in his eyes were unshed tears.

"'I didn't know she was dead until today!' he moaned. 'O Eva, Eva, how empty the world is without you!'

"'You have no right to say that,' I declared indignantly. 'You are married, Dr. Holbrook.'

"'Yes, to a giddy, soulless butterfly I married in a fit of pique. I didn't know what I was doing. Why didn't you let me know of Eva's illness?'

"'Eva Carroll died of heartbreak, Dr. Holbrook,' I replied. 'Letting you know of a broken heart would hardly have wrought a cure.'

"'I loved her better than life itself,' he groaned with tears streaming down his cheeks and his stalwart form shaking with sobs. 'Oh, if I could only recall the past! If I could only atone! Had she married me perhaps I would have had strength to overcome the inherited love of drink and become a true man.'

"'Not one man in a thousand reforms after he wins the woman he loves. It is better that Eva was spared the life-long suffering of a drunkard's wife.'

"'I know I am weak,' he said sorrowfully, 'but if I could only atone for the suffering I brought into her life!'

"'You can, in a way, Dr. Holbrook. You can do it by giving your life to the service of humanity; by living the life you know would have brought joy and happiness to Eva.'

"For a moment he stood with bowed head in thoughtful silence, and then declared brokenly: 'God helping me—I will. So far as is in the power of mortal man I will atone. Hereafter my life shall be—a tribute to Eva!'"

PENNSYLVANIA KNOWS NO DEFEAT

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

Mrs. Ella M. George, president of the Keystone State, says, "We remember that when Wilberforce first introduced his bill in the English Parliament for the abolition of the slave trade it was defeated by seventy-six votes. Five times the bill was voted down, but Wilberforce's strenuous faith knew no defeat and at the sixth introduction of his resolutions in 1807 it passed the house by two hundred and sixty-seven majority. The temperance people have no cause to worry when the Hobson resolution received a majority of the votes cast on December 22 by the House of Representatives.

"Billy" Sunday spoke in the state before enthusiastic audiences composed of white ribbon women, suffrage women, club women, and all kinds of women. Upon one occasion, glancing at an immense banner bearing the names of fourteen dry states, which was stretched along the wall of the church in which he was speaking, he commented: "I am happy to tell you white ribboners that I helped to make two of those states dry. Talking about the banner reminds me of the troubles of a woman in this state. After election in November, when the nine dry states were increased by five, she procured a small wall map and pasted white pieces of paper over the fourteen states. She has been kept on the alert ever since seeing that the white was properly applied. March 1, eighteen are shown white and now she is waiting impatiently for Utah or Wyoming to go dry so that there will be a great white way from the Southeast on the Atlantic to the Northwest on the Pacific. Utah has stepped over the line, and the bill only awaits the governor's signature."

Strenuous Work for Membership Gain

Mrs. Marion, the state treasurer, is urging every union to aim for an increase equal to one-third of its membership. If this is accomplished Pennsylvania will go up to the next convention 50,000 strong. She has faith that it will be done.

Temperance essays continue to be popualr in Pennsylvania schools and much temperance sentiment is thereby created.

Carbondale, Lackawanna county, is doing well. It has over one hundred and fifty members, meets weekly and presents interesting programs. Schuylkill county, one of the blackest counties, is trying hard to get the saloons reduced to one for every 500 of population instead of one for every 175, as is now the case.

Governor Brumbaugh is doing his best to secure county option, and many are hoping for success. Rev. William A. Sunday took a hand in the campaign while preaching to men in the afternoon and evening of February 28. About 24,000 responded to his request that all who would work for local option would rise. The churches will present petitions and no doubt they will be signed by thousands.

The suffragists are rejoicing in "Billy" Sunday's following appeal for votes for women:

"The normal way to get rid of drunkards is to stop raising drunkards. I don't know what you'll do in Pennsylvania, for your legislature looks as if it were soaked and pickled in alcohol.

"If you men haven't decency enough to enact laws to protect the homes, then give the women a chance to vote, and they'll do it.

"If I remember rightly, we had a war in this country once because of taxation without representation.

"Nine-tenths of the opposition to woman suffrage crawled and wriggled out of the breweries and distilleries. They know that when women go to the polls and drop a ballot, it will be the doom of the grog shop.

"It makes me sick to see some weasel-eyed, drunken, whisky-soaked degenerate depositing a ballot and keeping clean women away. The nation that refuses to grant the requests and calls of women to protect the homes from the forces that are eating out their vitals is doomed, whether it is this or any other nation."

Pennsylvania Railroad Cuts Last Connection with Rum

The Pennsylvania railroad has decided not to seek renewal of licenses for the sale of liquor in Broad street station, Philadelphia, and at the New York terminal of the railroad. The battle of the railroad with liquor began some years ago with the order affecting employes, who were told to stay away from saloons and who were threatened with discharge if they drank on duty. In July, 1912, the railroad ordered the abolition of rum on its trains. Up to May of last year three restaurants of the railroad sold liquor. On May 1, 1914, the liquor selling in the Pittsburgh restaurant was abolished. With the non-renewal of the restaurant liquor licenses the Pennsylvania railroad severs its last connection with rum.

Pennsylvania has nine dry counties, two, Forest and Tioga, having put on their white dresses this spring by the non-granting of license. Indiana county has but one licensed place left.

"Drys" Buy a Hotel

The temperance people of Snyder county have bought the Washington House, which is the only licensed house in Middleburg, and the largest hotel in the county. This hotel is located directly opposite the court house, and it was often said, would be the last hotel in the county to lose its license because of necessity. From present prospects the county seat of Snyder county will be made dry April 1, after having had rum sold in the village for more than a hundred years.

Children Ask for Temperance Legislation

Three hundred thousand Sunday school children of the state have signed the petition to the state legislature asking for temperance legislation. The separate petitions will be bound and prepared for presentation to the legislature as soon as the fight begins on local option.

HERE AND THERE

At the annual town meetings in Vermont, March 2, only 19 of the 246 towns and cities in the state voted to license saloons. Of this number three of the towns are so small it is believed no license will be issued.

Since the Alabama convention twenty-four new unions have been organized in the state, and the prospect is good that the state will meet its apportionment of one thousand new members for the year.

The Swift union of Pittsburgh, Pa., on March 4, celebrated its forty-first anniversary, the union having been organized in March, 1874, with Mrs. William Rhoades president and Mrs. Annie E. Duff, corresponding secretary. The exercises, participated in by Rev. S. Hampert, Professor Smith of Allegheny high school and a class of girls, were most inspiring, as was also the Frances Willard memorial meeting held two weeks earlier.

The Woodburn (Ind.) W. C. T. U., with the aid of loyal temperance men, has succeeded in making white that part of Allen county in which it is located. A remonstrance signed by 180 names (29 more than a majority) was filed on January 29, and on February 6 Maumee township was declared dry. One saloon closed February 5, one closes in June, and the last one on July 5.

Hon. O. O. Mickler, mayor of Callahan, Fla., and his wife recently entertained the members of the local W. C. T. U. at their home.

At a meeting of the federation of the Flint (Mich.) W. C. T. U. members of the four local unions and officers of the county union were entertained. Plans for a coming local option campaign were enthusiastically discussed.

Mrs. M. W. Newton, National organizer and lecturer, has recently organized four unions, four L. T. L.'s and nine medal contest classes. "She builds up the work of our organization wherever she goes and is always a benediction in a home," one worker writes of Mrs. Newton.

The third annual banquet of the Allegheny county W. C. T. U. was held in Pittsburgh late in February. Covers were laid for two hundred men and women, and Mrs. Elizabeth S. McMaster acted as toastmistress. Mrs. Ella M. George, state W. C. T. U. president, Rev. Mecca Marie Varney of Michigan, Dr. Samuel Black McCormick and Professor Charles Scanlon were among the speakers. A chorus under the direction of Mrs. Jennie DeVinney, county musical director, sang "A Saloonless Nation in 1920," "The Rummies Are on the Run," and other temperance songs. Mrs. R. B. Robinson acted as chairman of the banquet committee.

A CONTEST IN ORATORY IN SOUTH AMERICA

Some months ago a great mass meeting for the Loyal Temperance Legions of Montevideo was held in Theatre Solis, the largest and finest public building in the city. This "Fiesta" was announced as a "Contest in Oratory" and was arranged by Miss Hardynia K. Norville, World's white ribbon missionary to South America.

More than 1,500 children, with their parents, packed the great auditorium. Seven public schools, each of which has over five hundred pupils—the North American Academy for Boys, the Crandon Institute, the Scientific Temperance Club, and the Boy Scouts were all represented on the program.

Through the courtesy of Senor Lanza, the white ribboners were given the free use of the building. Eleven boy orators declaimed their selections most creditably. The Minister of Public Instruction, who is also the Minister of Foreign Relations, was invited to attend the contest. He replied that he was called to an audience with the President of the Republic, but would send his family to represent him.

A rose drill proved a most attractive feature of the evening program. The seventeen young girl participants have organized a "Helping Hand Club," and are wearers of the Y. P. B. silver badge. The queen of the rose drill is president of the club. This drill was so greatly enjoyed that Miss Norville is receiving invitations from some of the public schools to teach similar drills to the pupils. There is a medal offered by the public schools to the one that presents the prettiest drill at the close of the year.

"FOR HUMANITARIAN REASONS"

KATHARINE L. STEVENSON

In this age of deadly strife and peril, when it seems sometimes as if all the gentler instincts had been ruthlessly swept away before a fierce tide of barbaric impulse, it is good to find here and there some proof that the fine flower of civilization has not been wholly lost. Such proof came to the world on February 16 in the report sent out by the Associated Press from the Electro Steel company of Pittsburgh, Pa., to the effect that, for humanitarian reasons, it had declined to make an estimate on 1,000,000 drop forge shells valued at $4,000,000 wanted by the British government. The profit to the company would have been at least $450,000. When questioned later in the day, Charles E. Bryson, president and general manager, said:

"Our company refused to consider this contract because we think warring nations should not be encouraged. So long as they are able to purchase supplies of this nature the war will continue. We are looking for business. but we would not consider the furnishing of munitions of war to any country that is engaged in conflict. In making this refusal we are not opposed to England and her allies, nor to Germany and her allies. We don't desire to make money from instruments that are used to slaughter people, and we think that other companies might do well to consider the matter in the same light."

"For humanitarian reasons." What other reasons should have weight in a Christian civilization? What others have so little apparent weight accorded to them by the world at large? If humanity and not the selfish ambition of the few were considered, how speedily this monstrous war would come to an end. How impossible forever after in the world's history would war become. How quickly would the liquor traffic and all its attendant evils be banished from the face of the earth.

Thank God that at least one great corporation is willing to take a stand "for humanitarian reasons.". May He hasten the day when this policy shall be the rule and not the exception throughout the entire world.

THE WHOLE STORY AGAIN

Here is the complete account of a Connecticut winter tragedy as told by the New York Times:

Arthur Davis, a fisherman of Greenport, L. I., reported tonight that a small boat was picked up off Fisher's Island this noon containing the bodies of two men who had been frozen. The boat contained six frozen ducks, two guns, and an empty jug labeled "Fishel & Levy, wholesale liquor dealers, Hartford." There was nothing on the bodies to identify them and no oars were found in the boat.

"Under the operation of the present prohibition law, wonders have been worked in North Carolina. The improvement can be seen in every city and hamlet, and many men who voted against the present law have since its operation become convinced that it has been more than worth while," says the Charlotte Times in speaking of the result of prohibition in North Carolina.

The public officials of Clarksburg, W. Va., are quoted by the Clarksburg Telegram as saying that but one-seventh as many arrests were made in the city during July, August, September and October under prohibition as were made during the corresponding months of last year. Three members of the police force have been cut off as a result of prohibition.

Opinions of European Leaders of Finance on Liquor Traffic

Drink is doing more damage to this country than all the German submarines put together. We are armed with full powers for the defense of the realm. We have great powers to deal with drink, and we mean to use them. We shall use them in a spirit of moderation and wisely, but quite fearlessly, and no doubt the country will support our action.

—HONORABLE LLOYD GEORGE, Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain.

It is difficult for foreigners to realize how great are Russia's economic resources, and how much greater they have become since the promulgation of that humanitarian prohibition law which is felt by the Russian people themselves not as a restriction, but as an inestimable boon conferred upon them by their provident monarch. The productivity of every class of workman in Russia has already increased by from thirty to fifty per cent, and I need hardly point out to you what that one act connotes in a population of 170,000,000, to say nothing of the cessation of the waste which formerly accompanied and followed the consumption of alcohol.

—M. BARK, Russian Minister of Finance.

Everyone will admit that it is necessary to protect the French race against the dangers which face the nation from alcoholism. If the Chamber stops at the suppression of absinthe it will not have gone far enough. There must be a reform of the legislation on all alcoholic liquors. This question will be forced on all governments consequent on the enormous evils flowing from alcohol. It is not a financial question only, it is a great moral question in which the interests of the nation are concerned. The government asks that the Chamber will take steps such as will do honor to itself and the nation.

—M. RIBOT, French Minister of Finance.

SECRETARY BRYAN LEADS 12,000 TO SIGN PLEDGE

Recruits for the total abstinence army to the number of 12,000 are reported to have been gained at the spectacular temperance demonstration at Philadelphia, the evening of March 15, when Secretary of State William J. Bryan spoke from "Billy" Sunday's platform. The meeting was the first of a series to be held in the principal cities and towns of the country in a movement which originated with the temperance committee of the Federal Council of Churches.

Mr. Bryan Attacks Liquor Evil from Economic Standpoint

"It is estimated that the people of the United States spend almost $2,500,000,000 annually on intoxicating liquors," said Mr. Bryan. "The cost of the Panama canal, the most gigantic engineering feat in history, was about $400,000,000. Is it not appalling to think that we spend for drink every year something like six times the cost of the Panama canal?

Spend for Drink Three Times as Much As For Education

"I have endeavored to obtain an accurate estimate of the amount of money spent on education in this country and the figure given me is $750,000,000. We spend for drink more than three times as much as we spend for education.

"The annual appropriations of the Federal government are a little less than $1,250,000,000. This sum includes the salaries of all the public officials, from the President down. All of these government agencies employed in administering the Federal Government of this great nation are operated at an expense of less than $1,250,000,000.

"Think, if the mind can comprehend it, of this nation spending twice that amount for alcoholic liquors.

Tax is $25 a Person

"Here are three comparisons. Do they help you to understand what a drain on this country the drink habit is? According to the estimate given the average tax laid upon each citizen by the use of liquor is more than $25 a year—so, counting five to the family, more than $125 to the family annually.

"When it is remembered that this tax is not uniform, but is on the average heaviest upon those least able to bear it, is it not worth while to consider how the nation can be relieved of this enormous burden?

"The object of this meeting is not to discuss the governmental phases of the liquor traffic, but rather to deal with remedies that can be applied by the individual without the aid of statute law, and fortunately the plans which we present tonight involve no controverted questions.

Total Abstinence the Remedy

"What differences of opinion there may be as to legal remedies no one doubts that total abstinence is, as far as it goes, a complete remedy for the drink habit. Every one who by his own resolve separates himself from those who drink and allies himself with those who do not drink to this extent lessens the amount of liquor consumed and lightens the task of those who are called upon to deal with the subject through legislation or through the enforcement of law. Our appeal is to the individual, and I ask your attention while I present a few of the reasons which, to my mind, justify total abstinence.

"In the first place, let us consider the physical reasons against the use of alcohol. To begin with, drink brings no advantage whatever to one who drinks, and since intelligence demands a reason for any course of action, the fact that no good reason can be given for drinking ought to be sufficient to prevent the use of liquor to any extent.

Shows Effect on Efficiency

"But the use of liquor is not only unnecessary and indefensible from the standpoint of advantage but it is objectionable as a beverage even when taken in the smallest quantities. It has been scientifically demonstrated that the moderate use of alcohol decreases a man's efficiency. An athlete cannot do his best if he drinks at all, a stenographer will make more mistakes when drinking, and a soldier will be less accurate in his aim.

"The accidents in industry are increasing in proportion as liquor is consumed. These are but a few illustrations of the effect of alcohol, even when only a little is taken.

"But there is an argument still more easily understood—namely: the increasing demand for total abstinence which is being made by employers. On boats grog used to be furnished to sailors. It is becoming more and more the rule to deny it to them altogether. The owner of a ship cannot afford to trust passengers or cargo, or even the vessel, to a man who allows his brain to be befuddled by alcohol.

Holds Pain Overcomes Pleasure

"The use of alcohol not only lowers a man's productive capacity, but imparts constitutional weakness to his offspring. Even if the pleasure derived from the use of alcohol were not manifest by a pain that overcomes the pleasure, even if it did not manifest itself in the impairment of the individual who uses it, the fact that its effects are transmitted to the child and thus visits an undeserved punishment upon it, ought to weigh mightily with the man who has not decided the drink question for himself.

"But there is another reason why one should not drink at all, namely: the danger of drinking to excess. It cannot be truthfully said that every moderate drinker becomes a drunkard, but it is true that every drunkard comes from the number of those who drink moderately; none come from the ranks of the total abstainers.

Hold Man His "Brother's Keeper"

"Even if a man were sure that the moderate use of liquor would be of no physical injury to him, and would feel that he had money to spare for drinking, still, in view of the awful consequences of indulgence in liquor, can he afford to gratify himself at the expense of those who, weaker in resisting power, may be led astray by his example?

"The use of liquor is the direct cause of crime, of poverty, of degradation and despair, and we never can tell when we shall ourselves suffer at the hands of those who are victims of intemperance.

"Property is insecure and life is unsafe in proportion as the use of liquor contributes to the number of criminals, the number of paupers, and the number of the desperate."

NATIONAL PROHIBITION IS INEVITABLE, DECLARES GOVERNOR CARLSON OF COLORADO

"You might as well try to sweep back the tides of the ocean as to stop or delay the progress of the prohibition movement," declared Governor Carlson of Colorado, in a speech delivered on March 9 at Moline, Ill., at a celebration by the Swedish-American Republican Club of Illinois, in honor of John Ericcson, the noted inventor.

Speaking first of the industrial unrest which seems to be prevalent in the country, Governor Carlson said:

"There are several other issues in the hearts of the people that tower above all others and are bound to be written into some party platform two years hence. One of these questions is that of National Prohibition. You might as well try to sweep back the tides of the ocean as to stop or delay the progress of the prohibition movement.

"As one member of the Republican party to another, I sincerely hope that the party will take up this cause and give no quarter until the nation is DRY.

"National prohibition is inevitable and the party should take up the fight because it is right and because it will bring victory. The conviction is growing steadily that the use of intoxicating liquors is unnecessary, is an economic waste and is morally wrong.

Few Persons Try to Justify Its Use

"Except for its disputed necessity for medicinal purposes, there are but few people who attempt to justify its need. Those few do not distinguish between necessity and habit. Those who would justify it on the ground of personal liberty forget that in a democracy each member is directly interested and concerned with the attitude and action of the other. Every citizen is a unit of strength or a unit of weakness. If he is patriotic, industrious, thrifty and sober, he adds the force of his life to the moral and economic strength of the nation. If he is unpatriotic, lazy, wasteful and intemperate, he contributes the same forces against the nation.

"We have passed the time when we can be satisfied with fashioning our lives alone. It is our Christian and patriotic duty to be concerned with our brother's welfare. In our own lives day in and day out we must control and eliminate the wasting passions, and a government likewise must destroy that which wastes and is wrong in order that the good may survive.

Average Man is Too Close to Poverty

"From an economic standpoint it is well known that the average man today is too close to the poverty line. If sickness overtakes the head of the family or if he is out of employment for a few days for any other reason it too frequently happens that hunger looks in at the door. I have seen men who spend day after day in the black darkness of the mine and night after night in the grogshop. As I watched these men making no advance, wasting their wages, shut out from the light of day and from the sunlight of pure and ennobling thought at night, I did not wonder that they became pessimistic, disheartened and sometimes disloyal.

"We cannot compromise on this question, nor can we escape it by saying that it is a moral and not a political question. It was attempted to make the same distinction on the slavery question. A party platform never makes an issue. Parties cannot evade them, for they are made in the hearts and minds of the people. As the Republican party came into existence on the wings of the great moral issue of slavery, so it will be inspirited and victorious as the champion of this cause or go to defeat fighting or evading it."

PROHIBITION IN COLORADO MEANS PLENTY WHERE THERE HAS BEEN WASTE, ASSERTS GOVERNOR CARLSON

Colorado in embarking upon its career as a prohibition state is fortunate in having a governor who is not only heartily in sympathy with the prohibition movement, but most enthusiastic as to the benefits which will result from the enforcement of the newly enacted measure.

"No law with greater possibilities for good has been written so far in Colorado," declared Governor Carlson at the time of signing the prohibition bill recently adopted by the legislature. "When enforced, this law will stop a heavy drain on the taxpayer. It will add much in safety to every home where boys and girls are growing up. It will bring joy and hope to many a wife and mother who heretofore has not had her fair share. It will put shoes and groceries in places where hunger has sometimes gnawed and cold too often pinched. It will make substantial business more substantial. Colorado people will never feel again that the waste and danger and the pain and madness occasioned by this great vice are necessary for them to live, or to be happy or prosperous. We should begin at once to plan definitely to replace the saloon with the gymnasium, the lecture hall and the public library."

Final Act in Colorado's Prohibition Drama

MRS. ANTOINETTE A. HAWLEY, Honorary President Colorado W. C. T. U.

"For ways that are dark, and tricks that are vain," the liquor men have the heathen Chinee beaten to a frazzle, as the devious course of legislation in Colorado proved to the "lookers-on" in the senate gallery for many anxious days in February.

To see a Denver senator proudly proclaiming himself "wet," line up with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union on the absolute uselessness of liquor as a medicine, and its undesirability at the sacrament, in order to defeat a bill providing for such use (as specified in the amendment), was "peculiar" to say the least.

His arguments were so specious as to deceive the very elect, who never dreamed it was all a shrewd plan to pass a law that was so drastic that it could not be enforced, and that then resubmission would be its only logical sequence.

But the imperturbable patience and wisdom of Mrs. Hungerford and her legislative committee, backed by a governor who could not be side-tracked, finally won out, and a happier woman than the state president could not have been found as she sat beside Governor Carlson and watched him sign the bill for which she had fought so long and bravely. Everybody drew a deep breath when those immortal pens had been presented to the chief actors, and a flashlight had shown to the world just how it was done, while the silent testimony of that "pen" enshrined at state headquarters, will always be treasured.

The bill prohibits intoxicating liquors in clubs, all kinds of liquor advertising, taking and soliciting orders, bootlegging, restricts common carriers and provides for medicinal and sacramental use under stringent regulations. All violators of the law, including physicians, druggists, officers of clubs and other societies as well as bootleggers, are subject to the same penalties. There are provisions for search and seizure, injunction, officers to enforce, ouster of officers who fail or refuse to act, and the governor is given full power with a yearly enforcement fund of $5,000. The law is to be construed to include all intoxicating liquors, no matter how small the percentage of alcohol and no matter what other ingredients may be in them and we are satisfied that it will prove effective.

This year the Eighth district held its usual March institute just previous to the mid-year state executive, so that we might have some of our bright women outside of Denver on the program, and the able talks on "Prohibition and Missions;" "Open Doors," "Smoke and Success," as well as a clever symposium on "The Model Union," proved the wisdom of the plan, and made the morning program a delight.

In the afternoon, of three members of the assembly who were to have enlightened us on "The Present Status of Prohibition," only one, Senator W. O. Peterson of Pueblo, chairman of the senate temperance committee, was able to be present; but he was a host in himself, and made an illuminating speech which was highly appreciated by his audience.

The state president followed with a forceful address on the same theme, which her women thought quite equal to that of any senator who ever happened—in Colorado.

The next day the executive conferred and lunched and hobnobbed delightfully together after the usual manner; laying wise plans for gaining members and influence, and information and cash, to carry forward the great work in Colorado and the nation, of which more hereafter.

NUMBERING THEIR DAYS!

The following incident, told by the Philadelphia North American, is only one of the many prophetic signs which show that the extermination of the liquor traffic is not far distant.

"A West Philadelphia liquor dealer recently consulted an acquaintance in the real estate business about the advisability of transferring his license from a side street location to a Market street corner. The change would involve an increased investment. 'Stay where you are,' counseled the real estate expert. 'You would get a more prominent situation by moving; but that, in my judgment, is just what you should avoid. Better stay where you're tolerated. If you try to get out on Market street, you'll only attract attention and stir up opposition. Public opinion is getting mighty sensitive about the saloon business, and you'd run the chance of losing the place you've got.'

"'I guess you're right,' said the saloonkeeper. 'I put the proposition up to one of the biggest men in the wholesale trade. 'Don't think of it,' he said. 'Don't invest another dollar. And make all you can now, for inside of ten years we'll all be put out of business.'"

The notable thing about this story—which is perfectly true—is that no one will question it. The conditions referred to by the real estate man and the wholesaler are apparent to every observer. The liquor traffic is doomed.

No Life in the Bonded Whisky Market! Why?

The Situation as the Kentucky Correspondent of Mida's Criterion Sees It.

EDITOR Criterion:

I have almost concluded that old man Webster, young John B. Standard and our friend Christy Century, the well known lexicographers, failed to discover and refused to coin a word which could be utilized to describe the feelings which now fill the breasts of the distillers, the wholesale liquor dealers and brokers in that section of the country where Bourbons are sold. Stupefied does not express it. Neither does hypnotized, nor depressed, nor hopeless, nor discouraged. Nor yet distressed, nor disgruntled, nor in fact any of the numerous "dis" family. I reckon it might just as well be said they are cautious—extremely so in fact, and somewhat amazed—cautious in extending their business and amazed at the sweep of what appears to be prohibition sentiment throughout the West and South. This feeling in itself would tend toward the curtailment of trade even if there were no concrete conditions which also affect it. I understood that the retail trade at Des Moines, Ia., was given forty-eight hours to fold its tents and silently steal away. If this be true then other sections of the country may expect to be treated in the same way. To close one's business in two days necessarily limits credit and when this important feature is curtailed no one can expect a thriving business.

Regardless of political platforms in Alabama, the legislature ran off with the governor and passed a prohibition bill.

Arkansas took snap judgment and passed another.

Iowa followed suit and repealed the mulct law thus putting in force statutory prohibition. These three states dropped the liquor traffic's head in the prohibition basket in the brief period of three weeks. So the question arises, What next?

Idaho does not give one much hope. Montana, with woman suffrage, stands as a menace to the trade. Utah is exceedingly doubtful while Nebraska, the home of the "great and good Bryan," will in 1916 put a crimp in the business. The county option law in Minnesota which has just passed the upper house by the narrow majority of five will if it becomes law make eighty per cent of the state dry. The legislature in Missouri is on its hind legs threatening to paw the life out of the trade and so it goes. It does appear as if states west of the Mississippi and south of the Ohio, with the exception of Texas and California, will prove a barren field in the next few years.

Since hope springs eternal in the breast of the trade, however, many profess to believe that some of these states will at some time return to sanity and the traffic will again have some chance for its white alley. It is hard to conceive that the great distilling business of this country which contributes hundreds of millions of dollars each year to the maintenance of this government can be or will be wiped out. It is the hope that with the return of reason laws suitable for the regulation of the business will be enacted instead of laws which destroy it. * * * *

It seems needless to say, therefore, that there is no life in the bonded whisky market.

Governor Clarke of Iowa Tells Why He Refused To Veto the Clarkson Prohibition Bill

"The banishment of the saloon ought to mean the emancipation of many a laboring man, the joy of the wife in his home, better conditions and a better outlook on life for his child." This is one of the many striking statements in an open letter issued by Governor Clarke to explain why he refused to veto the Clarkson prohibition bill, as he was urged to do by hundreds of liquor men.

The governor gave the letter to the newspapers to serve as an answer to the thousands of telegrams and letters he received suggesting the course he ought to take with reference to the bill. We quote from the letter, as follows:

"The Clarkson bill was passed by an overwhelming majority of the general assembly. Both parties supported it by a remarkably large vote. In the house a most persistent effort was made to extend the time for it to take effect. Every proposed amendment was rejected by a crushing majority. Thus was expressed the sentiment of the legislature.

"Did this reflect the sentiment of the people of Iowa? It must be said, I think, that when their representatives thus speak they do voice the will of a large majority. At any rate this must be assumed.

"The wave of public sentiment against the saloon and the liquor business has been rapidly rising higher and higher during the last five or six years. What has happened in Iowa was inevitable sooner or later. That the saloon is a doomed institution, that not a word can be said in its defense, that it is a menace to society, has come to be the settled conviction of a vast and rapidly increasing number of people. This ought to have been apparent to liquor men as well as to even casual observers of the trend of public thought. The storm, so long gathering and so plainly in sight, has at last broken. An appeal to me as governor for shelter and protection was made. I was called upon to turn back the tide, if only for two or three years.

Employes of Liquor Interests Urged Veto

"Representatives of labor from some of the cities of the state called upon me in person and many wrote to me urging me to veto the bill because they were employed by liquor and allied interests. To all such men, and to laboring men in general, I beg to say that of all men, you ought to be the last to urge the continuance of the liquor business. The laboring man and his family suffer most from it. Daily on my way from the capitol in the evening I have seen laboring men stopping at the saloon and crowding the bar, drinking, spending the money that ought to be used for the support and happiness of the wife and little children. The men engaged in this employment ought to take a longer look ahead. They ought to think of their brothers who toil and of their wives and children. The banishment of the saloon ought to mean the emancipation of many a laboring man, the joy of the wife in his home, better conditions and a better outlook on life for his child. You who have called upon me, you who have written me, you who have passed resolutions, should stand like men for your home, your wife, your babies, your country.

Pride in Citizenship

"Iowa has a pride in her citizenship. Her people are law-abiding. An assumption that any portion of them will become deliberate violators of the law is unwarranted. The good reputation of the state is the pride of all of the people. The good name of the cities is essential to their continued growth—their business and home development. Especially is this true under the present attitude of the public mind on this question. To be distinguished for respect for law is the greatest asset a city can have.

"I hope these suggestions may have your thoughtful consideration."

Significant Remonstrance by Physicians

The physicians of West Chester, Pa., are a unit in believing the liquor traffic to be a menace to the public health which ought no longer to be tolerated. Very recently a remonstrance, signed by the twenty doctors of the town, was filed in the county court, protesting against the granting of licenses.

The remonstrance, which was signed voluntarily by these physicians, reads as follows:

"To the honorable judges of the court of Chester county: We, the undersigned physicians of the borough of West Chester in the county of Chester, respectfully petition the court, in determining whether or not a legal necessity exists for the granting of retail liquor licenses in the said borough, to have in view the following considerations, which, we feel, may properly be regarded in passing upon the question of necessity.

"We respectfully submit that living as we do in the days of preventive medicine, we stand united in an effort to prevent the spread, the use or the abuse of any agent which we believe to be a factor in the development of disease.

"Alcohol is a poison, and as such its sale as a beverage should be prohibited. Poisoning with alcohol continuing over a considerable period of time will produce definite changes in the structure and function of the brain and the nerves, similar in character to the changes produced by other poisons. It is the direct cause of serious or fatal physical diseases and by lowering the resistance it predisposes to infections, notably tuberculosis and pneumonia.

"By many authorities alcohol in the parents is considered a major cause in the production of idiotic and imbecile children, and it also acts as a strong factor in increasing the death rate and decreasing the birth rate.

"To accomplish successful results in the treatment of inebriety the door of the saloon should be closed and the saloon itself made to suffer such isolation as is legally applied by quarantine to a place infected with contagious disease, and we do not deem its sale for the satisfaction of a morbid appetite any more of a necessity than the sale of any other poison."

GOVERNOR MOSES ALEXANDER SIGNING IDAHO'S PROHIBITION MEASURE

The interested group which surrounded Governor Alexander's desk as he affixed his signature to the measure which will make Idaho a dry state after January 1, 1916, included white ribboners, ministers of the city of Boise, members of the legislature and the superintendent of the Idaho Anti-Saloon League. Mrs. Nettie R. Chipp and Mrs. Mollie L. Vance, president and vice-president, respectively, of the Southern Idaho W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Thompson, another state officer, are standing on the left of the governor. On his right stand his granddaughter, Martha Simons, dressed in white, and her ten-year-old brother, Alexander, in the uniform of a state militiaman. Members of the W. C. T. U. arrived early and were personally conducted by the Governor to his private office, where four pens presented by those interested were used in signing the bill.

REGENERATED RUSSIA

A questionaire containing a series of inquiries with regard to the effect of prohibition of vodka on the peasants of Russia has been sent out by the zemstvo statistical bureau of the province of Zimbirsk. The replies received, as published in the Petrograd Reitch and quoted by George Kennan in a recent number of The Outlook, give a vivid picture of the wonderful transformation of the villages.

A village priest writes: "It is difficult to describe in words the transformation that our peasants have undergone since the drinking of vodka was prohibited. They have become better dressed, they are more industrious, and they show more thoughtfulness and intelligence. Even confirmed drunkards have expressed to me their satisfaction with the changed conditions of life. One of these 'weak brothers' who formerly was drunk most of the time and who spent in the vodka shops his last pood of flour and the last eggs from his hen coop, is now making a new gate for his front fence. In the evening he sits at home and discusses further domestic improvements with the old woman (his wife) who, for the first time in years, is free from black and blue fist marks. Such a sight is most encouraging. It is touching, also, to see how another drunkard now walks home—instead of being led home—from the bazaar, and how joyfully he is met by his well-shod and well-dressed children. All that the people think of now is how the reopening of the vodka shops may be indefinitely postponed."

"The prohibition of the sale of vodka," says another correspondent, "has affected the life of both peasants and artisans in the most beneficial way. All of their earnings are now spent for useful things or in domestic improvements. In the streets of villages one no longer hears indecent songs or sounds of revelry, and in the families there are now no drunken quarrels or fights. On holidays the village is quiet. The people sit at home in an orderly way and talk about their domestic affairs. You will not see in the streets a single intoxicated man, nor hear a single abusive word. The wives and children of drunkards are praying God to bless the government which has forbidden the sale of vodka. In a word, since the vodka shops closed the people have been reborn. All now is peace and quiet."

A peasant farmer replies to the questionaire: "It seems as if people had become different. You don't see men going barefoot in the streets, as formerly. Now everybody is respectably dressed and well shod. In a few days will begin the season of weddings. Heretofore at every wedding we have drunk at least one hundred rubles' worth of vodka. Now we buy a lamb for two rubles, and that ends it. In short, the village people that we used to know have disappeared. We seem to be living in another world. There are no disputes, no fights, no robberies and no fires. It is as though the people in becoming sober had become cultivated. At the village meetings affairs are discussed with common sense, not with cries and abuses as heretofore. For this reason decent people are now going to them. Formerly they were attended only by drinking men. The principal subject of discussion now is how to get rid of vodka forever."

From many parts of the province and from many groups and classes of people, come scores of similar statements. All welcome the reform, and all describe graphically the beneficent results that it has brought about. With hardly a single exception, the correspondents note a spiritual uplift and a moral regeneration. The effects of such regeneration are most clearly seen in the disappearance of hooliganism, the decrease in crime, and the changed conditions of village life. Here are a few extracts from replies to the statistical bureau's questionaire:

"The whole population is now peaceful and quiet. We don't need policemen to maintain order. Every citizen is himself a preserver of order."

"If the vodka shops are closed forever, the prisons will have no occupants, the insane asylums will be empty, the judges will have nobody to try, and the doctors will have nobody to prescribe for."

"At the present time our people are cheerful and hopeful. They are taking newspapers, and on holidays these papers are read aloud to crowds, in which you will see not a few men who were formerly drunkards."

"Life is beginning to show evidences of rebirth, and now we need more schools. It would be well to make high schools out of the distilleries."

"The poorer people are now saving tens of rubles, and the well-to-do hundreds. Our settlement alone has saved more than a thousand, and in the whole country the savings must amount to milliards."

"Since the abolition of vodka the labor of the peasants has increased in productiveness, and besides that, the money formerly spent for drink now goes for improvement in economic conditions."

"In the province of Zimbirsk, the savings from total abstinence amount, approximately, to nine or ten million rubles. That, in years of good harvest, was the sum spent annually for drink. It represents an expenditure of from four to four and one-half rubles per capita, or twenty-five rubles per household. This agrees with the statement of other correspondents, that in the whole population (drinking and non-drinking together) the cost of vodka to the average family was two rubles a month. This shows how considerable are the savings that the closing of the vodka shops has enabled the peasants to make."

The results of the reform may be briefly summed up in the following words of a peasant correspondent:

"Sobriety in our village has done a blessed work. It has carried peace and quiet into social life, it has brought gladness to families, it has increased prosperity, and, finally, it has made the peasant better, purer, and more moral, because nothing did so much to lower and ruin him as vodka. Long may sobriety reign in our villages!"

HARMONY OF PROHIBITION FORCES IN OREGON DISCOURAGES LIQUORITES

Special Correspondence.

The W. C. T. U. mill grinds steadily along in Oregon. We have a somewhat different "grist" this year as we have not a statewide campaign on our hands. Many are certain that a referendum will be forced on our prohibition law, but as yet no definite movement has been made in that direction. At the meeting of the State Hotel Men's Association, early in January, it was definitely announced that on February 1 a bill would be introduced into the legislature making it lawful for hotels to serve liquor with meals. It was also announced that February 2 would see a large delegation of hotel men in Salem to lobby for the bill. These dates came and went but no bill and no hotel men appeared. Evidently "the ground hog saw his shadow" in the fate of similar measures introduced—and killed—in the Washington legislature.

Our prohibition law was a matter of keenest interest. It was the first bill introduced into the house by Dr. J. E. Anderson, representative from Wasco and Hood river counties. From the first there was a determined effort to stir up dissension among the temperance forces. As long as we continued to work in the perfect harmony which has existed for the past year the opposition knew its cause was hopeless. Every effort to put us before the people as disagreeing concerning the provisions of the law failed. While we did not see alike on many sections we talked them over among ourselves and came to an agreement, always presenting our united front to those who wisbed a law passed which would be non-enforceable or unconstitutional. Never to be forgotten are the days when the bill came up for passage in the house and senate. But two votes in the house and one in the senate were against it. It was a happy day when Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, state president, designated by Speaker Selling as special messenger, accompanied by Dr. Anderson, with a group of white ribboners following, took the bill from house to senate and finally to the Governor for signature.

Governor Withycombe expressed his high approval of the law and pledged himself and his official position to see that it is well enforced. We are now expressing our approval of the Anderson law, and of the members of the legislature who passed it, by receptions in their honor. The largest of these was a ratification luncheon at Hotel Portland, in Portland, March 4, under the capable management of Mrs. G. L. Buland. The long receiving line was headed by the president of the state W. C. T. U., with Governor Withycombe next in line. Dr Anderson and wife, with many other senators and representatives, and their wives, were also in line as guests of honor. About 300 were at the luncheon and the toast list, while long, was interesting. The governor again expressed his unqualified approval of the law, as did other influential politicians who were present. The columns of publicity given to this luncheon by all our large dailies must have been discouraging reading for those who would like to force a referendum on the law. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is certainly doing most important work in thus keeping alive public sentiment and holding the issue constantly before the people.

An effort was made to secure a weakening of our scientific temperance instruction law by our legislature, but Mrs. G. L. Buland, our capable state S. T. I. superintendent, met the emergency splendidly and the law was left unchanged.

While our prohibition law and other legislative matters have been of supreme interest, the regular department work has been taken up with vigor. Because of the campaign last year many departments have not received their usual attention. There is a marked renewal of interest, and many local and county institutes are being held. Multnomah county holds an institute every month, and has most instructive meetings.

> This marks one of the greatest occasions in the state history. I am glad that the votes and work of women had such an important part in carrying through this measure. I was happy to sign the bill. To my mind it is one of the greatest pieces of constructive legislation ever passed.
>
> —Governor Withycombe of Oregon.

Marion and Polk counties united to hold an institute in Salem, which was well attended and of special interest. Adjournment was taken the second afternoon to visit the legislature and listen to discussions on measures in which we were concerned.

Douglas county has held a series of five local institutes, under the leadership of Mrs. Ida Marsters, county president, ably assisted by Mrs. Cornelia Templeton Hatcher, National organizer. Mrs. Hatcher was also present at an institute in Josephine county, held at Grants Pass. Mrs. Hatcher is filling a five weeks' engagement in the state. Everywhere her hearers are charmed and urge her to return. Owing to the limited time she can give us, many places who wish to secure her services must be disappointed. We are hoping she may return to us again.

The spring executive meeting will be held in Portland, March 18 and 19, at the new and commodious headquarters of the Multnomah county union. The evening meeting, March 18, will be a prohibition jubilee with Mrs. Hatcher, Mrs. Unruh and Mrs. Harford, all National organizers, as speakers. Friday noon the white ribboners will have luncheon at the Hazelwood, and in the afternoon the program will be open to the public.

The W. C. T. U. at Perrydale, learning that no Bible was included in the school library, presented one; also a book of Bible stories for younger children. The superintendent of schools reports much interest in Bible reading, and as a result, the Sunday schools have increased attendance.

One of our unions is working to win the National prize for the greatest gain in local union membership. The union has a fine president and is offering good programs and active work as an inducement for membership. We hope to succeed in winning the prize.

Sunnyside union (Portland) has taken up a definite study of civic problems. Its first "lesson" is to familiarize itself with the provisions of the new prohibition law.

Central union (Portland), the largest in the state, is engaged in a membership contest. Its energetic president, Mrs. Hattie Wilson, says the contest will continue until every member secures at least one new member. As each new member is expected to secure another, it looks as if the contest could be continued indefinitely. It certainly is a great success. Under the auspices of this union Dr. Frank Loveland, pastor of the First Methodist church, on March 7, preached an inspiring sermon to a large audience. It was the Willard commemorative meeting and Dr. Loveland paid to Miss Willard and the W. C. T. U. a most eloquent and appreciative tribute. Dr. Loveland will be remembered by those who attended the Omaha convention.

The Oregon City union has been actively and successfully engaged in a campaign for a pure water supply. The Oregon women take their citizenship seriously and are most forceful in civic affairs.

The above are but glimpses of the many and varied activities of our unions. Willard memorial meetings are reported from many places. Calls are coming from unorganized counties for help. The state president is responding to many appeals and is visiting many unions.

Our state headquarters is a busy place but we always have time to welcome visitors. Mrs. Mary D. Russell, corresponding secretary, is constantly at headquarters and we hope white ribboners from other states who visit Portland this summer will find their way to 607 Dekum building, corner of Third and Washington streets. Mrs. Russell will be delight-

Liquor Interests Disarmed by National Prohibition Amendment

HON. RICHMOND P. HOBSON

[Excerpts from statement by Mr. Hobson, published in Congressional Record of March 4, 1915.]

The final wording of the resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition, confining the operation of the Federal amendment to the question of sale for beverage purposes, takes from the hands of liquor every weapon with which it has heretofore fought us in the struggle for the votes of the great body of the public—the average good citizen. On the crucial battle ground where the final result is always settled, liquor now stands completely disarmed. Stripped of its cloak of pretended morality, unable to invoke any principle of right, it is an easy task for us to show the average patriotic citizen how hideous is the naked form of the liquor traffic, feeding upon the youth, tainting the blood before the children are born, disrupting the home and its parental love, driving the boys upon the streets and into the mines and factories, cheating them of their right to an education, menacing the productive power of labor, robbing the nation of its wealth, and laying heavy burdens of taxation for the support of its finished products of crime, pauperism and insanity, undermining the public health and the public morals, blighting politics, and menacing the very foundations of free institutions, dragging men, nations and civilizations to their downfall and destruction. And what is it all for?

That a few thousand brewers and distillers might continue their monopoly and their vassals continue to dispense to the unsuspecting public a degenerating, poisonous and habit-forming drug, to fill their coffers with blood money.

What is proposed?

Not to change any institutions, not to curtail any rights, but simply for the national government to reach this national ill with a simple, universally recognized national remedy, continually applied by all civilized governments—simply to prohibit barter and sale and those things pertaining to sale. With liquor completely disarmed, our forces, with reasonable co-operation and with that devotion and inspiration that come from such a glorious cause, can move forward on an irresistible march.

This "for sale" wording of the resolution has enabled us to choose the battle line. Our strategy has isolated liquor. The battle line steadily forming ranges liquor with its blood money, its degenerate purchasable vote, in front of the determined manhood and patriotism of the nation.

The Result of Arkansas' "Think It Over" Campaign

MRS. MINNIE U. RUTHERFORD, President of the Arkansas W. C. T. U.

That the education of the masses in Arkansas has been thorough was evidenced by the ease with which the house handled the bills providing for prohibition in any form. The usual number of local bills was introduced prohibiting the sale of liquor within ten miles, five miles and so on—sometimes including a whole county—and each was passed almost without discussion.

Our bill had been introduced in the senate, meanwhile, and we were having difficulties of all kinds. In the first place, the bill itself, drawn by others, and placed in the hands of one of our best men, was far from satisfactory, providing only for the prohibition of the issuance of a license to sell liquor. The hardest work I did was for an amended bill providing for the prohibition of the manufacture and sale, as well as the issuance of a license. When this important change was made, there was the sort of opposition which we all expect—amendments which would submit the bill to the people at the next general election (to which we replied that there would be no objection to that program if we could insure a hands-off-of-the-election policy on the part of the liquor traffic, which could not be done), amendments of every conceivable kind, and then filibustering began and was carried on until our men gave the warning that no business of any kind would be transacted if the opposition insisted on filibustering further. Then the restive house said, "It takes you too long to do business over there. Just give us that bill and we will show you how it should be done." In the shortest possible time the house put it through.

Amendments Offered Thick and Fast

Amendments were offered in rapid succession, but the great majority made it easy to table them and in a spirit of the utmost good humor, finally one of our men said, "Mr. Speaker, if the gentlemen will tell us the purport of the amendment which he has just asked leave to propose, we will table it while he writes it out." We who packed the galleries were thrilled by the remark for we knew they could do it and would, and that it meant that the citizenship of the state is so well educated on the question of the effects of liquor that its real wishes spoke from the floor of the house and that the W. C. T. U. had been the greatest factor in this education. The vote stood 74 to 22 in favor.

> I believe the most manly act of my life, an act that will mean much to me, to my conscience, to my wife and my two little boys, and to the people of the state to which I owe so much, was the act I performed when I placed my signature to the bill which gave Arkansas statewide prohibition.
>
> —Governor George W. Hays

The senate amended the bill as passed by the house making it effective seven months later. Then to our amazement, the opposition began to "speak." Again, of course, in the gallery, I watched the curious spectacle of the yesterday's liquor senators crowding into today's band wagon and when the roll was called only two votes were registered against the bill and one of these, in explaining his vote, said that while he had always believed in letting communities govern their own affairs and his community had always voted for license (and therefore he had given his word to vote for "submission" and could not break it) he was a convert to prohibition and never again would he vote against any temperance measure; and again and again since, has he demonstrated the fact that, as he said on that occasion, it was the turning point of his career.

Great Was the Rejoicing

God was on his earth that day and great was the rejoicing. When, a few minutes after the vote was announced, the senate adjourned, and I hastened to grasp the hands of our faithful fighters, the aged chaplain met me and asked with tears in his eyes, "Are you properly thanking God?" The following day the house concurred in the senate amendments, and while it was acting, the county court of Pulaski county was hearing the petition case under the Going law and racing to hand down a decision in favor of the saloons that they might get licenses before the governor signed the bill. Their minion in the house held the floor for an hour, reminded constantly by our men that he was helping the Little Rock saloon men to get their licenses issued—and he succeeded. The case was decided and fifty-five licenses were issued in forty-four minutes. I went to the governor's office to tender my poor old fountain pen, which has written and signed thousands of W. C. T. U. letters within the last ten years, with which to sign the bill, and there I found representatives of the liquor traffic trying to induce the faithful governor to delay signing. He came over to me, took the pen and said, "Gentlemen, I shall sign the bill when it comes to me," and it came speedily, and a voice over the telephone announced to the county court-house, "The bill is signed." The clerk halted the line of applicants saying, "I issue no more licenses. This bill provides a penitentiary penalty for issuing licenses and I take no chances." The line melted away. If only the voice could sooner have announced the signing, Little Rock would have been saved another year of sin and shame.

Curious Situations Develop

Some curious situations have developed. Fort Smith had issued no city license save by the month, but state and county licenses had been issued for the year. The authorities have declared the saloons illegal and propose to fine them regularly, keeping them open. Pine Bluff threatens to open its saloons and contest the constitutionality of the law. But all these things will pass away with the year 1915, and 1916 will see our splendid state all white and ready to begin the elimination of the effects of its long continued poisoning.

Law Enforcement Bill Passed

A bill looking toward law enforcement, founded upon the Tennessee nuisance act, has passed. Another bill has been introduced providing that grape growers may manufacture wine, for sale outside of the state, but the temper of the house will not tolerate it. A bill to allow the sale of cigarets to adults was quickly put to death, a few days ago, but—and this grieves me much—both houses have passed a bill providing for race track gambling at fairs.

Our bill providing for an industrial school, for dependent and delinquent children, will probably die on the calendar, as will some of our other bills, because of the shortness of the session, but with the liquor traffic out of the way their success at the next session is assured.

Grasping the hands of our successful sister presidents in the recently victorious states, we can congratulate ourselves that the trend is upward, ever upward.

LATER. The governor has vetoed the bill providing for race track gambling at fairs.

VICTORIES OF 1915

During the first three months of the year 1915 all records for prohibition and woman suffrage victories have been broken. January witnessed the passage over the governor's veto of the Alabama statewide prohibition law. During February Arkansas, Iowa and Idaho outlawed the liquor traffic within their borders by legislative enactment, and South Carolina, Idaho, Iowa and Montana passed referendum measures submitting the question to the vote of the people.

During March the legislatures of Vermont and South Dakota passed referendum statewide prohibition measures, and the legislature of Utah acted favorably upon a prohibition bill, which, however, was vetoed by the governor. A county option bill, which it is believed will eventually put out of existence eighty per cent of the saloons of Minnesota, passed both houses of the state legislature. The Kansas legislature by unanimous vote established in the public schools of that state a day to be designated "Frances E. Willard Day," on which instruction is to be given and exercises conducted relative to the history and benefits of prohibition.

Laws providing for the enforcement of statewide prohibition as adopted by the voters of Colorado and Oregon at the fall election of 1914, have been passed by the respective legislatures.

Another event of peculiar significance was the action taken by the Poster Advertising Association at its meeting in Palm Beach, Fla., that no further contracts for advertising whisky, distilled or spirituous liquors will be accepted and that present contracts shall not be continued beyond December 31, 1915.

Only a little less notable have been the victories for woman suffrage. As a result of action of the state legislatures of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, West Virginia, Iowa and South Dakota, the question of a constitutional amendment providing for woman suffrage is to be submitted to the people in the first four states in 1915, and in the last three in 1916.

To the onlooker this remarkable series of victories seems to have been easily won, but the men and women to whom credit is due know they have been achieved only by years of education and agitation; of agonizing and prayer, and of tireless crusading in legislative halls. They realize, too, that only the first battle of the great war has been won, and from now on the work of education of the public must be indefatigably pursued. The liquor traffic is fighting for its life and every paper in the United States that money can buy will be bribed to give publicity to their misrepresentations and falsehoods. Not for one hour can the advocates of prohibition rest on their laurels. We must be more alert than ever before to warn of the dangers of even moderate drinking, and to tell of the benefits of prohibition to individuals and nations.

WHOSE THE BLAME?

Not many years ago eight boys were sent to a House of Refuge for breaking into a saloon and stealing a quantity of liquor. When asked why they had committed this crime one of the boys replied, "Why, to get drunk on, of course! What do men drink whisky for?"

Sure enough! Why do men drink whisky but to realize its intoxicating effects! Not always, indeed, do they intend to become "crazy drunk," but no man can drink alcoholic liquor and not know that he is taking "an enemy into his mouth to steal away his brains." And why is the traffic in this poison licensed but to make men drunken, irresponsible and criminal? Does not every voter know that to legalize the sale of intoxicating liquors is to legalize the manufacture of criminals, lunatics, paupers and irresponsibles of every class and of every degree?

But some one says, "Liquor will be drunk anyhow, and it is better to legalize and regulate the sale and by a license fee secure a revenue from it, thus recompensing the state for the exercise of the additional police power made necessary by the existence of the traffic."

Therefore, knowing full well that the effect of such action will be to render men incompetent, and imbecile, fit subjects for the jail, penitentiary, hospital and asylum, we license the sale of the poison and provide that those who engage in the business as "poisoners general" shall pay to the state a small bonus for the privilege of destroying the state's most valuable and eminently indispensable asset, its citizens. O most wise people! Our wisdom savors of the pit of perdition!

But recently, a father lawfully crazed, by authority legally vested in the dispenser of alcoholic poison, cruelly murdered his beautiful eleven months' old baby; a mother, similarly crazed, destroyed the life of her four-year-old child. Can the license fee recompense the state for the loss of these potential citizens or in any sense reimburse it for the moral degradation and destruction of these cruel and unnatural parents in whom every vestige of true manhood and womanhood had been deliberately and lawfully destroyed by the state's own action?

A drunken man or woman is an irresponsible creature, but the law metes out punishment for crimes committed while thus irresponsible. What shall we say of the citizen who deliberately votes to license an army of poison sellers whose business it shall be to transform their fellow beings into irresponsible, drunken perverts, thus constantly recruiting a prodigious array of criminals, lunatics, dependents and delinquents? God says: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink." "Woe unto them which justify the wicked for reward and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him." Does not this sentence fit in somewhere in the case of the victim of alcoholic poison vs. the state and its agent, the poison seller?

PEN USED BY GOVERNOR CAPPER SENT TO NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PRESIDENT

The pen with which Governor Capper signed the bill to establish a Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools of Kansas is now in the possession of Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Governor Capper presented it to Mrs. Lillian Mitchner, and she immediately sent it to Miss Gordon. Adorned with a bow of white, it occupies a place of honor upon the desk used by the National president, and given to Miss Willard in 1884 by the local unions of the United States. Just above it is a large framed picture of Miss Willard. Inscribed upon the pen is the signature of Governor Arthur Capper.

UNITED STATES BARS INTOXICATING LIQUORS FROM PRIBILOF ISLES

Secretary of Commerce Redfield is reported to have approved regulations regarding the use of intoxicating liquors on the Pribilof Islands in the Bering Sea. Hereafter no alcoholic liquors are to be landed on the islands except by the authority of the secretary or the commissioner of fisheries, and with the advice of the agents. The making of "quass," or other alcoholic drinks, by the natives, is prohibited.

Strong drink, it is said, has played havoc with the natives on the Pribilofs, and hereafter they can get it only for medicinal purposes and for religious ceremonies.

EVERY CHURCH MEMBER SHOULD BE IN POLITICS DECLARES U. S. SENATOR WILLIAM KENYON

"There are two great enemies of our Republic," said Hon. William S. Kenyon, United States Senator from Iowa, the principal speaker at the National Prohibition dinner, held in Pittsburgh, March 5, under the auspices of the Presbyterian Board of Temperance. "One from without, which is war, and one from within—the American saloon. War is awful in its destruction for the time being but the American saloon is continuous in its destruction of homes, of manhood and womanhood, of happiness and contentment. Neither should be allowed to exist in our fair land. The saloon must go. Indeed, it is going very rapidly. That is no longer a joke. It is a stern reality.

"The American saloon has corrupted American politics far too long. The politician no longer scoffs at prohibition, either locally or nationally. He sees the handwriting on the wall. It is a real issue at last in American politics and it will only be a short time until political parties will be striving to get it first in their platforms. This is largely due to the entering of Christianity into politics. Every church and every church member should be in politics. Woman suffrage, too, has had much to do with making prohibition a political issue. That is why the liquor men are so opposed to woman suffrage."

MISSOURI LEGISLATURE PASSES POLICEWOMEN BILL

A bill introduced by the Missouri W. C. T. U., empowering all cities of 5,000 or more inhabitants to appoint policewomen, has passed both houses of the Missouri legislature.

UPPER HOUSE OF MAINE LEGISLATURE VOTES FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE

On March 17, the senate of the Maine legislature, by a vote of 26 to 4, passed a resolution providing for the submission to the people of a woman suffrage constitutional amendment. The house is expected to vote upon the measure this week.

LEGISLATIVE NEWS

A bill providing for prohibition throughout the entire territory of Alaska has been introduced in the lower house of the territorial legislature by Representative C. K. Snow.

The measure introduced in the Wisconsin legislature by the liquor interests to disfranchise students of the state educational institutions, was promptly voted down.

On March 16, Governor Spry of Utah signed the dry territory bill passed by the recent legislature. The bill, which follows closely the provisions of the Webb-Kenyon national law, makes shipment of liquor from "wet" to "dry" territory by an individual punishable by a maximum fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for twelve months.

Both houses of the Connecticut legislature have passed the anti-polygamy resolution.

National Constitutional Prohibition Plans for April

1. If your local union or Young People's Branch did not hold a public meeting in March and secure an offering for the Lillian M. N. Stevens Campaign Fund, you are urgently requested to hold a rousing meeting in April. Here is a great opportunity to enlarge the state treasury as well as the Campaign Fund and your community needs this agitation and education.

2. Have a poster day and a poster parade. Invite the Sunday schools to arrange a poster parade for the intermediate or primary department.

3. The Young People's Branch will observe its special plans for April, all of them in harmony with efforts on behalf of National Constitutional Prohibition, and each local union is urged to heartily co-operate with the young people in the observance of their Red Letter Day, April 14.

Send to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., for the new Prohibition Map (price, 15 cents each; two for 25 cents) to display at all public meetings as proof of the progress toward nationwide prohibition.

Envelopes for subscriptions to the Lillian Stevens Campaign fund have been prepared by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. These envelopes are to be furnished to the states at cost, to be sent by them free to every local union agreeing to place them in the hands of all members and as many others as possible, with the suggestion and hope that in March every local union will send a contribution to this Fund, averaging ten cents per member. This money should be sent through the regular W. C. T. U. channels.

Pledges should be paid to W. C. T. U. treasurer within thirty days. Contributors of one dollar or more will receive for one year, the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL, the price of the paper (25 cents) being deducted before funds are divided between the State and National W. C. T. U.

The revised leaflet descriptive of the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund can be secured at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and should be widely distributed.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. L. S. C. BRAKEFIELD, Almira, Wash., since 1883 an active worker in the W. C. T. U. During her residence of seventeen years in Nebraska she held many state, county and local offices. After moving to Washington in 1900 she organized the Almira union of which she was president for several years.

ADAH BERTHA COOVER, London, Ohio, a devoted white ribboner, and an earnest worker in the state suffrage association, and for many years county and local superintendent of the W. C. T. U. Franchise department.

MRS. VIRGINIA SLAGLE CLARK, London, Ohio, one of the members of the first band of crusaders which went forth against the liquor traffic. As a W. C. T. U. member she served faithfully and well and was a source of inspiration to her family and friends along temperance lines.

MRS. A. VIRGINIA SIMONDS, North Bennington, Vt., for many years state superintendent of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors. As a memorial to her the local union presented to the Soldiers' home in Bennington, at which Mrs. Simonds was a frequent visitor, a copy of the picture, "The Angelus" with appropriate exercises

GOVERNOR SPRY VETOES UTAH'S STATEWIDE PROHIBITION BILL

Notwithstanding the fact that the statewide prohibition bill passed the house of the Utah legislature by a vote of 40 to 5, and the senate by a vote of 16 to 2, on March 18, after the legislature had adjourned, Governor Spry vetoed the bill. The governor is said to have taken advantage of every possible technicality to defer acting on the measure. It is asserted that he promised to return the bill to the senate in time for that body to act upon it, but on one pretext or another he delayed until after the legislature had adjourned. He is even charged with having left the capitol to avoid signing the bill before midnight of that day, thus giving him the power of absolute veto. Mrs. Lulu L. Shepard, president of the Utah W. C. T. U., feels confident that if the governor had vetoed the bill before the adjournment of the legislature, it would have been re-passed over his veto.

The pen with which Governor Carlson of Colorado signed the prohibition enforcement bill was given to Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford, president of the Colorado W. C. T. U., and hangs in her office near the picture of Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens.

Charles Scribner's Sons, the publishers of Scribner's Magazine, have announced that they have canceled their last contract for liquor advertising, and will accept no further advertising of that character.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

SUPERINTENDENTS

CURFEW AND WOMEN OFFICERS

MARY E. BROWN

Why should not every local union interest itself in the protection of children and young people whether or not it has a superintendent of Curfew? Organized mother-love need not wait for a superintendent or the organization of a department of work by the state before it does something for its own.

Every local union in village, town and city, can appoint a committee of earnest, tactful women to go out on the streets at night and investigate conditions, thus preparing themselves to speak with authority as to the need of a curfew ordinance. If such an ordinance already exists they will be able to state whether it is being properly enforced. If it is being ignored let them follow the example of some wise women in Pennsylvania who quietly, sweetly, persistently, enforced it themselves as every citizen has a right to do. Such work helps men officers to see and do their duty.

If there is no curfew ordinance in the community get the program arranged for this department and plan a meeting which will awaken the people to local conditions and local needs. Proceed carefully and courteously until you are ready to approach your city council with a request for action. Have a properly drawn ordinance ready to present as a guide for them. (A model ordinance is found in the Plan of Work for this department.) Do not be discouraged because of delays and difficulties. Persist until you succeed.

The Missouri Woman's Christian Temperance Union is making a brave and determined effort to secure a state law providing for the appointment of policewomen in towns and cities with 5,000 or more inhabitants. Of course the liquor interests are fighting the bill with all the power they possess, and the earnest women of the state are flooding the capital with letters and telegrams praying their senators and representatives to support the measure. This opposition from such a quarter indicates the estimation in which the work of women officers is held by the vice and liquor interests, and is a challenge to us to more deeply interest ourselves for their appointment.

Read and ponder the following extract from a recent letter from a state superintendent of this department:

"We have been making every effort for the abolition of the red-light district and the breaking up of illegal houses where they are found to exist in any part of the city. We have failed in every instance to get the grand jury to indict, the city and county attorneys, chief of police, county judge, or sheriff, to do their duty; and where we had counted on the help of our policewoman in investigating and reporting we found that she had gone over to the enemy; and this for two reasons, viz., she must please the officers or lose her position, and many of the women who secured her appointment (not W. C. T. U. women) are wives of men who are interested in one way or another in retaining the vice resorts, and feel that the 'policewoman should move very carefully,' and advise her to 'let things alone.'"

Do you hear the warning in this letter? If our blessed Christian women do not see that the right woman is appointed to this work, some others will see that the wrong one is placed in this responsible position, and the last state of that community will be worse than the first. Dear comrades, do not allow this fatal mistake to be made in your city. Appoint your committee and set to work at once whether or not you have a state superintendent, whether or not your state has taken up this department. Write direct to your National superintendent, who will be glad to send literature, suggestions and instructions, so that you can carry forward the work successfully.

Many encouraging reports are coming in, and we are trusting that the present will be the best year this department thus far has known. Let me hear from your state or local union.

WARN THE GIRLS

Inspector Dwyer, of the New York police force, is said to have detected a new and cunning scheme of white slavers to secure victims for their unspeakable traffic, namely, to get them to pose for moving pictures. On the pretext of aiding worthy young women to enter upon successful careers similar to that of Mary Pickford, they attract their prey, through cleverly worded advertisements, to their so-called "studios."

There are thousands of stage-struck girls who will be attracted by such advertisements and every opportunity should be used to spread this warning among them. Inspector Dwyer has already rescued a number of victims—girls in their teens—who have been thus lured into the "studios."

ANTI-NARCOTICS

MRS. E. B. INGALLS

The new drug law relating to the production, importation, compound, sale, dispensing, or giving away of opium or coca leaves, their salts, derivatives or preparations, became effective March 1, 1915.

This department has been deeply interested in this law, and has watched its operations very carefully. While helpful, it is far from perfect, and some states are preparing to secure legislation to strengthen the Federal law, which does not include less known habit-forming drugs.

There is a license clause included, so that people with money can have a physician prescribe the drug, but it was cut off from the poor entirely, and as a consequence caused great suffering among those who have become habituated to the use. In St. Louis, where I have studied the conditions, many of these unfortunates have been sent to the city hospital. There I found eighty-four men and forty-one women, dejected, broken in health and desperate, because deprived of the "dope." Our hospital is overcrowded, but it has taken the best of care of these poor creatures. When they enter, they are bathed, and clean clothing is given to them, their own clothing being fumigated and aired. They are provided with clean beds and the food given them is good. These patients are given what is called the Lambert-Towns treatment, a very severe purgative. Many have been cured; but some when they became wards of the city were in such a diseased condition that death was inevitable. Many physicians claim the best treatment is what is called the "comparative treatment," giving less and less of the drug and also giving drugs to build up the system, but the patient must be kept under lock and key.

I visited "hop alley," the Chinese quarters, the most insanitary section of our city. There men and women, black and white and brown, congregate to "hit the pipe." This street has been cleaned and the health officers have ordered some of the houses razed, thus eliminating one of plague spots of St. Louis. We were not surprised to find on this street a squalid shanty bearing the sign "saloon," but we did not hear of this place being condemned.

I want to call the attention of our workers to the necessity of active interest in the prevalent use of narcotic drugs during pregnancy. One of the prominent physicians of this city has made the statement that 100,000 babies die every year from drugs used by mothers, and a campaign of education has been started to stop their use by women who are to become mothers. Let me urge all workers to teach young mothers the danger of habit-forming drugs, and all department superintendents are asked to investigate the effects of the new drug law and report to me promptly.

Is Prohibition Popular in North Dakota?

READ THE FOLLOWING STATEMENTS AND DECIDE FOR YOURSELF!

As the result of inquiries sent out by the Temperance Society of the Methodist Church, to representative citizens of North Dakota relative to the benefits of prohibition, many most significant and valuable testimonies have been given to the public. Some of the most convincing we quote:

I have watched this state develop since 1883 and it is largely on account of the prohibition laws so early put in force that such wonderful development has been made. Bank deposits are fifteen times greater than they were in the state twenty years ago.—Mr. W. I. Forbes, Bank of Gilby, North Dakota.

Not under any conditions could I be induced to go back to a license community. —Mr. W. H. McIntosh, Bottineau, North Dakota.

Prohibition is undoubtedly the greatest reform that North Dakota has adopted since statehood.—Mr. L. B. Garnaas, president Farmers' and Merchants' Bank, Sheyenne, North Dakota.

I was engaged in business for several years in Minnesota in a high-license town, and I am convinced that prohibition is much to be preferred to high license.—Mr. F. M. Rich, president First National Bank, Willow City, North Dakota.

"The benefits of prohibition can be seen on every hand," writes Mr. F. J. Grady, the chief clerk of the Board of Control of state institutions. Mr. Grady bases his opinion upon his daily opportunities of viewing the effect of prohibition in limiting crime, insanity, pauperism and other state ills which are treated by the institutions under the management of the Board of Control.

Any banker in North Dakota who is candid will say that the effects of prohibition upon the commercial conditions of the state have been in every way favorable and in many ways very striking. I am acquainted with many bankers and business men of the state who are not prohibitionists from principle, but are radical prohibitionists from policy—Mr. R. J. Adams, president First National Bank, Lisbon, North Dakota.

We would under no circumstances want a change. Temperance is playing no small part in our growth and development.—Mr. E. G. Quamme, president State Bank of Findlay, North Dakota.

The absence of saloons in any town is a blessing. The law here is quite vigorously enforced.—Mr. R. A. Werner, president First State Bank, Alfred, North Dakota.

On the dividing line of our state where licenses are issued the largest and best cities are built on the dry side, and it also seems to me that the higher class of citizens live in the dry towns. Prohibition stimulates legitimate business, banking included.—Mr. N. H. Elvich, Michigan, North Dakota.

Prohibition has had a very wholesome effect on business. We need every dollar for the home, and prohibition helps solve the problem.—Mr. James A. Cooper Spring Brook.

Under prohibition we have not the temptations thrown before decent people. As a result people are better off financially; they are able to pay their debts and maintain bank accounts. We make money on prohibition as well as everybody else.—Mr. C. A. Jeglum, president Scandia-American Bank, Adams.

There can be no doubt whatever of the good moral effect of prohibition. It also prohibits the influx of a careless idle class of people.—Mr. A. Nystrom, cashier of the Scandinavian American Bank, Van Hook.

It is the general opinion of merchants and bankers throughout the state that the prohibition law is beneficial. When the crops come in the proceeds go to the banks and the stores instead of the saloons.—Mr. C. W. Fielder, cashier Bottineau County Bank, Bottineau, North Dakota.

The benefits of prohibition are immeasurable from every standpoint. I speak from the standpoint of the employer and am not an absolutely temperance man personally.—Mr. J. A. Power, executor Helendale Stock Farm, and president of Farmers' Bank, Leonard, North Dakota.

North Dakota has developed much faster under prohibition than it possibly could have developed under license.—Mr. O. O. Follett, vice-president Fargo Mercantile Company, wholesale grocers, Fargo, North Dakota.

If resubmission were put to a vote now I question if there would be 15 per cent. in favor of license.—Mr. G. G. Thompson, of the Pioneer Express, Pembina, North Dakota.

This town and Lemon, South Dakota, were started at the same time. Lemon is 23 miles east of us and received the first impetus of building. The country about us is very much the same and identical conditions govern our prosperity, except that Lemon has always had saloons—a municipal one just now. Our bonded debt here is about $10,000, while Lemon has some $60,000. Our houses here are all occupied, while one-third of the houses there are empty and almost half of the business houses are not in use. Their taxes are set at the limit allowed by law, but here only the school tax is high, the municipal tax being very low. Several murders and holdups have occurred there, but we have never had one here.—Mr. Paul M. Brown, president Hettinger Bank, Hettinger, North Dakota.

THE FOOD QUESTION

Settled with Perfect Satisfaction

It's not an easy matter to satisfy all the members of the family at meal time, as every housewife knows.

And when the husband can't eat ordinary food without causing trouble, the food question becomes doubly annoying.

An Illinois woman writes:

"My husband's health was poor, he had no appetite for anything I could get for him, it seemed.

"He suffered severely with stomach trouble, was hardly able to work, was taking medicine continually, and as soon as he would feel better would go to work again only to give up in a few weeks.

"One day, seeing an advertisement about Grape-Nuts, I got some and he tried it for breakfast the next morning.

"We all thought it was pretty good although we had no idea of using it regularly. But when my husband came home at night he asked for Grape-Nuts.

"It was the same next day and I had to get it right along, because when we would get to the table the question, 'Have you any Grape-Nuts' was a regular thing. So I began to buy it by the dozen pkgs.

"My husband's health began to improve right along. I sometimes felt offended when I'd make something I thought he would like for a change, and still hear the same old question, 'Have you any Grape-Nuts?'

"He got so well that for the last two years he has hardly lost a day from his work, and we are still using Grape-Nuts."

THAT "B'ILED" SHIRT

MRS. MARY P. SAYERS, Martin, Mich.

"Who wears the boiled shirt?" The speaker paused a moment and looked over the vast assembly. He leaned forward and stretched forth his right arm, with one finger of the hand pointing straight at a mild-featured little man who sat in the front row of seats. "I'll tell you!" he thundered, in convincing tones, "I'll tell you! It's the saloon-keeper! Who eats the porter-house steak?" He paused again, straightened up and stepped backward to the pulpit in the middle of the platform. He lifted his handkerchief and wiped the perspiration from his brow. Then, walking swiftly to the front of the platform, he once more leaned forward and shook his finger at the little man in front. Presently he straightened himself again, took a step backward, and then assumed a calm, dignified attitude. "I'll tell you!" he said, in a tone that was almost monotonous, "It's the saloonkeeper!"

The little man in front shouted, "Amen!" and the speaker continued his exhortation.

The old Van Buren street mission was crowded to overflowing with the riffraff of the underworld that inhabited its sordid locality. "I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance," was blazoned in large, shining letters over the platform from which the gospel was preached every night in far greater purity than it was wont to be delivered from the velvet-carpeted pulpits of many of the city's splendid churches. And from the great body of volunteer singers came music that stirred the weary, sin-burdened soul to its inner depths with a power that could not be easily shaken off.

Back by the door sat Bill Washington, negro and ne'er-do-well. It was Bill's first visit to the mission. He had been lured therein by the sweet strains of the violin music which had penetrated beyond the distracting noises of the busy thoroughfare. Music always had a power over Bill's soul. But violin music had never been associated in Bill's mind with anything save dance-halls and playhouses. Now, however, there was a sacred, lingering cadence that recalled the days when his good, old, black grandmother had told him to "put on yo' b'iled shirt an' go to d' meetin'-house." Dissipated and debauched as he knew himself to be, he could not bring himself to leave the mission and seek his hilarious companions in one of the many saloons that infested that region. As the preacher's words rang clear and true throughout that big audience room, Bill's eyes became riveted upon his every motion and gesture.

"And what do you wear—you, who toil all day in the sweatshops and spend your hard earned dollars in the saloons at night? Oh, you wear a blue shirt, a coarse one, and very often a ragged, dirty one! Don't I know?" continued the preacher earnestly and beseechingly. "Don't I know," he repeated, "when I've been among you day after day urging you to give up your wickedness? And what do you eat? Why, you eat the cheap cuts of meat and spend the surplus in the saloons of the men who deal out your whisky! Ah, my brethren, they can give large sums to public charity, they can buy shoes and stockings at Christmas for the children whose fathers they have robbed—but you—you—can't give your wives more than five cents for the mission box, no matter how good the cause. O my brothers," he finished, when he had talked for a few moments longer, "come to God and let Him save you from this miserable debauchery. Get right with God! Get right with God!" He sat down, and a deep stillness fell upon the room. Before Bill could recover from the magnetic effects of the speaker's words a man stepped out to the front, and to the accompaniment of the violin, sang that old, inspiring hymn of the days of our forbears, "Almost Persuaded." Bill groaned. He saw himself the miserable being that he was. He leaned his head in his hands and wept.

When the song was ended the testimonies began. As one after another was given, interspersed now and again with a verse of sympathetic song; as speaker after speaker testified to the saving power of the blessed Lord, Bill listened intently. Wretched, miserable and well nigh forsaken by mankind, many of these people had been raised from the slough of despondency into the bright light of fellowship with those who are pure and good. Bill began to realize his condition. Creeping into his heart came a desire to be like those who are clean and wholesome. As his thoughts dwelt on the almost immeasurable distance between himself and God's people, his attention was arrested by a voice at the opposite end of the hall. It sounded familiar.

"Brudders and sisters," it said. Bill craned his neck. "De Lord sabe us, it's Mandy!" he muttered under his liquor-laden breath. "I'se askin' you to pray fer my poah no 'count husban'. He's berry bad man. He's drunk mos' all de time, and I'se et poah stuff so long dat I'se 'bout tiahed ob dis ol' sinful yarth. Ef 'twant fer de good Lord's mercy I'd been daid long ago! Pray fer me!" Mandy's poor, strained mulatto face was wet with tears. Never had Bill felt so slinky in his life. Mandy sat slowly down, and the whole choir struck up the hymn, "He'll know the way was dreary, when Jesus comes."

This was too much for Bill. He slunk out of the hall in an agony of remorse. It had never occurred to him before that he had been helping to pay for the saloonkeeper's "b'iled shirt" and "po'ter-house steak." Bill was capable of earning good wages as a plumber, which had meant a fair measure of prosperity, but he had also been something of a dandy, and dandyism had led to debauchery and debauchery to laziness.

For the first time in a year, Bill went straight home. He went to bed, but he could not forget about the saloonkeeper's "b'iled shirt" and "po'ter-house steak." Mandy came home and sat down in the forlorn-looking little sitting-room. Bill could hear her groan. Then he heard her pray—pray for him—old Bill Washington. Bill made a firm resolve, but he thought he would keep his own counsel. Towards morning, when the rumble of the downtown Chicago street traffic grew louder, he woke Mandy and told her of his purpose. Mandy made no great ado over the matter, but at night she again tried to get Bill to the mission. Bill would not go. He'd "fight his battles alone!"

So things went on for two weeks. Bill found work and kept sober. They moved into better quarters, and Mandy told Bill she would "be the happiest woman in all de wo'ld ef 'twould only last." Bill said it would.

One night when Bill had put on a new suit of ready-made clothes after he had taken a bath, he made up his mind that he would go over to the old saloon where he had once been a constant customer, and show them what he could be if he wanted to. To Mandy he said nothing of all this, well—because Mandy wouldn't trust him. With a pompous air he walked in among his old associates. The barroom was full and Bill was greeted with the glad hand from one end of the bar to the other.

"Why, hello, Bi—Mr. Washington!" grinned the saloonkeeper, a big, fat, white man. "Glad to see you, Mr. Washington—er—glad to see you. Come on, boys—I'll pay fer the drinks. We thought he'd come back, didn't we, boys?" Forthwith the drinks began to flow like water. Bill hesitated. He had not intended to drink. After a little he was going right out. But they had called him "Mr." Washington. He felt his importance and stepped up to the bar. The fumes of the liquor was in his nostrils when suddenly the saloonkeeper threw open his white coat to get something from his inside pocket. Bill's eyes chanced to wander that way. With a start his face became ashen and his eyes began to bulge. They had rested on the shiniest of shiny boiled shirts. He dropped the glass and dashed for the street, followed by cries of "Come back, Bill! What's the matter, Bill," and so forth.

Jostling up the street he almost ran into the Van Buren street mission and went straight up to the seeker's bench in front of the pulpit. There he dropped on his knees and began to pray:

"I cayn't do it, Lord! I cayn't! Yo's got ter he'p me, Lord! You sho has!" Mandy came and knelt by him as he prayed, and when he had become a little calm, he arose and sat with the others who had asked for prayers. Then there was singing, after which came the testimonies.

After a little, Mandy whispered to Bill and he arose to testify:

"Brudders," Bill's voice was steady now in spite of his trembling limbs, "Brudders and sisters, I'se been a po' no 'count niggah. But dis night I'se comin' to de Lord! 'Taint been so berry long ago dat I gib' all my money to de saloonkeeper. Brudders and sisters—he was wearin' dat b'iled shirt—an' eatin' dat po'ter-house steak. Brudders and sisters, I was wearin' dat ol' blue shirt and eatin' dat po' meat." As Bill gained in confidence his voice grew stronger. "But, brudders and sisters, I's quit gibin' dat saloonkeeper my ha'd ea'ned money, and now I'se wearin' dat b'iled shirt an' eatin' dat good po'ter-house steak. And praise de Lord, I'se goin' to keep on wearin' dat b'iled shirt and eatin' dat po'ter-house steak!" Bill sat down and the choir sang: "There were ninety and nine that safely lay in the shelter of the fold." For Bill Washington, negro and ne'er-do-well, was rejoiced over in heaven as much as would be the most perfect man on earth. And the little man on the front seat shouted, "Amen!"

South Dakota's Victory for Statewide Prohibition

MRS. ANNA R. SIMMONS, President South Dakota W. C. T. U.

In 1889, the first year of South Dakota's statehood, the newly elected legislature submitted a statewide prohibition amendment to a vote of the men of the state. A great campaign was launched. We had the best speakers that the nation afforded, among them our own Mary T. Lathrap, at that time state president of the Michigan W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, recording secretary of the National W. C. T. U. Mrs. Helen M. Barker was our state president.

Miss Frances E. Willard and Miss Anna A. Gordon had organized the South Dakota Woman's Christian Temperance Union in the city of Yankton, in the early years the territorial capital, and this union took up and pushed forward the work which the territorial union had carried on so well and effectively. Enthusiasm ran high. South Dakota was settled by the finest people from every part of the United States, and all seemed determined to carry statewide prohibition, and by driving out the rum traffic and outlawing its vile trade, to lay the right foundations for posterity. Even in harvest time all public meetings, out of doors and in, were well attended, the places where our speakers appeared being crowded to the limit. There was no pretense of work in that campaign. May God grant that the same zeal and interest shall be manifested and augmented a hundredfold, if possible, in this, our second campaign for statewide prohibition.

Election day came, a time of great anxiety and suspense for those on the side of the home against the liquor traffic. All day prayer meetings were held. Church bells were rung every hour. The children carrying banners and singing songs, marched behind their leaders. White ribboners were in evidence at the polls everywhere. Next day came the great, good news. By nearly 5,000 majority the new state of South Dakota had been victorious. A mighty shout of joy went up from God's hosts all over the state, mingled with songs of praise to Him who had crowned our work with success.

For eight years we kept our law. The legislative committee of the South Dakota W. C. T. U. was present at every session of the state legislature for the purpose of warding off resubmission. In 1896, through the machinations of rum politicians and liquordom combined, the prohibition question was resubmitted to a vote of the men. Unlike our sister state of North Dakota, whose constitution requires two legislatures to pass upon a constitutional question, our constitution provides that an amendment to the state constitution can be submitted to the people by passing one legislature, and therefore we were not so well protected.

Again we endeavored to stem the tide, but for lack of interest (be it said to the shame of all the Christian and prohibition forces of the state) the enthusiasm of the first campaign was sadly lacking. Unfortunately, the week before the election we had an unprecedented fall of snow, known ever since as the fall and winter of the deep snow, and thousands of voters thought they were snowbound and did not go to the polls to vote for the retention of our prohibition amendment, but the liquorites were there in full force. The sad news came over the wires next day, sounding the death knell of all our hopes. The amendment was lost.

Seventeen years have passed. Many professed Christian men cast their ballot against prohibition. In my own city of Huron a man prominent in church and Sunday school voted with the rummies, but one year afterward said to me: "Mrs. Simmons, I would give all I possess to have that vote of mine back. I can see now that I made the mistake of my life." An opportunity lost to him forever, for he has gone to his final accounting with God.

South Dakota will come into the galaxy of dry states in 1916. South Dakota dry! Votes for women in 1916! Hurrah, and hurrah again, for our 1915 legislature has submitted both the prohibition and the woman suffrage question to a vote of the men. The vote was taken in the house first, and stood 77 for to 16 against; senate 32 for and 11 against.

On the same day the woman suffrage amendment passed the senate, the vote standing 29 to 15. The house had previously passed on it favorably by a vote of 59 to 40.

Plans are being made by the state officers of the W. C. T. U. to wage this battle with their utmost power, and we ask the prayers and co-operation of every member of our W. C. T. U. household in these United States. You realize with me that every effort will be made by the liquor dealers of the nation to prevent South Dakota from again becoming a dry state. We have a double campaign on our hands, and we believe the one will help the other. We are planning for an interstate conference immediately following the National Convention, so that we may have some of our National officers with us. We expect to have with us the "cyclone of the nation," Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, and many other able speakers and workers from the different states. Help South Dakota in her statewide prohibition campaign from now until election day.

LAST CALL OF WASHINGTON SALOONS

The saloons of Seattle, Washington, are making the most of the few months which are still allowed them before the prohibitory law goes into effect January 1, 1916, and each is celebrating the advent of prohibition in his own particular way.

"This State Has Gone Dry!

Ve Chermans Must Togedder Hang," one saloon announces to the passer-by, and the words are illustrated by the picture of a gallows from which are suspended three limp figures. As evidence of the eagerness of saloonists in general to comply with the rules and regulations of state and nation, witness these signs upon liquor houses of this Pacific coast city: "The Voters said 'Git Out.' We're Gitting," and again, "We're Quitting—Complying with the Will of the People," and another which declares, "We are not Wanted, so We Quit." Bargain sales in liquor are in progress, and the realization that the end of the liquor business is near reconciles one somewhat to the knowledge that drinkers are responding to the lure of windows piled high with flasks of various sizes, shapes and labels bearing a marked down price and their former selling price; or are seeing such signs as the following in the windows of their favorite liquor stores: "Every drop of Liquor Must be Sold. We Don't Need the Money but We Must Comply with the Law." But all this will not be for long. In a few short months these selfsame windows will contain displays of commodities tending to the upbuilding rather than the debauching of the citizens of Seattle.

TEMPERANCE DAY IN ALABAMA

Temperance Day in the Alabama public schools, March 5, was widely observed. The program prepared by the state W. C. T. U. superintendent of the Scientific Temperance Instruction department was made the official program by the state board of education. Fifteen thousand copies of this program were sent out, and there were requests for many more. In Birmingham Miss Christine I. Tinling, National lecturer, spoke to 1,200 children, and presented a picture of Miss Willard to the largest public school in the city. Reports from all over the state are coming in concerning increased interest in the observance of the day. Inquiries from other states have been received, and sample copies of the law and a specimen program will be gladly furnished to those interested.

A PERSIAN PRINCE

STORY-LESSON

CHRISTINE I. TINLING

Persia is the name of a country in Asia of which we hear very little in these days. But, strange to say, it was at one time the most powerful country in the world. You have heard of the mighty empires of Greece and Rome. Before these there was the empire of Persia. Its founder was named Cyrus. He lived about five hundred years before Christ. When Cyrus became king of the Persians that nation was not very important. But he was a great ruler and he conquered the neighboring countries until he held sway over most of the then known world, and other kings obeyed him. The Persians gave him the same title that Americans give to George Washington; they called him "the father of his country."

Various stories are told about the boyhood of this mighty king. Many of them were written in Greek by a historian named Xenophon. He tells us that Cyrus was the son of King Cambyses but he was stolen when a little baby and narrowly escaped being killed. He lived with shepherds in a humble hut until he was ten years old, and did not even know that he was a king's son. By a strange accident his parents found him and brought him home.

Persia was a little rocky country and its inhabitants were a very hardy race. They were obliged to be so, to get a living at all, for the soil was poor and it took a great deal of work to raise the crops. Some of the people grew grain on the stony hillsides and others had flocks and herds in the valleys, and they were both industrious and brave. They lived on simple and frugal fare and dressed very plainly also. Most of them wore suits of leather. It was so tough and strong that it lasted many years. They did not build large cities or splendid houses; they preferred to live in villages and in little groups of homes dotted about among the mountains.

The boys who belonged to the chief families of Persia studied together in the palace of the king. Cyrus was educated with them. He loved work and was very anxious to succeed and to win the praise of his teachers. The boys did not learn to read, because there were no books. They passed their time in studying justice, that is, they were taught carefully what was right and what was wrong, and the laws of the land were explained to them. They were trained to wrestle and run, and they learned the use of the various weapons of war, such as bow and arrow, javelin and dagger. They went on hunting parties in the forest and had many a close combat with wild beasts. Especially they practiced self-control and temperance in eating and drinking. Xenophon says, "They bring from home with them bread and a sort of cress to eat with it, and a cup to drink from, that if any are thirsty they may take water from the river." So it seems they had individual drinking-cups as you have in school today, and they knew that the best drink is the pure water that everyone can have for nothing. An ancient poet once wrote, "There is no small pleasure in pure water." It is strange that people should ever want burning wine or whisky when they may freely enjoy cool, refreshing water.

When Cyrus was about twelve years old he received an invitation to visit his grandfather, who was king of a neighboring country called Media. He went with his mother on this trip and the journey was very interesting all the way. When they reached Media, Cyrus found it was quite different from his own country of Persia and he saw much to surprise him. There was a great deal of pomp and show, and especially at the court people lived most extravagantly. When Cyrus went in to see his grandfather he found him sitting in state in a purple robe, set with precious stones. He had long false hair and his face was painted and he wore heavy bracelets on his wrists. Cyrus had never seen such a gorgeous personage before. However they soon became great friends, Cyrus and his grandfather. The king gave his grandson a fine robe and a horse with a golden bridle, and whenever the old man rode abroad the boy rode beside him. Cyrus was delighted at being able to learn to ride, for in Persia horses were rare and indeed the country was too mountainous for them to be of much use. Cyrus was very happy at the Median court. Everybody liked him, for he was so jolly and good-natured and full of fun and friendliness. He told the truth at all times and tried to be polite.

One evening they all sat down to the usual splendid dinner. The tables were laden with the choicest meats, and a great many dainties of every sort were served in vessels of gold and silver. At the close of the meal the king gave Cyrus all these beautiful and costly dishes to do with them as he pleased. He called the attendants and gave a present to each, saying to one, "This is for you because you gave me a javelin," and to another, "This is for you because you are so attentive to my mother." All the attendants except one received a gift from the young prince. That one was the king's cupbearer, a tall handsome man, splendidly dressed. Cyrus did not care for him because he sometimes kept him out of his grandfather's room when he wanted to go in. So he did not bestow upon him any gift. "Why did you not give my cupbearer a present, Cyrus?" his grandfather asked. "He is one of the very best servants I have. See how gracefully he hands the wine to me." "O grandfather," the boy replied, "I could do it just as well myself." So saying he took the king's goblet and ran out of the room. In a few moments he returned, looking very solemn and pompous, and he handed the wine to the king, bowing low and going through all the ceremonies just like the real cupbearer. He did it so well that his grandfather laughed heartily and so did his mother and all the guests. "There, grandfather," said Cyrus, "I did it all right, didn't I? But I did not taste it," he added.

It was the duty of the cupbearer always to taste the wine before handing it to the king. In those rough old days of long ago people were often poisoned by their enemies. So in order to be sure that it was all right the kings used to make the cupbearers taste the wine before they drank any themselves. This servant did not drink out of the king's cup. He dipped a little wine out with a smaller cup, then poured it into the palm of his left hand and swallowed it. Then balancing the cup deftly on three fingers he handed it to the king. Cyrus knew all this and yet he would not touch one drop.

"Why did you not taste it?" asked his grandfather. "Since you copied my cupbearer in everything else, why did you not swallow some of the wine?" "To tell the truth," said Cyrus, "it was because I was afraid it was poisoned." "Whatever made you think such a thing?" the king asked again. "Well, grandfather, I thought so because of the effect it had the other night. When you entertained your friends on your birthday, I felt sure some poison had been mixed in the cups. You know the guests all drank a good deal of wine. Afterwards I noticed that they behaved very badly. You would never allow us boys to act as rudely as they did. Several of them tried to sing a song at one time, and they were not polite to each other or respectful to you, their king. That was why I feared there must be poison in the wine."

Was Cyrus right, do you think? Most certainly he was. Everything that contains alcohol is poisonous. One of our American doctors once said, "Wine is a diluted poison." He meant that it contains alcohol, and though this is mixed with a great deal of water and some other things, it is poison just the same. The very name that we give to strong drink should remind us of this. We call it "intoxicating liquor." The word "intoxicating" is really a Greek word. It comes from "toxicon" which means poison, and it was used of the poison into which the ancients used to dip their arrows. So "intoxicating" simply means poisonous. Suppose that instead of saying "intoxicating drink," henceforth we always say "poisonous drink." That means the same thing and it will remind us how foolish it would be to touch it.

Cyrus knew that the wine was poisonous and he knew that it made people do foolish things. But I am quite sure he did not understand just how this happened. We have learned a great deal about our bodies since those ancient days and now we know exactly how strong drink injures them. Cyrus noticed that the men did not behave properly after they had taken wine; somehow they had lost the power of self-control. It is a very sad and dreadful thing when anyone is unable to control himself. The wise man said that to be able to rule oneself is a greater thing than to take a city. The power of self-control is exerted through the brain. Somehow it is in our brains that we resolve, "I will do right, however hard it is," and "I won't do wrong, however pleasant it is." If our brains are poisoned they are too weak to make resolutions like these and keep them. People with weak and poisoned brains do just what they feel like doing, though they know it will get them into trouble.

Sometimes their brains are so badly poisoned that they do not even realize what they are doing. They may do most foolish things and may sometimes commit terrible crimes, but they know nothing about it until it is too late, because the brain is put to sleep by the poison. In other words it is benumbed or narcotized.

Cyrus was surely right in saying he would not taste the wine, would not even take a few drops from the palm of his hand. He was a wise boy. The historian Xenophon who tells this tale was himself of the same opinion. He said it was well not to take too much, even of good things, but bad things like wine should be left alone entirely. Perhaps you can commit to memory his famous saying, for it is well worth knowing: "Temperance means first moderation in healthful indulgence, and secondly abstinence from things dangerous, as the use of intoxicating wines."

A NOTABLE GATHERING IN NEW ORLEANS

Special Correspondence

Mrs. Alice C. McKinney, president of the Louisiana W. C. T. U., was tendered a banquet by the New Orleans union in the Y. W. C. A. building, on Saturday, March 6. Four former state presidents of the organization were in attendance. Mrs. F. A. Lyon, the first president of the New Orleans union, who was virtually president of the state, there being at that time no other union in the state, sat at the head of the table; Mrs. Bang, corresponding secretary of the Tennessee W. C. T. U., at her right, and Mrs. McKinney on the left. Mrs. Goodale, Mrs. Zable and Mrs. Nellie O'Beirne, with other distinguished guests, were gathered about the table. Each of the former presidents gave words of greeting and cheer. Tributes to Mrs. Stevens, Miss Willard and Miss Gordon were given by various speakers and Rev. H. Werlein, brother of the present president of the local union, spoke words in praise of the W. C. T. U., expressing the firm conviction that every Christian woman in the city should belong to the organization. Three new members were gained, Mrs. Graham, a strong suffrage leader, being one of the number. Mrs. McKinney's verses, to the tune of "Tipperary," were beautifully sung by Mrs. Smith. Mrs. McKinney closed an optimistic speech with this toast to the New Orleans union, "May you have the faith of Abraham, the strength of Samson, the wisdom of Solomon, the persistency that characterized the woman who troubled the unjust judge, and the long life of Methuselah."

New Orleans has been called the Sodom of the South, and in some respects may deserve the name, but temperance sentiment is growing, and we venture to hope that Louisiana will be among the last half of dry states needed to secure National Constitutional Prohibition. We do not want to wait until we are driven into the dry line. Mrs. W. S. Norwood, state organizer, is helping to apply the lash very effectively. Rev. A. J. Gearhard, a New Orleans pastor, made practical suggestions along financial and other lines and urged publicity. "Be sure your sin will find you out" has not yet been fully grasped by the enemy, he thinks, and a knowledge of what the liquorites are capable of doing, and are guilty of here and now is of inestimable value. The trouble in Louisiana is not so much what the liquorites are doing, but what the Christians are not doing.

We would extend through you, dear readers, an invitation to men of wealth who wish to establish factories in the West. Portland has several brewery plants it would like to see transformed into factories before January 1, 1916. It would seem that this property should be secured at bargain prices.

It is with much pleasure we anticipate the coming through Oregon of the official train to the National convention at Seattle this fall. We would like you to start from Chicago in time to have that wonderful ride down the Columbia river by daylight, see our Indian citizens in Pendleton, receive a greeting from Dr. J. E. Anderson and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, as you pass through The Dalles, and linger a few hours with us in Portland. It would make us happy if you could come early and see our Rose Festival in June, enjoy our delightful summer, yes, come and live with us in a state where women are citizens and saloons will soon be outlaws. Welcome to Oregon!

CALIFORNIA LEGISLATORS VIE WITH EACH OTHER TO PRESENT TEMPERANCE MEASURES

MRS. DORCAS J. SPENCER

It is a matter of difficulty while riding in a swiftly moving vehicle to retain vivid and clear impressions of the scenery through which one may be passing, and it is yet more difficult to describe the activities of eager throngs of people, rushing in apparently all directions, desperately intent on their several objects which meet the eye of the observer who chances to be making that rapid transit. It would be just as reasonable to expect very clear accounts of "how the conflict wages," while the swift rolling wheels of reform are moving with a celerity that almost bewilders the mind. Temperance reformers have so long borne the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune that they can ride with perfect equanimity now—at any pace or speed. We have waited for the wagon a long time and now we enjoy the ride—not by any means implying that the battle is all over. While California fell short of its great object in the last election so much was gained by that glorious campaign that old things seem to have passed away, and new conditions confront us.

The campaign spirit did not relax when the strain of the election had passed and from that day, the dominant thought has been a final effort in 1916. The liquor people saw it at first—"a cloud no bigger than a man's hand"—that did not cast a shadow on their victory then, but it looks larger and very threatening by this time.

The legislature met as usual in January and it was a new experience to find men vying with each other to present temperance measures. It used to be hard to find members willing to be identified with our bills, but women vote now, and they must be considered. To be just to our legislators they are more thoughtful of the higher interests of the commonwealth than their predecessors have been. We expect much of them this year.

The most important temperance bill yet introduced is known as the dry zone bill. Following the precedent established in protecting the state university and Stanford University by the mile limit within which there shall be no saloons, this bill aims to protect every college, normal school or other state institution by a similar dry zone. If it carries, this will make great dry spots in many towns and cities.

Another measure of importance is an amendment to the present local option law asking for the county unit. These two bills if enacted will go into effect in time to be of great service before our next statewide campaign. Our unions appear to be up and doing generally. Local and county work goes bravely on. The state president, Mrs. Dorr, is watching the legislature, and appearing here and there and everywhere also, as occasion calls for her services. The vice-president, Mrs. Estes, is in the field holding institutes. Miss Anna E. Chase, Y. P. B. secretary and special lecturer on Scientific Temperance Instruction, endorsed officially for this work by the state board of education, is lecturing in the public schools as continuously as possible, by arrangement of county presidents and filling chinks of time by Sunday appointments in churches and such other assignments as fall to "all around workers."

The great exposition is open, but many of its exhibits are not yet placed though as a big thing it is surpassingly big and wonderfully beautiful.

Miss Mary Brown, representative of the World's and National W. C. T. U., is at her post to look after our fine exhibit in the Educational building and has the situation well in hand.

An Easter Message

With hallowed joy we welcome the sacred radiance of another Easter morning. Beloved co-workers, may the Angel of the Resurrection roll away from our hearts any stone of discouragement or grief, and fill our souls with victorious hope and exultant happiness. May this joy and comfort be ours in overflowing measure, giving to each of us a brimming cup of blessing to be shared with the suffering and sorrowful ones to whom in a Christ-like spirit it is our privilege to minister.

The sacred miracle of Easter is a promise that world-wide peace shall take the place of the awful carnage of war. It foretells the crowning of our long years of steadfast hope and heroic toil with the triumph af our heaven-born principles of purity, patriotism and prohibition.

May our risen Lord enable us in newness of life to reveal to tempted humanity a larger vision of the sublime significance of the holy Easter-tide. "Lift up your heads, oh ye gates, and be ye lifted up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in."

"THE WORKER WHO DRINKS MUST GO"

A powerful ally to the forces which for many years have been working for total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state and nation is the business corporation as organized in our American cities. For many years railroads have been aware of the hazard of employing men who drink, and strict rules in regard to abstinence from intoxicants have been in force. During the past few months other industries in large numbers have been lining up with the railroads in efficiency campaigns against the common enemy which robs the worker of his skill and reduces to an appreciable extent the output of manufactories.

Apropos of this particular kind of progress prohibitionward an article by Gene and Willard Price, "The Worker Who Drinks Must Go," published in the Technical World, has this to say:

"Drinking will now spell prompt dismissal for you if you are an employe of the Hershey Chocolate Company, International Harvester Company, Sherwin-Williams Company, Sheffield Car Works, United States Steel Corporation, Western Electric Company, Pullman Company, Edison Company, Western Union, Interborough Company, Standard Oil Company, or any one of a thousand other American firms of the first rank.

"Sears, Roebuck & Company forbid employes to enter a saloon at any hour of the day within a mile of their plant in any direction.

"Dalzell Brothers Company declare that 'as the state insurance rate is affected by the number of accidents, we are determined not to place ourselves liable to an increased rate,' and they accordingly rule that promotions shall go to total abstainers only."

Among the other firms which have taken action concerning the use of intoxicating drinks are the United States Steel Mills, which decrees that promotions shall go only to abstainers; the steel works at Homestead, Pa., employing twelve thousand men, which makes drinking either on or off duty cause for immediate discharge; the Philadelphia Quartz Company which declares a ten per cent. increase in wages to workers who will pledge themselves to total abstinence and promise to absent themselves from places where intoxicants are sold or used and Sheffield Car Works of Three Rivers, Michigan, which advised its many thousands of employes by circular letter that signing liquor petitions would place them in opposition to the interests of the company.

The Stumbling Block to Promotion

From The Mixer, a monthly published by the employes of the Illinois Steel Company of Joliet, Ill.

The attitude of the heads of the big industries is in most cases essentially that of Andrew Carnegie who said, "There is no use wasting time on any young man who drinks liquor, no matter how exceptional his talents."

"What does it all mean?" asks the Technical World. "Have our industrial leaders been caught up in the swirl of religious revival? Has a moral renaissance begun to climb up through the hearts of our captains of industry? Not a bit of it. They are as disinterestedly interested in the almighty dollar as they ever were, but their eyes have been opened. They see dollars, thousands of them, slipping away, and they are going to stop the leak or know the reason why. And here is the leak—exposed unmistakably by the laboratory experiments of Dr. Emil Kraepelin of the University of Munich:

"With the ergograph, a little instrument for measuring the weight-lifting strength of workers, Dr. Kraepelin found that on days when the alcoholic equivalent of a good glass of Bordeaux was taken the amount of work done by the subjects was decreased by from seven to nine per cent.

"A number of accountants were given daily, in divided doses, the equivalent of three and a half cups of claret. After two weeks of this steady, moderate alcoholic allowance, their average ability to add one-figure columns had decreased fifteen and three-tenths per cent.

"Four typesetters, each drinking daily three-quarters of a tumbler of Greek wine (eighteen per cent alcohol) lost an average of nine and six-tenths per cent in efficiency by the end of one week.

"In co-ordination tests, where the subject was required to snap down a telegraphic switch at the unexpected flash of a light or sound of a gong, the rapidity of the co-ordinating responses was decreased by liquor from six to eight and three-tenths per cent.

"Professor Durig, an expert mountain climber, found that on days when he took two glasses of beer his instruments showed that he expended fifteen per cent more energy than on the days when he did not drink, and that it took him twenty-one and seven-tenths per cent longer to reach the top of a mountain.

"In many industries, employes do but a single small piece of work, repeating the same motions, using the same muscles over and over all day long. Tests of Swedish marksmanship illustrated the effects of alcohol upon endurance in such repetition work. Upon the alcoholic days the soldiers averaged only three hits out of thirty. It is significant that they thought they were shooting better after they drank."

These experiments, all giving the same result, might be multiplied again and again. Truly the industrial plants of the United States have grasped the thoroughly tested fact that alcohol lowers the efficiency of the drinker. C. L. Close, manager of the Bureau of Safety of the United States Steel corporation, states it as his belief that through the combined efforts of American industries the manufacture and sale of liquors will be at an end in the United States within ten years.

EX-SALOONKEEPER TESTIFIES THAT PROHIBITION PROHIBITS

A former Red Wing (Minn.) saloonkeeper, Mr. Lohman, now engaged in the clothing business in McHenry, North Dakota, recently visited his old friends in Red Wing. While insisting that he still saw nothing wrong in having a glass of beer at home and disclaiming any pretensions to being a total abstainer, he gave some excellent testimony to the value of prohibition.

"One reason why we are not anxious to have a saloon in our town is that it would draw the kind of people from other places that we do not want; we like a good, clean town."

"It is said so often that prohibition does not prohibit, Mr. Lohman," remarked a reporter. "If a man goes to McHenry and wants a drink, can he get it?" "No, not for love nor money," replied Mr. Lohman with emphasis. "There is no liquor to be had in our town except for medicinal purposes." "Then a crowd of young men cannot start out and have a gloriously good time in McHenry?" "I should say they cannot," replied Mr. Lohman, "because there is no place where they can get the liquor. There has been no bootlegging during the last few years. The law is being enforced rigidly and there is no evidence anywhere of drunkenness."

IDENTITY NOT TO BE DISCLOSED

An organization known as an Anti-Prohibition League has been formed in Richmond, Virginia, its stated purpose being, "to stand for the right to buy drinks containing alcohol." It is interesting to note that "members of the league shall be known only to the temporary officers who shall not disclose their identity unless they especially agree to it." Immensely proud they seem of their connection with the organization! Imagine a Woman's Christian Temperance Union whose members tried to conceal from the world their relation to it; who wore their white ribbons tucked away under a ruffle or frill for fear it would be seen! Of the face of it an organization of which its members are ashamed is not one that can command the respect of the public.

GOVERNOR CLARKE SIGNING IOWA'S PROHIBITION BILL

The pen used by Governor Clarke of Iowa in signing the measure providing for the submission of the constitutional prohibition amendment, was given by him to Mrs. Anna Edworthy, legislative superintendent for Iowa. In presenting the pen the chief executive said:

"I congratulate these noble women upon this hour of triumph which seems assured and so near at hand. It is significant that this amendment passed the Iowa state senate on February 12, the anniversary of the birth of our great emancipator, Abraham Lincoln.

"I trust and believe that it means the emancipation of Iowa from the saloon and the legalized traffic in intoxicating liquors, the greatest single enemy of our Christian civilization. All honor to these noble women, to these mothers, who have labored so long and pleaded with their brothers for this act of emancipation from the arch enemy of the home, of womanhood and childhood, the arch enemy of all that is noblest and best in our commonwealth."

In reply Mrs. Edworthy said: "It is with heartfelt gratitude that I accept the pen today, on behalf of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the state of Iowa, representing nearly 10,000 noble, consecrated Christian women who form a link in the great white ribbon chain that is entwined around the world, binding together the womanhood in every country on the face of the globe for the protection of home, of childhood and for a better and more noble citizenship.

"A motto from Gladstone, engraved in the corridor of our capitol, states that 'Law is the embodiment of the moral sentiment of the people.' If such be true, the month of February, 1915, will stand out preeminently above all others for the passage of such measures in our legislative halls.

"One day alone, witnessed the passage of three such measures in our senate: The repeal of the mulct law, the first passage for constitutional prohibition and the final for constitutional amendment for the enfranchisement of women.

"This day, February 12, is revered by all in the memory of our noble president, Abraham Lincoln, who stood not only for the emancipation of our colored race from the bondage of slavery, but for the emancipation of all from a bondage still worse, that of the liquor traffic.

"Today we are privileged to witness the passing of another milestone on the great highway toward state and national prohibition."

WHAT THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT IS TELLING ITS RECRUITS

In a pamphlet entitled, "Alcohol and the Power of Resistance," distributed among the recruits of the German army, the following statement concerning beer is made:

> "There is no justification for calling beer 'liquid bread'; a glass of heavy beer costing twenty-five pfennigs, has no more nourishment than a piece of cheese costing one pfennig. Almost all excesses and disturbances in the army are traced to drink. It is mostly beer that causes the mischief. Beer is not the harmless drink that it is supposed to be."

The above is a translation of the pamphlet as given by Gordon Reeves in the March number of Physical Culture.

YOUTH AND CRIME IN THE BIG CITIES

At all too frequent intervals the right-minded residents of our great cities are shocked by robberies, hold-ups, and other outbreaking crimes committed not by criminals of mature years but by young men, in many instances mere boys, just beyond the high school age. An epidemic of crime of this character has just occured in Chicago, four automobile bandits covering almost an entire city in a series of robberies, and the Chicago Herald, in an effort to diagnose this most serious disease of the body social, asks: "Owing to what conjunction of circumstances—of external environment and innate tendency—did those four boys embark on what might have been a long career of law breaking? How much did defective home training, how much did loafing about public places in the city, how much did lack of a legitimate outlet for the romance and energy of youth, how much did natural tendencies have to do with it? These questions present the greatest problem which confronts the modern city. No one knows the complete answer. But all know that there are certain vicious influences which lead the city's youth insensibly to crime, and that it is the business of society to strike at crime in its incipiency instead of waiting till it reaches full maturity."

These "certain vicious influences" are too well known to need description, although one cannot but wish that the metropolitan journal had had the moral courage to name them. On the records of the police courts they appear as the corner saloons and dram-shops. When a crime occurs the policemen and detectives never waste time hunting around the churches, the public schools, the factories, and places of industry; they go directly for their clue and their criminal to that well-known school of vice—the saloon. Ask the men who are serving terms of various duration behind the bars of the penitentiary where they learned their first lesson in evil doing, and from seventy to ninety per cent of these outlawed men, young and old, will tell you—in the place where liquor is sold. Truly the evidence is so complete and conclusive that no one need hesitate in an effort "at striking at crime in its incipiency," to attack first of all that breeding place of lawlessness, impurity and evil—the saloon.

PAT'S TEETOTAL DEED

MRS. CARL BILBY

Archbishop Ireland tells the following story of a total abstinence pledge that had a fixed economic value:

"I was strolling on a summer evening along one of the streets in the upper-town of St. Paul, Minnesota. The figure of a friend of mine was seen hammering a piece of wood in front of a newly built cottage. I approached with the salute: 'Well, Patrick, what are you doing here?' 'Industrying,' answered he, 'putting some last touches to this house of mine.' 'This house of yours?' I replied. 'Have you had the money to pay for this fine building?' 'Yes, indeed, this house is paid for and so is the next house, mine also; one to live in, the other to be rented to some neighbor.' My wonder grew. 'Why, how is this, Patrick? I remember well when you had very little money.' 'So do I remember,' replied Patrick, 'but I have found the money. You, Father Ireland, gave it to me.' Still more did my wonder grow. 'Come inside.' continued Patrick, and in an instant, following his quick pace I was upstairs in Patrick's bedroom. 'Look here,' he said, 'this is the deed of gift.' I looked. On the wall, above the bed nicely framed was the document, 'I promise to abstain during my lifetime from all intoxicating drinks. Signed, Patrick—. Witnessed, John Ireland.' The mystery of the two houses, the property of Patrick, was explained. With gladsome hand I saluted him; with warm heart I prayed for further success to the cause of total abstinence."

GOVERNOR CAPPER BRANDS AS FALSE STATEMENTS OF LIQUOR MEN CONCERNING KANSAS

Kansans are becoming extremely weary of having their reputation for veracity assailed by the liquor interests. They propose to let the public know that they will not longer endure it and they are using every possible agency to repudiate the falsehoods and misrepresentations circulated by the liquorites. The Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal church devotes a special bulletin to a spirited statement by Governor Arthur Capper, presenting the facts and asking the American people to judge Kansas prohibition in the light of truth. In order to aid in giving these statements to the people we quote from them extensively:

The National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association is circulating much literature throughout the country, which is so distinctly misleading and harmful that prompt and forceful repudiation of its contents is imperative.

The liquor interests do not fight fairly; they resort to falsehood and innuendo and subterfuge. What else is left to them? Can they defend the gambling, the resorts they own and use to retail their poison? There is one thing, and one alone, that the liquor interests can do, and that is to wade into the statistical masses of the census, trusting to the confusing power of twisted figures to make black appear white in the eyes of the average man.

The liquor interests have declared, in effect, that the legislature of Kansas has lied; that more than 700 editors of Kansas have lied; that every political party of Kansas has lied; that every minister and school teacher of Kansas has lied; that the president of the Kansas State Retailers' Association has lied; that the president of the State Bankers' Association and 166 bankers of Kansas have lied; that the president of the State Medical Society has lied; that the president of the Commercial Clubs of Kansas has lied; that the Governor of the state of Kansas and many state officials have lied; that 457,000 people who piled a majority on the wet candidate, Mr. Billard, in the last election, and thereby endorsed prohibition, have lied.

Cabell's "Facts About Kansas"

Just at present the Wholesale Liquor Dealers are circulating an article by Royal E. Cabell on "Facts About Prohibition in Kansas." Mr. Cabell says that Kansas' death rate figures are unreliable, for "Kansas is not in the registration area." So he takes the death rate of Kansas cities and compares them with the state death rate of license states, and makes no explanation that the rate in the latter case is dragged down by rural statistics. Since Mr. Cabell first wrote his article, Kansas has been admitted to the registration area, but the liquor people are still industriously circulating the statement—"Kansas figures are not accepted by the United States Government."

Cabell infers that Kansas has a rate of death by violence, excluding suicide, of 123. In 1912, according to Dr. J. S. Crumbine, secretary of the Board of Health, the rate of violent deaths in Kansas was 60.8, including both accidents and homicides. Mr. Cabell has taken the figures for leading cities and compared them with the figures covering both cities and rural districts in license states. He infers that the rate of suicide in Kansas is 22 to the 100,000. According to the figures of Dr. Crumbine, the rate of suicide in Kansas in 1912 was 12.2.

If, in this literature, issued by the liquor men, they want to set forth facts on which intelligent opinion may be formed, why does it not say in this connection that the death rate in Kansas in connection with all of those causes of death in which alcohol prominently figures is, in nearly every case, below that of nearby states, and is in every single case below that of the registration area? Why, for instance, would it not illuminate the problem to say that while the death rate in the registration area from cirrhosis of the liver was 14, in Kansas in 1912 it was only 7? Why not say that while the death rate from violent deaths in the registration area was 91.2, in Kansas it was 60.8? It might even be well to bring out the fact that while the

GOVERNOR ARTHUR CAPPER

If You Hear Any Man Questioning the Benefits and Effectiveness of Prohibition in Kansas Refer Him to Governor Capper

death rate from homicide in the registration area was 6.6, the homicide rate in Kansas in 1912 was 4.8. It undoubtedly would be instructive to say that the death rate in the registration area from suicide was 16.2, and in Kansas in 1912 was 12.2. The death rate from Bright's disease in the registration area was 87.5, and in Kansas only 55.4; for pneumonia in the registration area 89.2, and in Kansas in 1912 it was 45.6.

Mr. Cabell does not say these things. They contain "the whole truth," and the whole truth would bo fatal to Mr. Cabell's cause.

Divorce

Mr. Cabell figures that Kansas has a divorce rate of 286, but the latest available reports from the United States government do not agree with him. For the five years, 1898 to 1902, inclusive, the rate of divorce in Kansas, according to the United States government, was 109 (not 286). Divorce statistics are so chaotic and are affected by such varying conditions that it is not possible to make a reasonable comparison, but when Mr. Cabell makes an error of 177 to the 100,000, considerably more than doubling the Kansas rate for purposes of his propaganda, when he carefully refrains from saying that tho divorce rate in the prohibition state of North Dakota is only 88; that in Arizona (then license) it was 120; in Arkansas (then license) 136; in Colorado (then license) 158; in Idaho (then license) 120; in Indiana 142; in Montana 167; in Oregon (then license) 134; in Oklahoma (then license) 129; in Wyoming 118; in Texas 131; in Washington (then license) 184—when he ignores these significant facts and continues his false figures, there is no reason why he should receive consideration.

Mr. Cabell says that 15 license states have a rate of divorce to wives because of husbands' drunkenness lower than the rate in Kansas. But he carefully kicks sand over the important fact that drunkenness is not a cause for divorce in Vermont, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and Texas. Even then, what is the sense in saying that 15 license states have a lower rate of divorce for drunkenness than Kansas? It simply makes obvious the fact that 32 states have a higher rate.

In regard to this divorce question, something further should be said. Divorce is not common among foreign-born citizens or among the population of our great industrial centers. Some women accept their daily beating uncomplainingly. In states where the population is largely native American, where women demand consideration on the part of their husbands, a rough tongue-lashing is very apt to result in a divorce.

Prisons

It is stated in this literature that Kansas has a higher life prisoner rate than 21 other states. But it omits the important fact that there is no capital punishment in Kansas. Kansas imprisons its murderers for life; Illinois punishes them with death. The thing is so obvious as to be ridiculous.

We suggest to Mr. Cabell and his employers that they present to the people of the United States these facts:

The prison rate in 1910 for the entire United States was 121.4; in Kansas it was 91.1; in North Dakota, another prohibition state, it was 63. In the same year the rate of commitments to prison in the United States was 520, and in Kansas it was only 200, while the average rate of the license states in the West North Central Division, in which Kansas is located, was 465. The following table, showing the rate of commitments to prison in the whole United States, in the division of states in which Kansas is located, and in all the states of that division, brings out the truth in startling fashion:

United States	520
Minnesota	499
Missouri	481
South Dakota	273
Kansas	200
West North Central (average of license states)	465
Iowa (then license)	585
North Dakota	163
Nebraska	482
Colorado (then license)	610

Delinquent Juveniles

In regard to the question of juvenile delinquency, Mr. Cabell says that nineteen states had a lower rate than had Kansas. Tho fact is that some of these states had no juvenile delinquents at all because they had no such system. Consequently, they show up much better than Kansas.

It also affects the situation that some states that havo juvenilo delinquency systems have them in an undeveloped

The Death Knell of the Liquor Traffic Has Been Sounded

The death knell of the saloon has been sounded and it is only a question of a few years when the business, now made an outlaw, will be driven from the highways and forced into the secret places, where, after a few years more of fugitive life, it will meet its death. From now on the liquor business can consider itself a fugitive from justice, living in constant fear of arrest and punishment.

—Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State

WEST VIRGINIA'S GLAD DAYS

PROHIBITION LAWS WELL ENFORCED AND SUFFRAGE SENTIMENT ON THE INCREASE

LORA S. LA MANCE, National W. C. T. U. Organizer

In 1912, when West Virginia was one vast battle-ground for statewide prohibition, the writer spent seven months in the state. In 1915, with prohibition an accomplished fact, she visited it again.

The change is marked. A blind man could see it. Out from the principal towns the "land of muddy roads" is building here, there, yonder, paved roads into the country. Almost every mile has been built since the state went dry. It is a new experience to the farmer, when the dirt roads are almost hub deep in yellow clay, to drive five or ten miles into town on a hard brick road, and get there with team and carriage as spick and span as when he started. City streets are being paved, parks are being laid out, street car lines are being extended, and new buildings are going up everywhere. In some of the smaller towns, because the demand is so great, houses are rented at extravagant prices.

Tremendous Religious Awakening

Another notable thing is the number of revivals in the state. From "Billy" Sunday's spectacular campaign in the city of Huntington to the modest efforts of some backwoods evangelist in mining camps, there has been a tremendous religious awakening in West Virginia. Never were there as many revivals before; never so many conversions. Church and Sunday school attendance is steadily increasing. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has shared in this awakening to a better life and widening of opportunities. My own activities have been mostly in the least promising fields, yet we have put in about two new unions a week. West Virginia intends to gain at least six hundred new members this year.

So far the sentiment for law enforcement has been most gratifying. Hon. Fred O. Blue, the state commissioner, whose special duty it is to look after violators of the liquor law, has been making things lively for the bootlegger. They say he would prosecute his own grandmother if he caught her dabbling in liquor! Catlettsburg, Ky., right across the Ohio river from Kenova, West Virginia, has been the chief supply point for all the bootleggers of southern West Virginia. The good people of Catlettsburg have been ashamed of this, and there is a good prospect of a local option election that may wipe out this disgrace. Meanwhile the liquor toughs of two states have made this their storm center.

Lately the train from Catlettsburg stopped at Charleston, the state capital, in the wee early hours of the morning. The Pullman cars trailed far to the rear of the depot. But there was a dray waiting in the darkness, and into the dray box after box was lifted from the Pullman. Just as the dray started to leave, the driver was halted by Deputy Commissioner Bee, and the liquor concealed in the boxes was confiscated. This same deputy, the "busy Bee," went through an east-bound train on February 28, found and confiscated twenty-three suit-cases and five cartons of whisky, and landed half a dozen men in jail as a result of the raid. A few days later a woman in deepest mourning boarded the east-bound train for Catlettsburg. In sad tones she told sympathizing ladies that she was in great trouble; she was taking her husband's body to Lester, Raleigh county, for burial. At Thurmond it was necessary to transfer the "corpse." Its surprising weight aroused the suspicion of the baggage men. The box was opened and found to contain liquor. Madam was at once arrested and is now in jail with a good chance of spending a long time behind the bars, as she violated not only the state prohibition law, but two important Federal laws as well in bringing in liquor from another state in forbidden quantities and under disguise.

A conductor on the Coal and Coke R. R. told us that for months at least once a week he had found it necessary to eject a boisterously drunken man from his train. Since the prohibition law went into effect last July, he has had occasion to put but one drunken man off the train. Prohibition prohibits in the "little mountain state."

Another good thing is the spread of suffrage sentiment. This has been a surprise even to old and experienced suffrage workers. Over half of our addresses, given by special request, are out and out suffrage speeches. Twice, timid W. C. T. U. presidents have stipulated, "No suffrage talk, excepting incidental mention," and each time the "incidental mention" brought prolonged applause.

When the State Federation of Labor met in Charleston, they invited two ladies to address them on woman suffrage. One was Miss Alice McChesney of Charleston, a worker for the betterment of industrial conditions, and one of the factory inspectors of the state. The other was the writer. Miss McChesney made her maiden speech, a strong, clear, concise argument. The writer spoke upon "Suffrage States as I Have Found Them." The hundreds of delegates were wonderfully stirred, and they at once endorsed equal suffrage and put it in their platform.

Cigarets Are Not Neglected

Even the cigarets are getting it! Barboursville officials have notified their one policeman that he must stop cigaret smoking by boys, and this order is being enforced. J. W. Perry, a prominent attorney of Huntington, a staunch friend of the white ribboners, has made strong addresses on the evils of cigarets, to large and approving audiences in both Huntington and Kenova.

West Virginia is very much alive. The suffrage association paid Mrs. Yost, the state president of the W. C. T. U., the compliment of making her vice-president of that organization. During a long illness of the president of the association, Mrs. Yost virtually had both the suffrage association and the W. C. T. U. on her hands, and at the same time had a lot of legislative work to look after. She is a born general. She managed all three enterprises successfully. Her women think there is no problem so difficult that their tactful, earnest president cannot handle it.

PROFESSOR OF NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY DEPLORES USE OF NAME BY LIQUOR INTERESTS

One of the numerous liquor publicity articles that is appearing in some of the papers of the country contains what purports to be the opinion of men of some prominence on the question of moderate drinking. Among the authorities quoted is Professor Joseph Zeisler of the medical school of Northwestern University, Chicago, Ill. In response to an inquiry of Professor Zeisler as to the accuracy of this quotation, he replied:

"I am mortified beyond expression that a harmless statement made more than twenty years ago should in a distorted and disconnected form be resurrected every so often and held up against me, who use, both in my practice and in the lecture room, every opportunity to preach the nefarious influence of alcohol in general and of intemperance in particular. I do not know what I can do to stop these advertisements, which place me in a wrong light. In a former instance, I succeeded in halting the publication of my name. But I can't go on hunting out these small fry newspapers and pleading with them."

The majority of the men quoted are given as residents of European cities, and it is therefore somewhat difficult in the present state of affairs abroad, to get into communication with them, but judging by the result of the investigation reported above, the statements credited to them probably would be found to be either misquotations or so ancient or distorted as to be valueless as testimony on the subject of the use of liquor.

WHY HE DID NOT COMPETE FOR A PREMIUM!

"BILLY" SUNDAY TELLS IT

The noted evangelist who has been causing Philadelphians of all classes to walk humbly down "the sawdust trail" presents the old arguments against the liquor traffic in unique and picturesque language, of which the following is an example:

"The saloon comes as near being a rat hole for a wage-earner to dump his wages in as anything you can find. The only interest it pays is red eyes and foul breath, and the loss of health. You go in with money and you come out with empty pockets. You go in with character and you come out ruined. You go in with a good position and you lose it. You lose your position in the bank, or in the cab of the locomotive. And the saloon pays nothing back but disease and damnation and gives an extra dividend in delirium tremens and a free pass to perdition. And then it will let your wife be buried in the potter's field, and your children go to the asylum, and yet you walk out and say that the saloon is a good institution, when it is the dirtiest thing on earth. It hasn't one leg to stand on and has nothing to commend it to a decent man, not one thing.

"'But,' you say, 'we will regulate it by high license.' Regulate what by high license? You might as well try and regulate a powder mill. Do you want to pay taxes in boys or dirty money? A man that will sell out to that dirty business I have no use for. See how absurd their arguments are.

"If you drink Bourbon in a saloon that pays $1,000 a year license, will it eat your stomach less than if you drank it in a saloon that pays $500 license? Is it going to have any different effect on you, whether the gang pays $500 or $1,000 license?

"In some insane asylums do you know what they do? When they want to test some patient to see whether he has recovered his reason they have a room with a faucet in it and a cement floor, and they give the patient a mop and tell him to mop up the floor. And if he has sense enough to turn off the faucet and mop up the floor they will parole him, but should he let the faucet run, they know that he is crazy.

"Well, that is what you are trying to do. You are trying to mop it up with taxes, and insane asylums, and jails, and cures, and reformatories. The only thing to do is to shut off the source of supply.

"A man was delivering a temperance address at a fair grounds and a fellow came up to him and said:

"'Are you the fellow that gave a talk on temperance?'

"'Yes.'

"'Well, I think that the managers did a dirty piece of business to let you give a lecture on temperance. You have hurt my business, and my business is a legal one.'

"'You are right there,' said the lecturer, 'they did do a mean trick. I would complain to the officers.' He took up a premium list and said, 'By the way, I see there is a premium of so much offered for the best horse, and cow, and butter. What business are you in?'

"'I'm in the liquor business.'

"'Well, I don't see that they offer any premium for your business. You ought to go down and compel them to offer a premium for your business, and they ought to offer on the list $25 for the best wrecked home, $15 for the best bloated bum that you can show, and $10 for the finest specimen of a broken-hearted wife, and they ought to give $5 for the finest specimen of thieves and gamblers you can trot out. You can bring out the finest looking criminals. If you have something that is good trot it out. You ought to come in competition with the farmer, with his stock, and the fancy work, and the canned fruit.'"

GOVERNOR CAPPER BRANDS AS FALSE STATEMENTS OF LIQUOR MEN CONCERNING KANSAS

state; some states have an extensive parole system; some states spank the children for offenses that put them in charge in other states. Why should not Mr. Cabell say that North Dakota, a prohibition state, has the lowest juvenile delinquency rate in the West Central Division of states? Why should he not say, for instance, that Nebraska, which he compares with Kansas, had a percentage of discharge and parole of fifty-one, as compared with a percentage of thirty-nine in Kansas? These are some of the things that it is necessary for Mr. Cabell and the Wholesale Liquor Dealers to avoid as carefully as a British grain-ship avoids the glint of a periscope.

Pauperism

We are told that 14 states had a lower pauper rate than Kansas. The sentence is not complete or it would read, "and 33 have a higher pauper rate than Kansas." Mr. Cabell says that Nebraska has only a slightly higher rate of pauperism than Kansas, but he does not bring out the fact that Nebraska had poorhouses in only 51 out of 92 counties, and that Kansas had poorhouses in 74 out of 105 counties.

A complete study of the question of pauperism furnishes one of the most amazing arguments for prohibition. For instance, if we take all the prohibition states and all the license states (and they are both so well scattered as to make a comparison fair), we find that on the basis of the census of 1910 the paupers in the United States would number:

At rate for the continental United States	88,319
If the rate in the license states prevailed throughout the country	108,808
If the rate in the prohibition states prevailed throughout the country	27,309
If the Kansas rate had prevailed throughout the country	22,819

The United States as a whole, according to the figures of the census of 1910, had a poorhouse commitment rate of 96.3. The license states of the Union had a rate of 110, and the prohibition states a rate of 29.8. If Mr. Cabell can make anything out of this, let him go to it.

Liquor Consumption in Kansas

Mr. Cabell says he has been unable to locate any reliable figures in regard to liquor consumption in Kansas. Indeed, he is habitually unable to arrive at the truth or to locate any figures that are complete and correct. With great pleasure we furnish him with the following liquor consumption statistics, the estimates being made from reports made to county clerks under the Mahin law:

Kansas population	1,690,949
Liquor consumption, gals.	6,239,601.81
Paid for liquors	$ 5,303,666.04
Paid per capita	$3.04
Per capita cost in nation as a whole	$21.00
At rate of $21 per capita Kansas would pay	$34,509,929.00
Saving due to prohibition	$29,206,263.00

We are also very eager to furnish the following figures for Mr. Cabell's discussion. They were secured direct from state officials by the Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, and show the discrepancy between the Federal licenses and state licenses (or totals of local licenses). As is well known, this difference between Federal and state licenses is practically a census of "blind pigs" in any state. The table follows:

State—	Number State Licenses	Number Federal Lic'ns's	Excess Federal Lic'ns's
Michigan	*3,983	†7,939	3,956
Florida	354	1,267	913
New Hampshire	606	855	249
Rhode Island	397	1,552	1,155
Washington	2,340	3,169	829
Texas	3,100	3,336	236
Ohio	5,355	13,299	7,944
Idaho	226	794	568
Kansas	....	¶766	766

What the Witnesses Say

Let us call the witnesses and see what they think of prohibition in Kansas. If anyone should know, they should know, for they live with it and under it:

The Governor of Kansas says prohibition is a great success.

Every state official who has spoken out says prohibition succeeds.

More than 700 editors and newspaper men of Kansas, in state convention, unanimously endorsed prohibition.

Every political party in Kansas favors the prohibition law.

No minister has ever opened his mouth in favor of return to license; neither has any school teacher.

The president of Kansas Retailers says prohibition pays.

The president of the State Bankers' Association believes that prohibition is a tremendous asset to Kansas.

One hundred and sixty-six bankers have filed their testimony in favor of the law with the Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, and only six could be found in all the state who doubted the wisdom of this legislation.

The president of the Kansas Medical Society believes in prohibition.

The president of the Commercial Clubs of Kansas has said that prohibition has added real value to every acre of Kansas land.

The Supreme Court has testified in the following strong language to the benefits of the prohibition law:

"The prohibitory law is well enforced throughout the state. It is as generally well enforced as any other criminal law. The enforcement of the law distinctly promotes social welfare and reduces to a minimum economic waste consequent upon the liquor traffic and allied evils. The saloonkeeper and his comrades have been excluded from effective participation in the politics of the state."

And to completely settle the question for all time the legislature of Kansas, not by a majority, but unanimously, passed the following concurrent resolution at the last session:

(Here is inserted the resolution in full, as published in the February 25 issue of THE UNION SIGNAL.)

Does it Pay to Outlaw the Liquor Traffic?

TESTIMONY OF A NATION

Russia, the only nation that has ever really tried it, is emphatic in saying that it does pay. Some of the ablest economists and general observers in Europe say that prohibition in Russia has marked the beginning of the real and evidently permanent prosperity of that nation. Notwithstanding the sacrifice of revenue involved in the prohibition decree, the credit of Russia, even in one of the most costly wars of history, is so good that a Russian loan of $50,0000,000, according to Chancellor Lloyd George of Great Britain, has been oversubscribed in London within the last few weeks. It is becoming a well-understood fact that the credit of the state or the nation that gets itself into a right position on the prohibition question, like the credit of the individual who has taken the wise attitude in the same respect, is greatly strengthened and may be greatly extended.

To support this statement as it applies to Russia since the edict of the Czar, there is no lack of evidence if the words of the men in control of the policies and finances of the nation may be believed. No less an authority than M. Bark, the man to whom was entrusted the task of raising the deficit in the revenue due to the prohibition of the sale of intoxicants, declares, "We have stopped the gap without difficulty or effort. We had 500,000,000 roubles ($250,000,000) in the free reserve and other available funds from which we drew, and the problem was solved." And as proof of the improved financial condition of the individual citizen which in the long run determines the condition of the nation, he cites the increase in the savings banks accounts. He says, "Although only a few months have elapsed between the promulgation of the Czar's humane and patriotic edict and the end of 1914, the excess of deposits over withdrawals amounted to 84,000,000 roubles ($42,000,000) or twice the amount of the preceding year. In summing up the situation he says, "Russia's economic situation, therefore, is not merely excellent, but it is rapidly improving, and my faith in her future—not a blind, but a carefully reasoned faith—is boundless."

TESTIMONY OF A STATE

The senate of the State of Kansas very recently passed strong resolutions, declaring that statewide prohibition was one of its greatest assets, and the basis of its prosperity, material, social and financial. These legislators are unanimous in their endorsement of Governor Capper's words concerning the welfare of this great state: "Our material prosperity, our high standards of public morals, our personal well-being are largely due to the fact that for more than thirty years the open saloon has been an outlaw in this state."

Investigations into the economic conditions in prohibition and license states are bringing to light many startling facts concerning the welfare of the states which for longer or shorter periods have had a prohibition law on their statute books. An instance of this is the enormous growth of North Dakota as compared with that of her sister state of South Dakota, according to figures compiled by the Temperance Society of the Methodist Episcopal church. In 1890, a year after both territories were admitted to the union as prohibition states, South Dakota had a population of 4.5 to the square mile and North Dakota had only 2.7. In 1910 North Dakota lead with 8.2 population to the square mile, South Dakota, which had abandoned prohibition after a comparatively short trial, having only 7.6 despite her advantage in 1890. A corresponding increase is noticeable in other particulars. According to the census of 1910, North Dakota had a foreign born population of 35.4 per cent. and South Dakota only 22 per cent., notwithstanding the claim that prohibition keeps out the immigrant. In North Dakota 80 per cent. of the people owned their own homes, but in South Dakota the percentage was only 71.2. Concerning the number of paupers and insane to 100,000 of the population in these states, North Dakota had in 1910 only 14 paupers, and 108.8 insane as compared with 24.8 paupers and 148 insane in South Dakota.

Development along all lines in North Dakota, as shown by the 1910 census, is startling. Not only did the population increase 80 per cent. in the decade from 1900 to 1910, but her wealth increased 281.9 per cent, or from $225,166,751 in 1900 to 976,814.205 in 1910; the value of farm products increased 211 per cent. or from $64,252,000 in 1900 to $220,000,000 in 1910. Its livestock increased in value in the same period 155 per cent. probably a larger increase than any other state. The crops increased 234.4 per cent. or from $53,911,419 in 1900 to $180,279,872 in 1910, a percentage exceeded by no other state. North Dakota's agricultural wealth is greater than that of the seven combined New England states. Her bank deposits from 1898 to 1913 increased by more than 1,000 per cent.

TESTIMONY OF A CITY

The testimony of residents of the following saloonless cities is convincing:

"Business conditions and conditions generally in Freeport are very good, and considering the general business depression throughout the country they are especially good," writes a leading business man of this Illinois city which a year ago voted out its saloons, thereby sustaining a loss of $24,000 in license money. "Our banks have more on deposit this year than for several previous years, and in my opinion the amount is larger than it has ever been. I base this statement upon the report of one of our most prominent bankers." Several weeks after the closing of the saloons one of the largest general merchandise stores in Freeport reported that it had done the largest Saturday's business in its history. A butcher who has been in the business continuously for over twenty years in that city, stated that on one Saturday night he had been asked to cash three $20 bills, the first experience of the kind he had ever had.

Hon. W. W. Bennett, mayor of Rockford, Ill., a saloonless city of 55,000, says this concerning the condition of his city:

"Rockford has not gone back during the dry regime. She has gone ahead. Never before in the city's history has there been more and greater municipal improvements than have been conducted in the last two years. Not for a period of five years has the city of Rockford issued a single dollar of bonds, and there has just been completed an addition to the high school in this city at a cost of approximately $150,000 without the issuing of a single dollar's worth of bonds. No city in the country has a better fire department—practically all automobile equipped.

"So far as I have been able to learn from comparative figures in the middle west, Rockford has fewer policemen according to her population than any other city in this territory, the ratio being about one to 1,800 people.

"While fundamentally the question of saloons or no saloons is a great moral question, it has been largely decided here through the presentation of the economic side. The men who have been drinking, the men who pay the taxes, the men who employ labor, the men who work have found out through Rockford wet and Rockford dry, that the great toll of considerably more than $1,000,000 taken from the city to keep our fifty-three saloons running was just so much money wasted—that the great bulk of it left the city—that a large part of that money went to Peoria, Milwaukee and Chicago, which cities supplied alcoholic liquors to the consumers here. A large part of this money is now staying in the city of Rockford, paying up old debts, paying cash for the things now sold, buying lots and building homes, thereby creating taxable value and thus producing revenue with which to pay the city's obligations."

Waterloo, Iowa, is making a very satisfactory showing for the two years that the city has been without saloons. We give a few of the items which are being used to show improvement since the city has voluntarily surrendered the nearly $32,000 yearly license money: Bank clearings for 1913 approximate $1,000,000 a month more than for the preceding year, and those of 1914 are about $550,000 greater per month than during 1912, the difference in the figures for 1913 and 1914 being due to the general business depression the latter year. The tax levy for the city and county for 1913, over 1912, was about 7½ mills, 5 mills of which was levied for the Soldiers' Memorial and County Insane Hospital. The total levy of 1914 shows a reduction of from 2 to 3½ mills notwithstanding the prediction of the liquor interests to the contrary. Four new school houses, two built during 1913 and two during 1914 successfully substantiate the ten per cent. increase in school attendance claimed for the first year under prohibition and twelve per cent. for the second year. Notwithstanding the erection of ninety store buildings during 1913 and 1914 there are at the present time in the city of Waterloo eight less vacant stores than there were one year ago and seven less than there were in 1912.

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

OUR EASTER COVER PAGE

Our cover page reproduces a drawing by Lady Henry Somerset from a bronze tablet placed over the entrance to an industrial home for girls founded by her in memory of her father, the late Earl Somers. A photograph of this beautiful drawing has for many years adorned one of the rooms of Rest Cottage. Its message, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it," is of peculiar significance to white ribboners, for their obedience to this loving command has been honored by the wonderful victories of the present day and a continuance of this obedience will bring to blessed fruition the work begun for National Constitutional Prohibition.

THE CRIME OF UNCONCERN

Many a city labors under the disadvantage of the "bad citizenship of good men." If by some process these good men could be awakened to a sense of their responsibility as members of the body municipal, the community would soon be transformed. How to accomplish this awakening is the question. "Billy" Sunday seems to have solved the problem in many of the places he has visited. So forcefully and baldly does he picture the hideousness of the liquor business and so ignoble and cowardly does he make toleration of it appear that thousands of citizens have caught the vision of what a genuine, all-round, fin de siecle American patriot ought to be and have straightway proceeded to measure up to the standard of that vision and the liquorites have soon discovered to their dismay that what had heretofore been a company of perfectly harmless good men has become an army of "Christian soldiers marching as to war" against the liquor and vice traffic and every other rampant evil. Not every community can have a "Billy" Sunday to arouse it from its lethargy but the Woman's Christian Temperance Union can furnish some of the elements of this awakening process.

It can secure a promise from the local pastors to preach frequently, fervidly and forcefully on civic responsibility, with due emphasis on the drink question. Simultaneously the press of the city should be enlisted in the interests of the movement. The papers should be urged to publish the press paragraphs sent out by the National W. C. T. U. Publicity Bureau; to arrange for the plated matter and patent insides to be procured from the Western Newspaper Union. In other words, every member of the local union should determine to be as diligent in giving publicity to the truths concerning total abstinence and prohibition as are our opponents, the liquorites, in circulating falsehoods and misrepresentations. Plaster the town with prohibition sentiment by means of posters on every available and rentable billboard. Sow the town with prohibition leaflets, placed in waiting stations, and distributed tactfully and wisely at doors and in public places. In short make the liquor question the sensation of the hour. Get men, women and children to discussing it over the counter, in the office and at the dinner table. There are few things the liquor men fear more than a full and free discussion of the drink question. They know that discussion leads to interest, interest to concern; concern is followed by conviction, and conviction prompts to action on the side of righteousness at the ballot box, and all these things spell doom to the liquor traffic.

THE POOR SUFFERING FARMER!

That the farmers of the nation will not concede they are being ruined by the prohibition wave that is sweeping over the country, is a constant cause of grief to the liquor interests. When these men of the open air, who have a habit of doing their own thinking, refuse to sit down in sackcloth and ashes and bemoan the failure of distilleries and breweries because, according to "the trade," this will deprive them of a market for their products, the liquor men are in despair. "It is difficult to understand why the farmer cannot see that the price he gets for his corn, his wheat and his other grains is dependent upon the demand for such grain by the distilleries and breweries of the country," complains a writer in Mida's Criterion.

We would suggest that one reason why the clear-headed farmer cannot see that he is losing by the diversion of his grain to other markets than the distillery and brewery is because it is not true that any large proportion of his product is wasted in the making of liquor. As a matter of fact, only about two and one-half per cent. of all the grain produced in this country goes to make alcoholic drinks, and if the alcohol factories were to close, the capital thus released and left in the hands of the saloon's patrons would be spent largely in the purchase of the farmer's produce for the families who, because the head of the house wasted his substance in the saloon, had heretofore had to go without such luxuries.

But even if the farmer did temporarily lose a few dollars in the adjustment incident to a change of markets, he would be sensible enough to take into consideration that the loss of this small amount was of little moment compared with the ultimate gain to him as a tax-payer. He would recall the enormous taxes he is each year compelled to pay for the support of institutions for the housing of the poor, the criminal, the insane, necessitated by the traffic in drink.

Lastly, he would consider the dollars and cents argument a secondary matter, a mere trifle, when compared with his desire for a clean, safe environment in which to raise his family. The average farmer considers his sons and daughters—potential and prospective American citizens—of more value than the biggest crop of grain ever harvested, and he knows from sad experience that the presence in his community of the legalized saloon is a menace to the boys and girls in his home.

These, we believe, are a few of the many reasons why the state granges, and the individual members of these organizations, have almost unanimously placed themselves on record for statewide and nationwide prohibition.

A COMPLIMENT TO KANSAS

No greater compliment could be paid to Kansas' beneficent prohibition law and the effectiveness with which it is enforced than the unremitting attacks made upon it by the liquor interests. It is not to be wondered that the worthy governor of the sunflower state shows some righteous indignation in replying to these misrepresentations. The friends of the cause can help in the work of refuting the falsehoods circulated by the liquorites by giving the article of Governor Capper on pages 4 and 6 wide publicity.

EASTER IN THE HEART

MRS. S. R. G. CLARK

A few months ago, when the storms of January and February—ice, sleet and snow—were abroad, the Easter lily seemed a far away proposition. It took faith—faith founded on past experience—to believe that in a few short weeks it would appear to gladden our eyes. Yet at that very time life was beginning to stir within the lily-bulb and Mother Nature had already made her preparations for its advent. To be sure a few persons, who "walk by faith, not by sight," were even then awake to future possibilities; already took imaginary sniffs at the rose and lilac yet to be; but most of us turned up our collars and braced ourselves for the next snowdrift and prophesied a cold and late spring.

There comes a time, however, every year when the days begin to lengthen and the sun to strengthen, when an adventurous robin dares trill his homely song in the chilly air and hardy buds begin to swell on the maple and apple-trees. Then everybody seems suddenly to awaken to a realization that spring is on the way, and soon the fact reaches the blood of the most prosaic, and, unconsciously the heavy step lightens and the dullest eye brightens. Faith is not needed then. There's a stir of the blood that proclaims the miracle begun; we know the spring is almost here. It is no longer difficult to imagine that we smell apple-blossoms and lilacs. They're on the way.

Well, thanks be unto our God that this Easter season of 1915 sees the very miracle that is wrought yearly in the springtime—this quickening consciousness of the inevitable at the door—accompanying, surrounding, the once thought-to-be-doubtful cause of Prohibition. The air is charged with its elixir, it forces its way into the editor's sanctum and filters through printer's ink; we breathe it in without half trying, not just a few fanatics—but folks. It has reached the blood of the blessed everyday commonalty and attracted to itself the attention of every kind of magnate. The noble and ignoble have received notice of its approach. The bull-frog is piping it from the slime of the stagnant pool and the robin from the tree-top. It no longer takes faith to anticipate it or courage to proclaim it. It's on the way.

In the midst of a conflict of nations such as the world has never before witnessed, the prayers of the Crusaders are being answered and the blessedness of their proclamation is proving itself. The antidote of so many ills, long proclaimed by reformer and prophet, has been seized upon and utilized by rulers in their bitterest hour of need. Prohibition is proving its worth not only where peace perches on neutral banners, but where daily blood is as plentiful as daily bread. The miracle worker, the Prince of Peace, sends it forth as His messenger to assure us that the world has not yet gone beyond His control, or men or nations where His arm cannot reach or His voice be heard.

This Easter time, with saddened hearts and gladdened hearts, we raise to our Immanuel eyes filled with tears of mingled agony and bliss. With lips that tremble in beseechment for the suffering millions of our brothers and sisters, we yet pour forth our heartfelt praise that out of man's bitterest bitter he may still gather his sweetest sweet, and find the white blossoms of Easter lily and Resurrection hope clustering about the cross.

A TRANSFER OF "GOOD WILL"

The number of "for sale" advertisements in the liquor journals at the present time is noticeable and significant. One headed "Exceptional Opportunity" states that an "old, established, active whisky house contemplates retiring from business January 1 next." The date is well chosen, for it is a popular and fashionable time for retiring from the liquor business. The liquor dealers of Washington, Oregon, Colorado, Idaho, Arkansas and Iowa are indulging in the same kind of contemplation as "Exceptional Opportunity," spurred on, to be sure, by the action of their respective legislatures and the voters of their states. "Exceptional Opportunity," however, has the advantage of them, for he offers for sale with the whisky establishment, its "valuable good will." A bargain in good will, to be sold at reduced rates, to the highest bidder, but, mind you, not the good will of the men who have been ruined by the poison manufactured by this whisky house; not the good will of the wives and children of the men who drank away their health and intellect and character; not the good will of the tax payers who have been burdened with the care of the product of the whisky house. No, all the wealth of the world could not purchase the "good will" of these unwilling parties to the contract of sale by which this transfer of property shall be made—a transfer that makes possible the continuation of a business in the train of which follow unspeakable woe and want for thousands.

Oswin Jerome O'Brien, a millionaire, is reported by the North American to have sentenced himself, in due form of law, to abstain from all alcoholic liquors, for four years. If he fails to keep from drinking, he loses control of his $2,000,000 fortune for the remainder of his life.

LEGISLATIVE NEWS

The excise committee of the New York assembly, on March 23, voted to report the statewide prohibition bill with a provision for referendum in 1916.

The resolution for submission of woman suffrage to the voters which recently passed the Maine senate by a vote of 26 to 4, received a good vote in the house, on March 23, but failed to secure the required two-thirds. The vote was 88 to 59.

An anti-cigaret bill passed the lower house of the Michigan legislature on March 20.

$100,000 is appropriated annually by the Congress of the United States for the suppression of the liquor traffic among the Indians. "Let us save the American Indian from the curse of whisky," pleads Cato Sells, commissioner of Indian affairs. Yes, let us save the red man and also the white man, not by liberal appropriations but by a national prohibition law which will prevent the manufacture of alcoholic liquor and keep it from both races.

"It is not without import that the secretary of state of the United States devoted two hours to writing his name on pledge cards signed by the people, who have heard him denounce the drink demon," says The Chicago Tribune.

As a substitute for saloons, William F. Cochran, a Baltimore millionaire, is advancing the finances to organize social centers, and in connection therewith employment will be found for those who lose their jobs through prohibition. Dr. Charles Stelzle, the noted writer and speaker, is in charge of the movement.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

BREAKS THE RESURRECTION DAY

MRS. G. L. BARNARD WEATON

Inspired by Lillian M. N. Stevens' Prophetic Words

"I know——
"We shall win." Prophetic message,
Born of soul's far visioned sight,
Vigil of the desert's waiting,
Travail on lone mountain's height.
Hailing through a mist of fearing,
O'er the farther hills of time,
On the ramparts of forever,
Victory of faith sublime.

"We shall win." . . . The proclamation
Ringeth now from shore to shore,
Writing in the law organic,
Prohibition evermore,
Life and liberty established
On the altruistic plan,
Unity of love and labor,
In one brotherhood of man.

"We shall win." . . . From Right's clear bugle,
Sounding never in defeat,
Comes the call of crucial moment,
For the sacrifice complete.
Higher lift the torch, and higher.
O'er the front of battle line,
Waves the white crossed flag triumphant,
We shall conquer by that sign.

"We shall win." . . . The night stars sang it,
Radiant from one bright hope
'Lumining the path of ages,
Down the mountain's sheep-trod slope.
Motherhood of all tomorrow,
Pleading with madonna eyes,
Answered sob of childhood sorrow
In a mangered Babe's first cries.

"We shall win." . . . A Man of Sorrows
Walks beside the Galilee
Calling to eterne of future,
Leave your nets and follow me,
Rugged is the path and thorny,
Blazed each step in pain, bare shod.
Agony of garden waiting,
Kneeleth there the Son of God.

"We shall win." . . . On Calvary yonder,
Looms a cross with blood-marks stained,
But the open grave behind it,
Holds no form in death enchained.
Infinitude of love incarnate
Rolls the guarded stone away,
And the tomb of night enshrouded,
Breaks to Resurrection Day.

MARCHING TO GLORY

FROM THE OLD BAY STATE

DR. L. C. PURINGTON

"We come, we come,
The nation yet to be!
We come, we come,
The truth shall make us free!
Law is but the portal white that leads to liberty
As we are marching to glory."

—E. G. I.

Sometimes in our work we move forward only by inches—"inching along," as Frances E. Willard used to say. And then again, in some particular phase at least, we move by leaps and bounds.

Just now "New England sets the nation's pace" in the matter of co-operation; special co-operation with the churches and church representatives in auxiliaries, missionary boards, home and foreign interests pertaining to the Kingdom.

Read this from Mrs. Jennie L. W. Rooke, Rhode Island's president:

"Our Providence union entertained the officers and members of all the Women's Foreign Missionary societies of all our city churches, the state presidents of each denomination being our guests of honor; our speakers being Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson of Massachusetts and Mrs. D. K. Livingston. It was a perfectly horrid day so far as weather was concerned, but a perfectly splendid meeting—an audience of more than three hundred and fifty, fine speeches and spirit; a tea and social hour. Had the day been good our audience would have been doubled."

We have to confess, we who are altogether missionary and altogether temperance and not so much of either as, "Christ for the World," that sometimes as reformers we have been conscious that we were more tolerated than popular. Our work in legislative halls, as suffragists, and in other aggressive effort, has been deprecated, but the vision grows!

Massachusetts, as Rhode Island, has also had a delightful and spirited meeting at its headquarters in the interests of co-operation, and the women came! It means more in Massachusetts, "the hotbed of missions," than in the western whirlwind states, or among the southern cyclones.

Mrs. Stevenson was at her happiest and the elect missionary board women were allured to commit themselves without reserve to our great and just cause and its bearing on their work. It is needless to say that the World's and National superintendent basked in the overflow and felt like one of old—

"Now, O Lord, lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace."

Our sainted National and state superintendent, Ella Gilbert Ives, was present in the rendering of the "L. T. L. in Mission Lands" Exercise—

"A Loyal Temperance band, Legioners from many a land."

*****

"All the world for Christ we sing,—
Jesus Christ, our Lord and King.
Listen, and you'll hear us say
How we're hastening the day."

Our National corresponding secretary was there by letter saying that the Relation of Temperance to Missions "World in Boston" exhibit, has gone to the Panama Exposition to tell its own story of waste and destruction by the liquor traffic. The National president had written, "Go on with the good work of co-operation. Heaven bless it and you and everybody."

And now I have only given you a tithe of how "New England sets the nation's pace."

AMONG THE STATES

Congress will be asked to extend the franchise to the women of Hawaii if a resolution introduced on March 24 in the territorial legislature, carries.

The senate of the Michigan legislature is soon to vote upon a bill prohibiting the sale of liquor within a radius of five miles from certain state educational institutions.

"The fact that the women can vote will probably make Montana dry at the election on the statewide prohibition measure in 1916," remarked John S. Wyman, deputy sheriff at Butte, Montana, in a conversation with a friend in St. Paul. "It is confidently expected that the women voters will be able to overcome the liquor vote."

Shipping liquor into Kansas threatens to become a lost art if the bill which was recently introduced in the Kansas legislature by the speaker of the house becomes a law. This bill will shut liquor out of the state absolutely as it classifies the railroad or express company as a jointist. It will not affect the shipment of wines for sacramental purposes.

A petition signed by more than 1,000 inmates of the eastern penitentiary at Philadelphia asking favorable consideration for any legislation looking toward the curtailment of the sale of liquor was recently presented to the lower house of the Pennsylvania legislature.

The Mississippi supreme court has upheld the May-Mott-Lewis law prohibiting the keeping of intoxicants in social clubs. In rendering its decision the court quoted the following: "Whisky is a good thing in its place. There is nothing like it for preserving a man when he is dead. If you want to keep a dead man, put him in whisky; if you want to kill a live man put whisky in him."

"The fact that prohibition is tenfold more popular in Kansas today than it was twenty years ago has only one meaning," says the Topeka Daily Capital, "and that is that it works well and the people are satisfied with it, financially, industrially, and every other way."

AMONG OUR WORKERS

A free lecture to every local union in New York that makes a net gain of fifty new members during the year, is offered by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, state president. April 5 she starts out on an institute trip which will include visits to the unions already entitled to these prize lectures.

White ribboners in America who last year, upon her visit to the United States, had the pleasure of meeting Baroness de Laveleye, president of the W. C. T. U. of Belgium, will be interested in the following news regarding her sent by Miss Agnes E. Slack, honorary secretary of the World's W. C. T. U.: "The baroness is now busily working in the laundry of the Belgian Field Hospital at Dunkirk. She is quite well. Her nephew is at the front in the trenches." Miss Slack adds, "Life is extremely busy for us all in England. Our country is becoming more and more the home of the Belgian nation and numbers of the French are for the time being living here. It is not at all unusual in the streets of London to hear almost as much French spoken as English."

Mrs. Josie E. Sizer, Wisconsin state organizer and Y. P. B. secretary, has just closed a most successful week's work in La Crosse, and twenty new members, from among the best people of the city, have joined the union. She gave her hearers a glimpse of the blessedness of service which deepened their love for this cause which is slowly but surely becoming a popular one in Wisconsin.

One hundred seven new members, eighty-seven active and twenty honorary, were secured through a contest recently held in the Dover (N. H.) union. In this contest an appeal was made through the press urging every right-minded citizen to line up with the W. C. T. U. and thus lend their support on the side of the righteous measures for which the organization stands. The names of the leaders of the contest were published and it was urged that readers of the announcement present their application for membership without waiting to be sought out and invited to join.

That a prophet is not without honor in his own city was lately demonstrated by the fact that Mrs. Sena Hartzell Wallace, National organizer, was invited to address the congregation of the Washington Boulevard M. E. church, Kansas City, Kan. The occasion was "Prohibition Red Letter Day" and attracted a large and enthusiastic audience. In Mrs. Wallace's address she effectively linked together the names of the three great reformers, Frances Willard, Neal Dow, and Lillian M. N. Stevens, and at the close of her remarks was accorded a hearty ovation. An offering was received for the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund.

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor has been making a triumphal tour through her own state of Georgia where she has spoken to immense audiences composed to a large extent of voters. She has gained new friends for prohibition, new members for the W. C. T. U. and goodly collections to rid Georgia of near-beer saloons.

Mrs. Lizzie O. Middleton, special lecturer for the Scientific Temperance Instruction department of the National W. C. T. U., has been invited by Prof. Wardlaw, president of the Georgia Educational Association, to address the teachers of the state at a meeting in Macon, May 6-8. She will have a fine exhibit and will make several addresses in Bibb county.

Since the National Convention in Atlanta, Mrs. Amy C. Weech, National organizer and lecturer, has been in the field in Virginia and South Carolina, addressing large audiences in churches, schools, colleges and private homes. During the five weeks spent in South Carolina, Mrs. Weech organized nine unions, delivered 56 addresses, secured 260 active members, 128 honorary members and 45 pledge signers and left a good balance in the state treasury. Mrs. Weech will return to South Carolina next August and will remain until the election, when it is believed South Carolina will add one more white state to Uncle Sam's growing collection.

Mrs. E. L. Calkins, president of the Michigan W. C. T. U., has been in the field much of the time since January 1 and has gained more than 400 new members for the organization.

The hostess of the Prescott (Ark.) UNION SIGNAL day meeting was Mrs. D. L. McRae, a daughter of Mrs. Jennie Carr Pittman, vice-president-at-large of the Arkansas W. C. T. U., while another of Mrs. Pittman's daughters is the president of this flourishing union. In fact, all of Mrs. Pittman's five daughters are enthusiastic members of the organization. The Prescott union enjoys an unusually large subscription list to the official paper, nevertheless at THE UNION SIGNAL day celebration special emphasis was again directed to the importance of each member being a reader of the official paper.

At a jubilee meeting on February 22, to celebrate the freedom from debt of the $15,000 hall owned by the Rockford (Ill.) W. C. T. U., the mortgage against the property was burned with fitting ceremony. Some eight years ago when the union was small in numbers the need of a building in which to carry on social settlement work in the community was greatly felt. Under the leadership of Mrs. Angus McFarland, who has served as president of this union for fourteen years, the enterprise was undertaken and the building has proved to be a source of uplift for the young people of the neighborhood. Here a Sunday school was started which was later turned over to the Third Presbyterian church. The building is now used for W. C. T. U. and L. T. L. meetings, for a public library station and many social, public meetings, lectures and suppers are held within its walls.

A notable occasion in the annals of the East Cobleskill (N. Y.) L. T. L. was the presentation by the L. T. L. of the picture of Frances E. Willard to the public school which took place on Saturday afternoon, March 13, before a large assemblage of friends and patrons of the school. The program opened with fine chorus singing by the Legioners who sat in a body. Mrs. Datus Quackenbush, president of the Schoharie county W. C. T. U. and guest of honor, gave a most impressive account of the life and work of Frances E. Willard, and the presentation speech was made by Miss Ethel Pickard, secretary of the L. T. L., who deftly loosened the beautiful flag which veiled the portrait. Rev. Brown accepted the picture on behalf of the public school. This little group of Legioners, without any outside aid, paid for the picture, which cost $5 framed, and still have a few dollars left in the treasury.

MY NEW NAME

ELLA GILBERT IVES

I cannot bear the silence, dearest Lord;
My heart is yearning for the spoken word:
O breathe my name in accents sweet and low,
As you spoke Mary's in the long ago.

I cannot speak your name, my longing child;
Earth has no word so dear, so undefiled
As your new name, set in a shining stone,
Vibrating music for your heart alone.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. J. B. HUTCHINSON, Scottdale, Pa., a charter member of the local union and active worker for more than thirty years. She was vice-president at the time of her home-going.

MISS EMOGENE DUNTON, a charter member of the Cincinnatus (N. Y.) W. C. T. U., and for thirteen years its president. She left to the union a legacy of $50.

MRS. WILLIAM T. LEE of Harbor Beach, Mich., for many years district president of the W. C. T. U. and a worker who carried on her heart with especial interest the success of statewide and nationwide prohibition.

MRS. MARTHA HADLEY TRUEBLOOD, Bradentown, Fla., an officer and faithful worker in the W. C. T. U. She was one of the Crusaders in the early days of the movement in Ohio, and at the Atlanta convention helped serve the treat of luscious fruit.

MRS. H. M. BENTON, Anoka, Minn., for a number of years president of the local W. C. T. U. Mrs. Benton was connected with the Crusade movement in Ohio, and was ever an earnest, active white ribboner.

MRS. SARAH A. BROWN, Ariel, Pa., for thirty-five years an earnest worker for temperance through various departments of W. C. T. U. activity.

MRS. G. G. PHILIP, Ft. Lupton, Colo., for nineteen years the faithful recording secretary.

A little band of six white ribboners was recently organized at Moorcroft, Wyoming, the only union within a radius of a hundred miles or more. Notwithstanding the small membership the union is planning to enlist women from the surrounding ranches and towns, and is working for an increase to fifty members before the state convention. The charter members of this union are all trained workers, white ribboners who have moved there from other states. Mrs. Mertie Shane Stewart, the enthusiastic president, was formerly a district president in Minnesota, and Mrs. Mary A. Browne, the corresponding secretary, a worker well known to white ribboners in Missouri, Kansas and Arkansas. On February 17 the children in the little school near Moorcraft where Mrs. Browne is teaching were well instructed concerning Miss Willard's life, and tiny pictures of Miss Willard and bows of white ribbon adorned the compositions written by the children in honor of the day.

Mrs. Margaret Peck Hill of Baltimore, Md., who was recently the guest of Mrs. Frances J. Gaudet, president of the Louisiana (Willard) W. C. T. U., at the Colored Industrial Home and School, filled fourteen engagements in various churches and secured more than five hundred signatures to the pledge. At the close of her address before the Baptist Minister's Alliance fifty ministers signed the pledge.

JAN THORSEN'S EASTER LILY

GRACE BOTELER SANDERS, Jamestown, Ohio

Miss Hitty, bending over her plants at the south window, frowned as a bay horse and rider went galloping by. She could not have been displeased by the blossoms which lifted their heads so sweetly. Although it was Easter time and no flowers had deigned to show their heads in the garden in front of the house, Miss Hitty's window rejoiced in a long row of hyacinths of every shade, scarlet geraniums, sweet scented lilies-of-the-valley, fuchsias, and best of all, one queenly lily which was about to bloom. For a time it seemed that she had forgotten even this, for her sharp eyes behind blackbowed spectacles were watching the road and the galloping horse which was now but a speck against the April sky.

Thoughtfully Miss Hitty walked to the door and looked down the road in the direction in which the swaying figure had disappeared. She needed no one to tell her that Jan Thorsen was drunk again. The time had been when he was a respectable husband and father, the proud possessor of a little wife who had been among the union's most helpful members. Never a day had passed without some cheery message between the two white ribboners. On all occasions one would see them together.

Mrs. Thorsen had belonged to one of the best and wealthiest families in Girard. No one knew just where Thorsen hailed from. He was big and handsome and well educated, was the best worker in the neighborhood and dressed like a king. He had no bad habits of which any one knew and consequently when Mildred Horney decided to marry him, it was thought a good match. They were married on Easter seven years ago. For a long time, so Mildred said, they were heavenly happy. Miss Hitty remembered the smiles of the first babe and its christening. She remembered, too, the many excursions to the little town where for ten years no saloon had blackened the streets. But on a certain fatal day the saloons had been voted back and the next time Jan Thorsen had gone to town he had not returned until morning and then he was but a besotted trembling wretch, who blustered about and abused the young mother. Mildred, horrified beyond measure, had opened her lips to reproach him. "I won't have another word from you!" he had raged, "I've been tied to a woman's petticoats long enough and I'm sick of it. After this I intend to be a man and drink every chance I get."

He slept all day while Miss Hitty comforted his sobbing wife. Both women hoped that Jan would be sobered when he awakened, but as soon as he opened his eyes he seized the whisky bottle which he had brought with him and drank until he fell into a state of insensibility.

Miss Hitty remembered that Mildred's father, Billy Horney, had worked most faithfully for the return of the saloons. He was not a man who understood the ways of the world. When the slick-tongued liquor representatives pictured to him the decrease in taxes which would come with the return of the saloon, Horney, who loved his money better than anything else except his daughter, immediately capitulated and gave all his time for weeks to electioneering for the saloon interests. The women of the union had visited him in a body but he had all but insulted them. The preachers and teachers and even Jan expostulated. "It's all right for you folks who don't pay taxes!" Horney had answered loftily. "Liquor hurts no one who lets it alone. I say, have a few saloons and reap the benefits."

Rocking in her chair on this sunny April day, Miss Hitty lived over again the rapid descent of Jan Thorsen. After the saloons came he was rarely ever sober. His fields, which had been well tended, became a waste, his horses were abused and his wife, mistreated, too, became pale and shrinking although she loyally defended her husband.

One day Billy Horney, finding his son-in-law in one of the saloons, ventured to remonstrate. Thorsen swaggered toward the bar and laughed in the old man's face. "You said whisky wouldn't hurt anyone who left it alone!" he jeered. "You didn't know that my father drank and my grandfather and that I was on the verge of becoming a drunkard six months before I came to Girard. I took a position here, because I had heard of the conservatism of the place. The drummers assured me that there never would be a saloon in the village. You brought the saloon back and I'm on the old road again."

The situation daily grew worse. Just yesterday a telephone call had taken Miss Hitty to the home where the drunken husband had struck down the wife he had promised to love and had brutally beaten their boy. The old father, angered, had taken his daughter to his home.

Miss Hitty rose and took off her apron preparatory to a trip to town. Another campaign was at hand. Three years of horror had hung over Girard. Already a petition had been circulated calling for another election. The women of the union were to hold a bazaar to help defray their part of the expense fund. Miss Hitty filled a basket with good things and took this to the buggy, and lastly she put in her flower pots, though she left the lily in the dismantled window. "Surely, no one will vote for the saloon with conditions as they are now," she said to herself as she drove into the little town.

Jan Thorsen was not the only one who had suffered. Many other men had lingered at the bar to their grief and debasement. Grocers were complaining of unpaid bills; garnishees and judgments kept petty lawyers busy. Women and little children who had never known what it was to be hungry or cold had gone almost barefoot through the winter snow. Homes had been thrown back upon the hands of the real estate men because the fathers banked at the saloon instead of at the place where their money should have been deposited.

Miss Hitty had scarcely tied her horse at the rack before Billy Horney approached her. "You know what happened yesterday!" he said bluntly, "I want you for a witness against the criminal!"

Miss Hitty straightened herself just as Jan Thorsen, bent on obtaining whisky, galloped by to a saloon. He could scarcely sit in the saddle. Miss Hitty peered straight into the old man's face.

"May be we haven't the same idea about who the chief sinner is!" she said sharply. "In my opinion the real one is you. Who made Girard wet for the sake of a few paltry dollars?"

Billy Horney, thus arraigned, was completely taken off his feet. Although Thorsen had hurled accusations at him, they were without effect, but Miss Hitty's terse statement set him to thinking. When he was on his way home to the farm he recalled some of her cutting accusations! "We must take care of the weaker brother. You are responsible, and so is every other voter, not only for the sins, but for the murders, the robberies, the fires, the wife beatings which come about through the open saloon."

The father's heart smote him when Mildred, pale and worn, met him at the door, and he went off by himself where he did a lot of thinking. That very day Billy Horney drove back to town and fired the first gun in the campaign, donating to the union five hundred dollars.

It was late when Miss Hitty went home. She was overjoyed that the old man had come to his senses. She had no cause to worry that night about Mildred and her children, but in spite of herself she could not keep from thinking of miserable Jan who by this time was doubtless at home drunk. "I want you to come along with me," she told the hired man. "We'll take Jan something to eat and if you are with me I won't be afraid." Suddenly her glance fell upon the exquisite lily. "Jan Thorsen may have that, too," she said.

When they reached Thorsen's house the door was open. The man lay on the floor in the midst of broken bottles. Four full ones attracted Miss Hitty's attention and she gingerly picked them up and threw them outdoors where they broke and disgorged their contents. She tidied up the house, arranged the bed, and with the hired man's help put the drunkard into it. She knew that for two weeks Jan had not been sober, and feared the outcome, so took the precaution to strap the drunkard fast.

EASTER PRAISE

MRS. S. R. GRAHAM CLARK

The Easter lilies breathe it out,
The Easter songs proclaim it,
There's blessing coming, never doubt
Nor fear, my soul, to name it!

Discerned at last chief cause of strife;
Prime curse for execration:
Men band themselves to safeguard life,
To save the state and nation.

O alcohol, thy day is done,
Thy sun declined, descended!
For righteous peoples rise as one,
Thy reign of woe is ended.

O Easter lilies, pure and white,
Tune all your bells to singing!
This Easter day, O Christ, our Christ,
New praise to Thee we're bringing!

A SONG OF EASTER

CELIA THAXTER

Sing, children, sing!
And the lily censers swing,
Sing that life and joy are waking and that Death no more is king.
Sing the happy, happy tumult of the slowly brightening Spring,
Sing, little children, sing!

Sing, children, sing!
Winter wild has taken wing.
Fill the air with sweetest tidings till the frosty echoes ring!
Along the eaves the icicles no longer glittering cling;
And the crocus in the garden lifts its bright face to the sun,
And the golden catkins swing
In the warm airs of the spring;
Sing, little children, sing!

Sing, little children, sing.
The lilies white you bring
In the joyous Easter morning, for hopes are blossoming,

EASTER JOY

Out of the bonds of yesterday,
Wing, butterflies, your upward way!
Now skies are blue, the world's made new,
We, too, will be glad today.

And as the Earth her shroud of snow from off her breast doth fling,
So may we cast our fetters off in God's eternal Spring;
So may we find release at least from sorrow and from pain;
So may we find our childhood's calm, delicious dawn again.
Sweet are your eyes, O little ones, that look with smiling grace,
Without a shade of doubt or fear into the future's face.
Sing, sing in joyful chorus, with joyful voices tell
That death is life, and God is good, and all things shall be well;
That bitter days shall cease
In warmth and light and peace—
That winter yields to spring—
Sing, little children, sing.

The rose and pearl of the Easter morning was painting the sky when Jan awoke. He stirred uneasily and moistened his parched lips. Immediately a score of demons inside began to crawl and gnaw as they demanded whisky. He made an attempt to rise and discovered that he was tied. Thrashing about, he tried in every way to rid himself of his bonds but Miss Hitty and the hired man had done their work well. They kept out of sight and finally when Jan concluded that he was alone, and that it was no use to rave, he quieted down and lay panting upon his bed. As he lay there, the sun, like a great red ball, burst from a cloud and filled the room with glory.

Tremblingly Jan Thorsen looked about him. His glance fell upon the baby's shoe which Mildred had left in her fright, then upon the broken chair which in his madness he had crashed into bits. Faintly there came to him the remembrance of the day on which he had injured the dearest on earth to him. He had not meant to hurt her, he would not have injured one hair of her dearly loved head. In this, the first sober moment which he had known in weeks, Jan Thorsen remembered jerking his wife from the couch and when she had cried out because he had hurt her back, he recalled that he had thrown her roughly to the floor. Filled with remorse the thought came to him that he would like to take his own life. Just then the sun came pouring through the window and —wonder of wonders—fell upon a lily of snowy whiteness. Jan Thorsen rubbed his bleared eyes wonderingly. The beautiful blossom, emerging from a white covered pot tied with white ribbon, seemed almost human. This was just such a plant as he had given to Mildred on Easter Sunday, seven years ago. He remembered how beautiful she was and how happy. But now because of the saloon their home life was gone and Mildred, a broken woman, had been forced to seek refuge in her father's home. Jan Thorsen bowed his face upon his hands and wept. Suddenly there came to him the sound of church bells chiming:

"Christ, the Lord, is risen today!
Sons of men and angels say;
Raise your voice in triumph high;
Sing, ye heavens and earth reply!"

Yes, this was Easter morning, the anniversary of the resurrection of the King. Oh, if there were pardon for such as he. Jan Thorsen sobbed bitterly, and as his tears of repentance fell, by degrees there came into his heart the comforting knowledge that Christ is ever willing to save men from their sins.

When two months later Jan Thorsen recovered from a serious illness, through which Mildred and a trained nurse had successfully brought him, the W. C. T. U. women cheered and encouraged him, and helped him to regain his feet.

Meantime, after a hot campaign between the liquor men and the forces of prohibition, the latter of which Billy Horney aided in every way in his power, Girard drove out its saloons. On the day that the last one closed its doors, Jan Thorsen and his father-in-law shook hands as they gazed solemnly and silently into each other's eyes.

EASTER SYMBOLS

We found, Easter morning,
In a "truly" nest,
On our breakfast table,
Eggs the very best.

Such a pretty sight!
Red and white and blue,
Green and royal purple,
Some of golden hue.

All were piled together,
But on some we read
The resurrection story,
As we broke our bread.

On that Easter morning,
In its beauty rare,
Goldilock's white lily
Blossomed sweet and fair.

Its fragrance spread around,
Like the living word,
Bidding us rejoice in Christ, our risen Lord.

A LESSON FROM THE CIGARET COMPANIES

The Korean loves a picture. The cigaret companies have seized the opportunity presented, with the result that you can hardly find a Korean room without twenty or more pretty cards pasted on the walls—picture cards of animals, flowers, people, buildings, etc., each with a tiny picture of a package of cigarets in the corner.

We can supplant the cigaret advertisements by wholesome pictures conveying a message from God's Word. Let the cards be earned by attendance at Sunday school, and by that very fact they will be the more valued, given the place of honor, and perhaps even pasted over the cigaret cards.

Those who wish to help the Korea Sunday School Association with left-over Sunday school picture cards or other attractive picture cards should write to Rev. S. D. Price, Supt. Department for Utilizing Surplus Material, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City.

PROHIBITION AND EDUCATION

SUSANNA COCROFT

Whenever the human element enters into a calculation, the result is uncertain.

The human body is a chemical laboratory, yet it is more. If it were simply mechanical, we should know exactly the result of anything put into it. Our knowledge of human chemistry, we admit, is limited. The mental states, influences only half understood and admitted, are vastly important in all the mechanical functioning of the body.

We know alcohol to be a poison in which there is no food element. Tea and coffee are not food, and they contain a heart stimulant and an element which disturbs digestion. Nicotine is admittedly a poison. The various drugs taken first to relieve pain, present, later, a quick road to the penitentiary and the insane asylum.

Why should not all these things—not habit-forming drugs alone—be made the subject of national prohibition? Personally, I think they should. I should like to prohibit, by law, everything that is harmful or detrimental to perfect manhood or womanhood. Not only should I like to abolish drugs, alcohol, nicotine, etc., but I should like to abolish such destroying habits as envy, malice, deceit, fear, worry, anxiety, jealousy, etc., which, while not poisons in themselves, increase blood pressure and incite a chemical activity within the system which does generate most poisonous acids.

We all admit the necessity of improving the race. We want stronger bodies, we want clearer brains, we want more spirituality. How are we going to obtain these things? Education, one band of reformers says; prohibition, says another. I say prohibit not only liquor, but forbid, by law, everything we know to be harmful to the human system.

Those who believe the slow process of education to be the only uplifting influence that will save the race, base their argument on the uncertain element in human nature. Take away alcohol and this unnatural craving will break out somewhere else—a safety valve of some sort is necessary—until human nature, by educational means, is changed. This argument would have a better basis if humanity were all on the same level.

It is simply a question of the quickest means of getting the people to think and begin their education. You can't educate an alcohol and dope-crazed criminal to become a teetotaler. You will have to shut him up first and forcibly prevent the habit that has destroyed his manhood and brought him lower than the beasts. Then he may begin to sanely see his position. Prohibition was necessary to force him to think aright so you could begin to educate him.

Take a successful man of affairs, well fed, well poised, well groomed, in fair physical health on account of the care he gives his body, free from anxiety and perhaps the possessor of inherited wealth; it is difficult to educate him into understanding that his before dinner cocktail, and glass of good vintage wine, is harming him. Take these away from him for a while and this fact will be proven to him by an increased sense of permanent well being and brain efficiency.

Prohibition has been proven to be the best educator. State prohibition has been a success. It has harmed certain interests which are hostile to it, but all state officials, who have experienced it, believe in it, and the diminution of poverty and crime in Kansas since the prohibition law went into effect, tells the story.

Vodka, with the sweep of an autocratic pen, was stamped out of Russia, and the efficiency of the Russian workmen increased forty per cent. Those who have been in Russia since this law passed, say that to repeal it now would lead to a popular uprising. How long would it have taken to educate the Russians as to the wasteful, destroying effect of this strong form of alcohol? It is impossible to guess. Take it away from them and the fact is proven.

The echo of Lloyd George's speech in the House of Commons asking for a similar law in England still rings in our ears: "Alcohol is an enemy more to be feared than German submarines," said the English statesman.

If other European countries follow the example of Russia, the war may be the means of proving that prohibition, not educating popular opinion, is the right way of releasing the people from the bondage of a false and destroying idea of pleasure and well being.

Out of this horrible holocaust may come some great good. Surely, naught but a mighty spiritual awakening, an appreciation of the value of the manhood, of the womanhood of the individual, can mean permanent education. Education means equanimity. It means to know. If temperance can quickest be brought about by prohibition, then all hail the quickest means.

"GO YE FORWARD"

Those who remember the beautiful poem, "Go Ye Forward," dedicated to Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens and printed in the memorial number of THE UNION SIGNAL will be glad to learn that it has been prepared as a wall card or hanger, 7 by 9 inches in size.

By the side of the verses, which are printed in attractive type, appears the latest picture of Mrs. Stevens.

We shall be pleased to fill orders for this card at five cents each; 50 cents per dozen.

The card has been given to the National W. C. T. U. by the author of the poem and all money realized from its sale will be devoted to the Lillian M. N. Stevens Campaign Fund.

EXTINCTION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC DEMANDED BY THE PUBLIC, SAYS SENATOR CUMMINS

In an interview by a representative of the Des Moines (Ia.) Leader, with United States Senator Cummins, upon his return from Washington, he said, "I have been simply flooded with letters and telegrams ever since the last interview was published. I had no idea it would create the impression it has created. The expression of my opinion on prohibition was essentially accurate." When told that his declaration had been most favorably received in Iowa, Senator Cummins said,

"The sentiment is that way all over the country. There is no doubt that all the states are deeply interested and there is a powerful sentiment in favor of exterminating the saloons. There are many opinions as to how the result can best be accomplished, but on the main question of the desirability of prohibition there is no mistaking the great public interest."

POURED INTO THE RIVER BOTTLES AND BARRELS OF BOOZE

MRS. LILA CARLIN MOORE, National Organizer

"A great day in Pine Bluff," is the way it has been put many times. Recently, Chancellor Elliot condemned as contraband nearly $3,000 worth of liquor and ordered it destroyed under direction of the sheriff and the constable. From early morning till late in the afternoon several men were occupied in breaking bottles over an old iron axle placed on two uprights on the river bank. The barrels were rolled to the edge of the river, the heads knocked in, and the whisky poured into the stream. It is estimated that several thousand people visited the scene during the day. While everything was very quiet, we saw many smiling faces as the district president, Mrs. T. Y. Murphy, and your correspondent walked out to the place of "booze" smashing, where we were joined by the local president, Mrs. Sowers. How we three white ribboners rejoiced all the way to the missionary meeting the organizer was to address at three o'clock in the afternoon, and how impossible it was for the speaker to refrain from telling these earnest, Christian women what they, as residents of Pine Bluff, had to be jubilant over. Little more than one year ago as wo white ribboners went to railroad shops, lumber yards, churches, opera houses, and finally to the county judge, praying for the overthrow of the grog shops in Pine Bluff, we did not dare to hope for such immediate results, but "our eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord." It's been a long way to prohibition, but we are surely there.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

The Loyal Temperance Legions of Kent county, Delaware, under the leadership of Mrs. Ella D. Cordray, county superintendent, have been doing good work so far this year. The Lebanon-Rising Sun L. T. L., under the direction of Mrs. Allie Moore, has had great success in the presentation of "The Sick Baby," which added $9 to the treasury. The Magnolia L. T. L. is awake and very active. Harrington L. T. L. gave an entertainment on March 12 under the direction of the superintendent, Mrs. Lucy Jones. The Harrington Y. P. B. has recently contributed $5 each to the Ferris School for Boys and the Girls' Industrial School.

Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National organizer and lecturer, and vice-president-at-large of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., has been speaking in Lehigh county for one week. Churches of various denominations, United Brethren in Christ, Evangelical and Reformed, opened wide their doors for these lectures. Good audiences everywhere greeted the speaker and many responded to her eloquent appeals with contributions of money or membership in the W. C. T. U., 170 men joining the various unions of Lehigh county. The entire expense of the campaign was met and a nice balance remains in the county treasury.

Three employes of the Pabst Brewing company were recently arrested on complaint of Mrs. C. E. Pauline, president of the Lakewood (Ohio) union. In February free samples of beer were distributed in Lakewood, a dry suburb of Cleveland. Later by telephone Mrs. Pauline was asked for an order for beer which she promptly gave. After the beer had been delivered she brought against the men the triple charge of soliciting, giving out free samples of beer and selling in dry territory. The case is being watched with great interest as it is the first of its kind under the Beal law.

Members of the Woman's Council of St. Louis, Mo., recently were participants in and spectators of a unique entertainment, "An Afternoon in the Art Gallery," on the program of which appeared the names of various W. C. T. U.'s and other organizations of women, upwards of twenty in number and differing widely in purpose. The living pictures exhibited were presented by the different organizations. When the material for the program was all in hand by unanimous agreement of the committee in charge the place of honor at the beginning of the program was accorded to the contribution of the Carondelet W. C. T. U.—Frances E. Willard—and very beautiful and lifelike was the picture presented by the white ribboners. "The Policewoman," by members of the Centenary union, a picture showing a plainly dressed woman with the star of her office upon her breast, and a young unsophisticated girl, coat upon her arm and traveling bag in hand, was said to have been the most interesting picture of the afternoon, testifying to the interest of St. Louis women in the question of policewomen and the bill recently passed by the Missouri legislature providing for them.

Four other pictures by white ribboners were, "The Guardian," by the Lafayette W. C. T. U., "The Handwriting on the Wall," Clifton Heights W. C. T. U., "The Eighteen States for Prohibition," West End W. C. T. U. and young ladies of Forest Park University, and "Protection of Home," Central Union.

Among the patronesses of the Woman's Council are women prominent in St. Louis white ribbon circles, Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, National superintendent of the department of Anti-Narcotics and president of the St. Louis district federation, Miss Fannie D. Robb, corresponding secretary of the district and president of Central union, Mrs. Mona Haynes, president of Carondelet union; Mrs. E. A. P. Hayes, president of the Centenary union; Miss Mary Harrington, president of Lafayette union; Mrs. F. E. Moser, president of West End union, and Mrs. Mary Birkright, president of Clifton Heights union.

UNION SIGNAL day was celebrated in fitting manner by the Macon (Ga.) W. C. T. U., Mrs. B. B. Renitz, newly appointed UNION SIGNAL superintendent, being in charge of the program. The life and work of Lillian M. N. Stevens as it was presented by Mrs. Renitz, was the chief subject of the program. There was time, however, for a jubilee over the eighteen white states, and songs, "It's a Short Way to Prohibition," and prohibition words to the tune "I Love the U. S. A.," both given by a six-year-old singer, Freeman Hart Warlick. An interesting announcement by the treasurer, Mrs. G. P. Gostin, was made at the business session to the effect that never before in the history of the union had so large a membership paid dues so early in the year, nor so many new members been received.

Clinton county, Ohio, held an interesting and inspiring institute at Wilmington, the county seat, with Mrs. Viola D. Romans, National and state lecturer and corresponding secretary of the state W. C. T. U., as leader. Mrs. Romans is a speaker of ability and her services at the institute were thoroughly enjoyed. Two state superintendents, who live in the county were present, in addition to many earnest local workers.

Mrs. Ada Wallace Unruh, National organizer and lecturer, recently spoke with success in Havre, Montana, a city which has previously been indifferent to every phase of the temperance question. Last year at a similar meeting addressed by Mrs. Unruh but sixteen people attended. Upon the recent occasion the fine auditorium in the high school was crowded. Twenty-one new members were secured for the union and an offering of $117 was received for campaign work, which has begun in dead earnest in Montana.

THE WIVES' HEADQUARTERS

An incident typifying the trend of the times occurred in an Edmonton, Canada, restaurant the other day. Six gentlemen walked in together for lunch. As they ate they chatted. Among other topics, the question of prohibition arose. Said one of the company, "Well, my wife trotted out a new phase of this question the other day. 'Jack', said she, 'there are to be no more purchases for this house from any merchant who is interested in the manufacture or sale of liquor.'" To the surprise of each, five out of the six declared that a much similar prohibition order had been issued from "headquarters" in their homes also.—The Search Light.

One thousand employes of the Bessemer and Lake Erie Railroad, a subsidiary of the United States Steel Corporation, have banded themselves together in an organization to be known as the "Bessemer and Lake Erie Water Wagon Club." Similar movements are said to be under way among other railroad employes.

VIRGINIA VITALITIES

Special Correspondence

Mrs. Hortense S. Ropp has just closed a successful two weeks' tour of the eastern shore, that garden spot of temperance where the finest and mealiest of potatoes and the cleanest and "dry-est" of state senators are grown. Mrs. Ropp won many new members, and spread the good news of a friendly legislature.

Mrs. Amy C. Weech is afield in Sussex county. Mrs. Lilian A. Shepherd and Mrs. Helen H. Green gave two entertainments in Isle of Wight county recently, Mrs. Shepherd giving her stereopticon lecture, "Miss Willard's Trip Abroad," and Mrs. Green speaking on "Is the W. C. T. U. a Dead Issue Now?"

Mrs. Howard M. Hoge has held two successful county institutes, one in Hampton, Elizabeth City county, and the other in Portsmouth, Norfolk county. Seven of the state workers, besides the state president, were in attendance at the latter, on the way to attend W. C. T. U. day at the state Anti-Saloon League convention. One of the finest meetings ever taking place in Norfolk was that held by the state W. C. T. U. in Cumberland Street Methodist church during the convention.

The thought germ of the program of the meeting was, "How We Will Conserve Our Victory." The state president, Mrs. Hoge, presided with her usual skill and charm of manner. The state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Lilian A. Shepherd, gave a short, spicy talk on "The Use of Posters" and displayed many samples. Mrs. J. C. Kelley gave an excellent address on "How Can the Children Help?" An earnest speaker and an able woman, Mrs. Kelley made a splendid plea for the children's future. Following her address one hundred Norfolk county children, trained by the county president, Mrs. Hugh Simpkins, and others, marched in and sang "Prohibition in 1920." Many of the children were in Young Campaigners' regalia and all had delightful voices. They captured the audience and when they marched out singing, "It's Been a Long Way to Prohibition," the applause was most enthusiastic.

Mrs. Helen H. Green spoke on "The Power of the Press" and expressed a belief that county papers should be used as never before to keep the fact before the country people that our fight for prohibition has only just begun. Mrs. Amy C. Weech and Mrs. Hortense Ropp, two of our organizers, made splendid addresses relative to the campaign and the future of prohibition. Both addresses were enthusiastically received. Mrs. Ella A. Boole, vice-president-at-large of the National W. C. T. U., was introduced and spoke briefly, but long enough to win her audience. At night Mrs. Boole shared the time with Major Dan Morgan Smith, ex-counsel for the Model License League. Mrs. Boole's address was a strong array of facts, interestingly stated. As our women said of it, "Every sentence was a step in advance. She never slipped back once or took the same step twice. It was a sort of triumphal march from one excellent thought, or point, to another, and not a word or a second of time was wasted."

Mrs. Hoge closed the program of the afternoon with a short talk that was much appreciated.

WHICH WILL YOU PROTECT?

One family out of every five must Furnish a Boy for the army of drunkards or the "trade" must go under.

Are You Willing to contribute a boy? You have no right to say your neighbor shall contribute his boy.

Why not Pay Your Taxes with money instead of with your own and your neighbor's boys?

A young man drunk is somebody's vote staggering around. Is It Yours?

Two-thirds of all the drunkards contract the drinking habit before they are 21 years old; nearly one-third before they are 16; and about 7 per cent. Before They Are Twelve.

DO YOU KNOW THESE FACTS?

The Liquor Traffic and the Farmer

If all the distilleries and breweries were closed the farmers' market for corn would not be affected. The liquor traffic uses less than two and one-half per cent of the five leading grain crops of the land.

For every bushel of grain used by the breweries and distilleries more than forty-four and three-fifths bushels are used for legitimate purposes.

The Liquor Traffic and the Workingman

The liquor traffic pays to wage earners in the manufacture of liquor less than 46 million dollars annually.

But 75 times as much is paid to wage earners by the total number of manufacturers.

It is better, therefore, that one saloonkeeper should lose his job than that 74 of his patrons should lose their jobs.

The Liquor Traffic and the Capitalist

Capital invested in the liquor traffic decreases the aggregate wealth and increases taxation.

The same capital used in productive industries would add to the general prosperity and reduce the public burdens.

The Liquor Traffic and the Capitalist

The total amount of revenue received from the liquor traffic, including duties on imports, is less than 350 million dollars annually.

The cost of the traffic to the nation is more than 5,000 million dollars, or over 14 dollars for every revenue dollar received.

The Liquor Traffic and Your Boy

The raw material of the saloon is the boy.

Its finished product is the drunkard.

Many of our shrewdest business men do not see the absurdity of continuing the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor for the sake of revenue. A sum twenty times as large would not equal the total economic waste to the nation.—Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas.

Great Britain May Become Prohibition Nation

KING GEORGE AND CABINET MINISTERS VOLUNTEER TO BECOME ABSTAINERS—HON. LLOYD GEORGE AND LORD KITCHENER FAVOR TOTAL PROHIBITION

"We are fighting Germany, Austria and drink, and as far as I can see, the greatest of these three deadly foes is drink," Hon. Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain, is reported to have said to a deputation of the Shipbuilding Employers' Federation, which came to him with an appeal for prohibition of the liquor traffic. Mr. Lloyd George is said to have promised to bring before the British Cabinet an urgent plea for prohibition until the close of the war.

The reports appearing in the papers of the United States as coming from London correspondents are in substance as follows:

It was stated by the deputation that although work was being carried on night and day seven days a week, the total working time on the average in nearly all British ship yards was actually less than before the war, and the average productiveness had decreased. Many men were doing strenuous work, probably as good as the men in the trenches, but many did not even approximate full time.

Notwithstanding curtailment of hours they were allowed to keep open, the public houses in the neighborhood of the ship yards had greatly increased receipts—in some cases forty per cent. As an instance of one of many cases, that of a battleship coming in for immediate repairs was cited. She was delayed a whole day through the absence of riveters, who were drinking and carousing. In one yard the riveters had been working on the average only forty hours a week, and in another yard only thirty-six hours.

The deputation, which included representatives of the leading shipbuilders of the country, drew attention to the example set by France and Russia and urged on the chancellor the need of drastic action.

"I have a growing conviction, based on accumulating evidence," said the chancellor, "that nothing but root and branch methods would be of the slightest avail in dealing with the evil. I believe it is the general feeling that if we are to settle German militarism we must first of all settle with drink."

King George Volunteers to Become Abstainer

A later report from London gives the text of a letter from the private secretary of King George to the chancellor, volunteering to personally give up all use of alcoholic liquors and to issue an order against their use in the royal household, and adds his plea to that of the ship-owners and in some cases the laborites, that vigorous measures be adopted to cope with the drink evil. The letter of King George's secretary is as follows:

"Dear Chancellor of the Exchequer:

"The king thanks you for so promptly letting him have a full report of the proceedings at yesterday's meeting of the deputation of employers. His majesty has read it with intense interest, but also with the deepest concern. He feels that nothing but the most vigorous measures will successfully cope with the grave situation now existing in our armament factories.

Drink Delays War Work

"We have before us the statements not merely of the employers but of the admiralty and the war office, which are responsible for munitions of war and for the transport of troops and their food and ammunition. From this evidence it is without doubt largely due to drink that we are unable to secure the output of war material indispensable to meet the requirements of the army in the field, and that there has been such serious delay, in consequence, of the necessary reenforcements of supplies to aid our gallant troops at the front.

Chancellor Lloyd George

> "I have a growing conviction, based on accumulating evidence, that nothing but root and branch methods would be of the slightest avail in dealing with the evil."

"A continuance of such a state of things must inevitably result in the prolongation of the horrors and burdens of this terrible war.

King Offers to Quit Drink

"I am instructed to add that, if it be deemed advisable, the king will be prepared to set an example by giving up all alcoholic liquor himself and by issuing orders against its consumption in the royal household so that no difference shall be made, so far as his majesty is concerned, between the treatment of the rich and the poor in this question.

"LORD STAMFORDHAM,
"The King's Private Secretary"

The king's abstemious example is being rapidly followed, for, in addition to Earl Kitchener, all the cabinet ministers in London have announced to Chancellor Lloyd George, according to the London Daily Mail, their intention to follow the king's pledge to abstain from alcoholic liquors during the war, if it is thought necessary.

Among other prominent men who will do likewise are Earl Brassey, Baron Cowdray, Baron Sydenham, Sir Charles W. Macara, chairman of the committee of the international federation of master cotton spinners and manufacturers' associations, and the heads of many of the big manufacturing firms.

Papers Print Pledges

Several of the London morning papers appeared with full page advertisements presenting petitions with the request that supporters of the movement cut them out and send them to Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George. These petitions read:

"I am entirely in favor of the suspension of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors during the war, which I consider imperative for a quick and successful termination of the war. I shall heartily support the government in any such measure."

Thousands of Londoners have voluntarily pledged themselves not to drink any intoxicating liquors while the war continues.

A large number of the ship yard workers on the Clyde decided to do without their customary drinks, and the public houses, usually crowded at the hours the men shift work, were almost empty, while the teashops did a thriving business.

The only persons who appear opposed to the temperance move are the Allied Brewers and the National Union of Brewery Workers, but it is not believed their influence is sufficient to sway the government in the event it decides on prohibition.

The majority of the newspapers of Great Britain are said to express the belief that total prohibition to apply to all classes is the only way to deal with the situation, and if Mr. Lloyd George and Lord Kitchener have their way it is believed there will be total prohibition.

VICTORY FOR PROHIBITION IN MICHIGAN

Fourteen Out of Sixteen Counties Vot Out Saloons—Popular Summer Resort Region Affected

As we go to press, Tuesday, April incomplete returns indicate that Mic igan has taken a long step toward stat wide prohibition. At the elections he Monday, April 5, in sixteen countie fourteen voted out the saloons. Tl counties are as follows: Alger, Berrie Calhoun, Eaton, Emmet, Genesee, Irc Kalamazoo, Lapeer, Lenawee, Masc Oakland, Sanilac and Tuscola.

Berrien county, the summer resort gion of the state, which includes Bent Harbor and St. Joseph and other popu resorts frequented by Chicagoans, o lawed the saloons for the first time its history. In this county alone th are said to be sixty retail and sev wholesale liquor establishments, rep senting an investment of more than $5 000. It is estimated that this vict means the closing on May 1, 1915, of t least 265 saloons throughout the st

The victory in Berrien county, many years a liquor stronghold, is s by temperance workers to be a sig cant indication of the pronounced cha of sentiment in the state.

A DREAM REALIZED

W. C. T. U. EXHIBIT AT PANAMA-PACIFIC EXPOSITION

FRANCES P. PARKS, Chairman Exhibit Committee

A current magazine article refers to the Fair City just inside the famous Golden Gate as "a city of realized dreams." It is a remarkable demonstration of the courage and self-confidence of a people who less than a half-decade ago were mourning their ruined homes and business marts.

"In that black, deserted zone,
They built a city, stone on stone,
A city that, in history's page,
Is crowned the marvel of the age."

They have also successfully carried out a project involving great effort and expenditure, illustrating vast activities and expressing high ideals, and in response to their invitation the world is flocking to San Francisco to join in the celebration of the opening of the Panama canal, a dream of four centuries realized.

In an advantageous location in one of the great exposition buildings, the Palace of Education, is to be found what may well be called a dream realized—the exhibit installed by the World's and National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It is not a large exhibit, but viewed from an educational standpoint, ranks easily with any in the building. The booth is one of a section of eight built on a uniform plan, which secures harmony in the general effect. The color scheme is old ivory and delft blue. Palms, vines and cut flowers add to the artistic appearance of the booth.

The Polyglot Petition

The famous petition originated by Frances E. Willard and addressed to the governments of the world, asking them to do away with the manufacture of and traffic in alcoholic liquors and the legalization of impurity, is the heart of both the exhibit and the booth. On either side of the polyglot petition the story of the advance of the temperance movement from the days of the Woman's Crusade is effectively told by picture, poster and chart.

Another interesting feature of the exhibit is the Japanese bell made of more than a thousand tobacco pipes, given to Mary Allen West in her last journeyings by men who had stopped smoking. This will be remembered by white ribboners who visited the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago.

The wall display consists in the main of cards containing reading matter especially prepared for the purpose, mounted on panels of delft blue in frames of ivory white. Pictures of some of these panels are reproduced on this page and page 5, but it is, of course, impossible to give the color effect.

The comparative expenditure of money in the United States—the annual drink bill topping the list with an amount equivalent to the cost of building six Panama canals—is the subject of one of the panels illustrated. A hogshead having a sixty-four gallon capacity and a tiny keg, placed side by side, illustrate the per capita consumption of alcoholic liquor in non-prohibition Wisconsin and prohibition Kansas.

Other panels have for subjects Alcohol and Mental Efficiency, Alcohol and Physical Efficiency, Alcohol and Financial Efficiency, Big Business and the Drink Evil, Prohibition and Prosperity, Prohibition States. Two panels contain information concerning the World's and National W. C. T. U., giving the different departments of work, names of officers, etc. Four panels are devoted to facts relating to proprietary medicines and habit-forming drugs. A synopsis of the Harrison Anti-drug Law, which became effective March 1, appears on one of the cards. On the last panel in this group is a bottle 11½ inches high, made to represent a patent medicine cure. Inside the bottle is a light which winks on and off. Whenever the light is on a skull and cross bones shows through Dr. Fako's benign face and Popular Sentiment Favors Prohibition In Russia

COUNSELOR OF RUSSIAN EMBASSY AT WASHINGTON TELLS OF BENEFITS OF IMPERIAL EDICT

The National Liquor Dealers' Association of America has been claiming, through the liquor press, that prohibition has not been enforced in all the cities and towns of the Russian Empire; that drinks may be obtained in the Moscow restaurants; that the sale of vodka has not been prohibited for all time, and that Russian breweries will reopen in the spring.

These statements, based on a letter received from John H. Snodgrass, American consul-general at Moscow, are refuted by A. Scherbatskoy, counselor of the Russian embassy at Washington. In an interview with the Washington correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor, reported in that paper, Mr. Scherbatskoy said that he had information to the effect that absolute prohibition is enforced in almost all the cities and in all towns and that it is real prohibition; that drinks cannot be secured in restaurants; and that the breweries will not reopen in the spring. Mr. Snodgrass' letter says that the sale of intoxicants is forbidden in ninety per cent of all cities and towns in Russia. The embassy does not deny that there is some illegal traffic in liquor, but what there is is under cover in violation of the law and not in the open.

"Russia has been prepared for this prohibition edict for some time," said Mr. Scherbatskoy. "The government has gained rapidly in recent years and the government has received many petitions for perpetual prohibition. A deputation headed by Grand Duke Constantine and members of the Duma visited the Czar and were promised by him that the government never again would engage in the sale of liquor.

Press Favors It

"A drastic prohibition act was passed by the Duma, but it was greatly weakened in the upper house, the council of the empire. The Russian press is for prohibition and expressed indignation when the upper house marred the measure. There is strong sentiment everywhere in Russia for absolute prohibition not only of vodka and strong wines but also of light wines and beer. Prohibition now is only an emergency measure imposed by the crown, lasting to the end of the war, but it is almost certain to become a law after the war because of the strong public sentiment and the support of the Czar.

> If the nation can be rich only by the poverty of my people, then I should prefer that the nation should be poor.
>
> —The Czar of Russia

"Prohibition is increasing the producing power of our people," continued Mr. Scherbatskoy. "They are spending their money for other things than liquor now, wearing better clothes and taking better care of their families. One interesting thing is that Monday, which heretofore has been regarded as a holiday on which the men recuperated from their Sunday indulgences, will now be a productive working day. Monday has not been regarded as a working day in Russia; it has just been counted out of the week for this reason.

Savings Are Increased

"The postal savings banks show encouraging indications as a result of prohibition. In war time people usually draw their savings out of the banks, and at the beginning of the present war our postal banks showed a slight decrease, but soon after the prohibition edict the savings began to return to the banks and there has been a marked increase over previous years.

"One incident serves to illustrate the effect on other industries of prohibiting the sale of liquor. Early in the war when there was a scare that the Germans were about to advance on Petrograd from the north through Finland there was a frenzied haste to throw up fortifications in the vicinity of the capital. Large crews of men were employed on the earthworks at good pay. One group of men, having accumulated a little money, thought they would go down to Petrograd for a week-end celebration. They were told that they could not get a drop of liquor, but they said they would try. They went to the city and tried, but could get no liquor, and the next day they returned to their work, every man of them wearing a new suit of clothes.

"A friend of mine recently came here from Russia. He is a man who drank wine, but he told me one could not get a drink of liquor in the Petrograd or Moscow cafes 'for love or money,' as he expressed it.

People Are For It

"These instances could be repeated indefinitely. They go to show that prohibition is a fact in Russia and that it is beneficial beyond expectations. There is not the slightest doubt that there is tremendous popular sentiment for it and we expect that sentiment will be reflected in a permanent law when the war is over. No doubt there are many brewers who would like to have 'the breweries open up in the spring,' and they will try to bring it about, but they are not likely to succeed. In fact, preparations are being made by the liquor industry to adapt itself to the new conditions. The government is co-operating with brewers and distillers and grain raisers to find new commercial uses for the wheat, rye, corn, barley, malt and hops that formerly went into the manufacture of liquors. We think prohibition has come to Russia to stay."

W. C. T. U. EXHIBITS

CAROLYN P. LINDSAY, National Superintendent Fairs and Open Air Meetings

"A simple fact is worth a shipload of arguments."

An exhibit is a visual display of achievement, a demonstration of success attained after earnest effort. It is the latest method used to illustrate progress and to attract attention. Such being the idea, the questions are: Why do we have it? When do we have it? Where do we have it? Who prepares it? What does it cost? What do we exhibit? All these questions are asked in the same breath by the enthusiastic white ribboner who sees far enough ahead to know that an exhibit will be a great benefit to the cause of temperance and who just longs to get at the job.

Why? First, because we are up-to-date. Second, because it is a fine advertisement. Third, because our organization is recognized all over the world and we are asked to exhibit. Fourth, because it stimulates temperance activity and creates interest among non-temperance people. Fifth, because it is educative and instructive.

When? Whenever there is opportunity —making opportunity if necessary. When your work needs an impetus; when you have achieved great things that the world should know; when your efforts may enthuse others to do the same; when you have something worth while to show.

Where? At the convention; at the institute, the fair, club rooms, rest rooms, factories; at civic and industrial gatherings, schools, amusement parks, steamers; at religious, patriotic and educational gatherings, hotel lobbies, railroad stations; any place where you can get space and attract attention.

Who? It is usually a compilation of many ideas suggested by as many people, but it takes one or two very capable persons to get an exhibit into shape where the practical, the logical, the beautiful and the permanent ideas may take proper form, or be assembled. In these days of specialists there are persons or firms that do this from data given them. A color scheme is adopted and portable frames covered with art burlap make the walls. Uniform size and framing of statistical or illustrated charts, good lighting and a water supply are included in the up-to-date exhibit, and dignity characterizes the whole thing.

The cost? That depends upon your ambition and the size of your purse, for it is possible to make little or much display. Both time and strength are needed and sometimes these come high to the overburdened woman, when it really costs less to rent an exhibit already prepared.

What to exhibit? Up-to-date photographs of large size, transparencies, cartoons, charts, posters, diagrams, banners, models, literature, maps, in fact everything that will convince.

For those who plan an exhibition there are many things to be considered if good results are to be obtained. Is it to be temporary or permanent? Is it to be a large exhibit or a small one? Is it to be a traveling exhibit? Permanent exhibits are desirable; traveling exhibits probably reach more people; but any kind of exhibit other than temporary should be designed with thought of where it is to be installed. Surroundings and space are to be considered, and who shall handle and install it. Simplicity and strength of construction are essential; uniformity in size and framing of charts, cards, posters, etc.; clear, plain lettering of terse sentences, harmony of color scheme, and a good floor plan that will prevent confusion in case of crowds.

New York state W. C. T. U. had a booth recently at the "Made in America" exhibit in New York city. It was planned largely by the women and built up by a specialist. It is permanent and portable and can be rented upon request. The frames are inch iron tubing that screw together into place any size desired. They are covered with brown denim. Photographs of this exhibit may be obtained from W. C. T. U. headquarters.

If you propose having an expert prepare your exhibit, be sure to give him all the data and a general idea of your needs; he will do the rest. If you desire to prepare your own exhibit, note some above the word "guaranteed" on the label stands out the word "poison." At the left of the bottle are these words, "Watch this bottle and see what is really behind the label of most patent medicines." Illuminated maps give facts in regard to certain states which have taken advance steps.

Dividends of the Liquor Traffic

Another clever electrical device is the beer barrel model, illustrated on the cover page. This consists of the front of a full sized beer barrel with five spigots from which flow endless ribbons marked, Crime, Poverty, Insanity, Inefficiency and Disease, the dividends of the liquor traffic.

The Scientific Side

For the thoughtful visitor interested in the scientific and economic phases of the alcohol problem, time spent in study of the cabinet shown on page 3, will be well invested. A sign at the top of the case reads: "Alcoholic beverages. Principal kinds of alcoholic beverages with average amount of alcohol usually found in each arranged in order of danger, the most poisonous last." Each bottle is labeled with skull and cross bones. The absinthe bottle has a card attached reading, "Banished by France, 1915," and another card around the neck of the vodka bottle, "Banished by Russia, 1914." Over the middle section of the case appears this sign: "What a dime will buy measured in food values. The height of each red rod represents the relative food value of ten cents worth of that food measured in calories. The taller the rod the greater the food value." The same measure is applied to common liquors rich in alcohol and the attached card reads, "Alcohol attacks the organs of the body and hinders proper assimilation of food." In still another section is a group of temperance beverages all of which are free from alcohol. A feature of this group shows how soda water may be made at home from fruit syrups and carbonated water.

Book Exhibit

The book exhibit includes publications issued by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, standard works of reference on the scientific, economic and social phases of the alcohol problem and books on physiology and hygiene which have been approved for use in colleges and schools by the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation.

Current issues of THE UNION SIGNAL, The Young Crusader, The Temperance Educational Quarterly and the state W. C. T. U. papers are kept on file for the convenience of visitors.

There is also an exhibit of prize Scientific Temperance Instruction essays and signed Scientific Temperance Instruction pledge cards. On winged frames are displayed charts: One represents that fearful indictment against our western civilization—the grave of the native of South Africa covered with bottles and demijohns, the contents of which he had consumed during his life; another, the map of Africa with its "one long barroom" on the west coast; others are of special interest to missionary workers. There are also small posters giving valuable facts and statistics and postcards of many designs.

It was found impracticable to have a symbolic frieze, as originally planned by the committee. The space above the panels reserved for the frieze has been used for framed pictures of W. C. T. U. leaders, the latest prohibition map, the prohibition proclamation and an artistic drawing of the ribbon-bound hemispheres.

Miss Mary E. Brown of Seattle, Washington, is in charge of the W. C. T. U. booth and she will be ably assisted throughout the exposition period of ten months by volunteer guides, members of San Francisco and Alameda county unions.

Through the hearty co-operation of the Northern California Woman's Christian Temperance Union there has been extended to us the use of its state headquarters in the Methodist Book Concern Building as a meeting place and rest room for all white ribboners and friends. Just what this privilege will mean to strangers in a city noted for its oddly arranged streets will be better understood when it is known that the Methodist Book Concern Building is in the heart of the city, close to all hotels, ten minutes walk from the exposition grounds, and within a stone's throw of the wonderful Civic Center of San Francisco, one of the beautiful permanent buildings erected by the Exposition Company. From the Ferries take car No. 5, on McAllister street. From Third and Townsend street station, take Third street car, transferring at Market street to McAllister No. 5. This car stops in front of No. 3 City Hall avenue. The latch-string hangs out at rooms 420-422.

Miss Brown writes that even while the exhibit was being installed, it attracted much attention. Men and women stopped to ask questions and to take notes, often sitting down for a careful study of the scientific facts shown on panels and tablets.

The exhibit arrests attention, provokes serious thinking and cannot fail to convince observers of the necessity of total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the nation.

GENERAL VILLA DECLARES HE WILL MAKE MEXICO DRY

"Mexico will be without liquor when peace comes, if it is in my power," General Villa is reported to have said in an interview with Floyd P. Gibbons, war correspondent of The Chicago Tribune, published in that paper.

"Mexico is suffering from it now," continued the man who has been called the "George Washington of Mexico." "It is not only the effect of the stuff upon those who drink it but the effect upon those who are to come. Most of the epilepsy is caused by drunkenness. The children are the sufferers and, as usual, the poor suffer the most from it.

"The president of a people might not be a drinker himself, but so long as he permits his people to play with poison he is showing himself a weakling. I will not permit it among my officers. It makes them less efficient.

"When our troops reach a town I order all of the saloons closed. Some of my men have been shot for drunkenness and some saloon-keepers have been executed for selling it to the soldiers. Now the penalty is a heavy fine."

W. C. T. U. EXHIBIT

things to avoid: Repetition of subject matter, too much data, small print or lettering. The average observer is anxious to pass on, and, as a rule, only sees the striking thing.

A practical word relative to actual construction: Portable iron tubing framework is best; these can be rented. Double burlap of a gray, brown or ecru shade makes fine walls. Height of walls eight feet. Beaver board is also used on a wooden frame for walls.

Illustration cardboard or bristol board 22x28 is a good size for charts, posters, diagrams, photos, etc. An inch or inch and one-half moulding is good for frames. Use color wherever possible. Literature should be pasted attractively (upper edge only) on long panels of colored cardboard, to harmonize with the wall coloring. Banners are made of a special white oilcloth. Holland shades will accept some kinds of paint other than oil.

If there is space, a few stately palms and a hygienic water bottle and stand (with W. C. T. U. drinking cups) would add greatly to the general beauty of the exhibit. Models, mechanical or moving devices showing comparisons are very striking, but rather expensive. It must be remembered that a really good thing must of necessity cost considerable, but a good exhibit is invaluable for creating temperance sentiment, and there never was a time when it is more needed.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

"It is glorious to man a Lifeboat, but better to build a Lighthouse"

MRS. ROSS HAYES SCHACHNER, National General Secretary Young People's Branch, Evanston, Ill.

THE WORLD YOUR FIELD

ROSS HAYES SCHACHNER

In preparation for the month of May, when the Y. P. B. programs will be devoted to our World's work, and also in recognition of the Y. P. B. Red Letter Day, the birthday of the first National and World's "Y" secretary, it seemed fitting that this particular Y. P. B. issue should be a "World Number." Surely, while we are busy campaigning for new members and for National Constitutional Prohibition, we will not forget that ours is a world union, and that we wage our peaceful warfare not alone for "God and Home and Native Land," but for "God and Home and Every Land." It should likewise lend great strength and encouragement to the young men and young women here in America to know that wherever the gospel of temperance has been carried, in one way or another, young people have been enlisted and are serving under the white flag of total abstinence.

A great missionary advocate upon a certain occasion when a brother minister made the statement that his church did not "think much of missions," exclaimed, "My brother, it makes no difference what your church thinks of missions, but what does God think of missions?" We well know what God thinks of missions, for was not the burning message which he sent his son Jesus to deliver to the world, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel unto every creature." Have you as a Branch in any way helped to send the temperance gospel into all the world and unto every creature? If you have heretofore been inclined to not "think much" of your foreign brothers and sisters (many of whom are less fortunate than you) ask yourself what God thinks of them.

The efforts for this month will not be all they should be unless, added to the harvest of new members and the education through public meetings, there is a goodly contribution to our Y. P. B. Missionary Fund and a study of our World's Work.

I am already feeling that when the record of this year's work is compiled April will stand out gloriously because of the special effort put forth during its thirty days. I give you this last message for the month, "There is only one way by which we can reach our goal and that is to GET UP AND GO." Are you up and going in the interest of the Y. P. B.?

THE WORLDWIDE VISION

AMY A. SWANKIE-CAMERON, World's "Y" Secretary

DEAR YOUNG WHITE RIBBONERS OF THE UNITED STATES:

It is with keen pleasure that I respond to the kind invitation of your general secretary to send a message for the World's Y. P. B. number of THE UNION SIGNAL. And first may I say how pleased I am that there should be a "World's" number for the young people. This is most fitting: Young people's minds are always elastic and the wide vision is especially the vision for youth. The more you embrace the thought of the whole world in your work the more deeply interesting will grow your own little corner of that world, and the more keen your desire to make it by your effort worthy the great whole. It is such a gloriously inspiring thought that whether in the bush in Australia or on the lonely veldt in South Africa, in the great Northwest of Canada or down in the Southern Pacific or up within the Polar Circle, whether in what we call the homelands or within the war zone, there are women and men, like ourselves, younger and older, wearing our precious badge and doing our blessed work. Does not that realization thrill you and make you proud to belong to this great, world-wide organization? To remember all these splendid women and men who have worked and are working in this World Union of ours, is indeed an inspiration.

I am especially glad that you have adopted April 14 as a red-letter day in your work, and connected it with the World's W. C. T. U. Frances Barnes gave herself to the young women of the World's white ribbon army with a wholehearted zeal that should and does command all our gratitude, and it is good to feel that by increased effort for the world-wide work she so loves we can still show her how we appreciate all she has done.

When we think of the great founder of the World's W. C. T. U. and how Frances Willard cared so especially for the young and by her wonderful influence drew them into the work, we can but resolve with all our hearts to strive to be worthy followers of such leaders.

So I beg you to work even more earnestly and enthusiastically than you have done, to increase your membership among the young women and men of America, and to deepen your interest in our international work, as well as your own splendid work for National Prohibition, to educate and train yourselves as fine, all-round temperance workers, realizing that on you, as on your comrades in other lands, rests the great responsibility of the white ribbon societies of the future.

Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, First World's and National "Y" Secretary

WAS IT A PROPHECY?

FRANCES J. BARNES

Many of the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL will recall the mission to Washington of a number of white ribboners headed by our valiant president, Frances E. Willard, to present the beautiful portrait of Mrs. Rutherford B. Hayes, painted by Huntington and paid for by the contributions of loyal temperance men and women in every state. It was given to the White House at the time of President Garfield's inauguration.

We were hospitably entertained at Hotel La Fetra and mass meetings and a hearing were arranged by our hostess and members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the District of Columbia. Every one seemed interested, and most of all in the courteous reception given by President and Mrs. Garfield to our president and "her cabinet," as they called us. We listened to the presentation and the response almost breathlessly. So finely couched was Miss Willard's wish that the social policy the former occupants had inaugurated might be maintained at the White House that we thought it could not be denied. Nor was it in the acceptance, though no positive promise was given. We were introduced to the President's mother one of the old-fashioned Christian mothers of our land, and I remember she said, "James is a good man. I know he'll do what is right." Alas! he never lived to the testing time of the following season. As we left the White House with something of a vague expectancy one of our party said, "To your tents O Israel!" With our minds strongly impressed with our mission, it was no strange that we should "dream dreams," and when we gathered in the parlor of the hotel the next morning for conference and prayer I made bold to confess the vivid dream that had visited my pillow. It was this: Instead of gathering in the White House we had gone to the Capitol and were assembled in the rotunda. On looking up the dome was filled with a dense black cloud and we could not see the blue nor the gilding. As we gazed and wondered a rift came all across the dome and the sunlight

WORLDWIDE FIGHT AGAINST ALCOHOL

PRIZE PROGRAM

We are substituting for the regular April program, which appears in the Year Book, the following program arranged by Mrs. Fannie R. Danser, promoter of our Y. P. B. Missionary Fund, and which won the $25 prize offered by Mrs. Koehne, of California, for the best temperance program for a public meeting. It is especially suitable as a "World" program.

"THE WORLDWIDE FIGHT AGAINST ALCOHOL."

Singing—"Christ for the World we Sing."

Responsive Reading.

Prayer—By the leader, followed by sentence prayers by members for God's guidance in the problems confronting our state, nation, and the world.

Singing—"The Time is Now," or "The Fight is On."

Reading—"Temperance and Missions."

A Quiz—"The National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment." (Answers to be given in participants' own words.)

Debate—"Resolved, that National Prohibition is Necessary to the Life of a Nation." (By four members.) (For material use Y. P. B. Study books.)

Singing—"A Saloonless Nation in 1920" (first two verses).

Glimpses—"The Worldwide Fight against Alcohol." (Use extracts from the report of the ninth convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

Exercise—"Our Prohibition States." Facts to be given in members' own words concerning our prohibition states as found in leaflet, "Prohibition's Onward March," to be in order as follows: Maine, Kansas, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Georgia, North Carolina, Mississippi, Tennessee, West Virginia, Virginia, Colorado, Oregon, Washington, Arizona, Alabama, Arkansas, Iowa, Idaho.

Recitation—"The Children of Today Make the Nation of Tomorrow," in Medal Contest book No. 10, or "A Worldwide Outcry" in Medal Contest Reciter No. 20.

Singing—"A Saloonless Nation in 1920" (last two verses).

Benediction or closing prayer.

OPPORTUNITY INVOLVES OBLIGATION

FANNIE ROOT DANSER, Promoter Y. P. B. Missionary Fund

"The light that shines the farthest shines the brightest nearest home." Thus as we help to bring brightness into the lives of our brothers and sisters across the waters, the more glorious will be the results of the work accomplished in our own local Y. P. B's.

Knowing creates desire for doing. That they may be filled with missionary enthusiasm, I ask every Y. P. B. member to read the encouraging messages from our white ribbon missionaries as given in the report of the ninth convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, (pages 102-116).

In telling of her work in Burma, Flora E. Strout says: "If only we had the funds we could do splendid work toward bettering conditions. It is hard to see work stagnating just for the sake of a few dollars." In her "Greetings from Japan," Ruth Frances Davis Stevens tells enthusiastically of the Young Woman's Branch, temperance essay contests, the public school—an open door, the night school for factory girls, rescue mission work and many other interesting enterprises. Miss Amy Swankie-Cameron speaks of the work of the Young Woman's Branch in various European countries.

The fields are ripe and ready for the harvest. Opportunity involves obligation I am asking that this year every Young People's Branch of our nation contribute one dollar or more to the Y. P. B. Missionary Fund. Let us break all past records and give liberally to this cause I am having prepared coin-cards, each holding ten dimes, and shall ask that each state Y. P. B. secretary purchase these cards in quantities sufficient to supply each Branch in her state with at least one of these cards. They are to be filled and then sent through the state treasurers on or before May 15, 1915, to the National treasurer. The coin-cards will be sent to any address for 75 cents per 100, postpaid.

For raising money for this fund I am offering to send free to any Y. P. B. that agrees to fill at least two of the cards, material for a very pleasing evening's entertainment entitled, "The Evolution of the American Woman." Hold it in a church, charge ten cents admission, and you will be happily surprised at the result, which will enable you to replenish your treasury and also aid this fund.

Let us do our part this year in contributing to the Y. P. B. Missionary Fund.

Miss Mary Frances Willard Anderson, Assistant World's "Y" Secretary

Miss Anderson reports the sending of helps to Miss Ham, superintendent of young people's work in Australia, for the organizing of Y. P. B's. Heretofore young women alone have been enlisted. Miss Anderson will also furnish helps to any Branch desiring to present a "World's Demonstration."

streamed through and dispelled the darkness, and we broke into songs of rejoicing and victory. My interpretation was that the next time we came on a mission to our Nation's capital it would not be to the White House but to the Capitol, and sooner or later we should get what we asked for. During the Bible reading that followed various texts were given. I was reading the Old Testament through and had come to the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah and the last few verses closing with the thirty-second, "What shall one then answer the messengers of the Nation? That the Lord hath founded Zion, and the poor of his people shall trust in it." At that moment came a messenger from President and Mrs. Garfield inviting Miss Willard to lunch with them that day, and saying a carriage would be sent for her at twelve o'clock. Turning to us, Miss Willard said, "This is wonderful. What it portends we cannot now say, but you, my faithful ones, will be in prayer for your representative at the noontide hour." Remembering the recent notable discussion and vote on National Constitutional Prohibition in the Capitol at Washington, one can but wonder if coming events sometimes cast their shadows in prophetic visions.

GOAL FOR 1915—FIFTY THOUSAND NEW MEMBERS

IN THE MOUTHS OF MANY WITNESSES

The efforts of the liquor interests to discredit testimony as to the success and efficacy of prohibition in Kansas and Russia have served only to strengthen the evidence in favor of it. In the case of Kansas the attempt by the liquorites to impeach the veracity of those who have spoken in favor of the prohibitory law has brought forth a definite, detailed and convincing refutation from the pen of Governor Capper showing that every individual and organization of any standing in the state of Kansas is enthusiastic concerning prohibition, and this declaration of the governor is being published far and wide. (See SIGNAL of April 1.)

The efforts of the liquor interests to disprove all information concerning the enforcement of prohibition in Russia and the benefits therefrom have been largely nullified by the statements made by the counselor of the Russian embassy, in an interview with him at Washington, D. C. (see page 4), thus adding one more witness to an already numerous and notable company of those who have testified to the value of Russia's new law.

The article "W. C. T. U. Exhibits," by Mrs. Carolyn P. Lindsay, National superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings, on page 4 of this issue, has been printed in leaflet form. TRUST THE COLLEGE PAPERS

At least sixty-five universities and colleges of the United States now offer courses for the study of the liquor problem, for which curriculum credit is allowed, and more than a hundred colleges have voluntary study classes, largely under faculty leadership, where credit is not given. It is not to be wondered that the liquor interests are concerned over the growing sentiment for prohibition among the student class and that they are endeavoring to get their publicity articles and cleverly written editorials into the college papers. We venture to prophesy that their efforts will be unsuccessful. The young men and young women who conduct these periodicals are quite capable of forming their own opinions and framing their own policies and they will resent any attempt by "the trade" to influence them. Indeed, they will probably be stimulated by these tactics of the liquorites to do a little original research work in prohibition communities and as a consequence will become outspoken, enthusiastic advocates of prohibition.

SELF-PRESERVATION FIRST CONSIDERATION

The recent declaration against alcohol pronounced by one of Great Britain's leading statesmen was founded upon nothing less than the instinct for self-preservation. Not otherwise was it with the Czar of Russia when he issued his prohibition edict. "The greatest of Britain's deadly foes," said Lloyd George, "is drink," and at this critical time in the nation's affairs he believes no price too great to pay for the suppression of that enemy. What has suddenly become of that unanswerable argument of the liquor interests that no nation or government can conduct its public affairs without the aid of the revenue from the liquor traffic? Never in their history have Russia and England so greatly needed funds, yet even at this crucial time in their finances they consider the question of revenue of secondary importance compared with the necessity of ridding themselves of "The Great Destroyer"—Alcohol.

DECREASED LIQUOR REVENUE PROVES THAT PROHIBITION PROHIBITS

The United States government will soon be compelled to revise its system of taxation in order to provide for the deficit caused by the decrease in liquor revenue. This is the statement being made by financiers after reading that one of the chief causes given by officials of the United States Treasury for the deficit which it now faces is "decreased liquor revenues, due to the prohibition movement." It is stated that increase in the extent of prohibition territory and local option zones has caused a reduction of $2,000,000 in the Federal Government's income.

Assistant Secretary of Treasury Peters, in discussing the new order of things, is reported to have said: "The revenues from whisky and alcoholic beverages have shrunk considerably over $2,000,000 a year, and this unquestionably is due to the spread of the temperance movement, and we are preparing to see it diminish from this cause."

The fact of this deficit need not alarm anyone in the face of the statement of Russia's minister of finance that even in a time of war the government found that prohibition had helped rather than hindered the financial situation, by reducing the expenses due to drunkenness and consequent inefficiency and enabling the people largely to increase their savings.

Senator Morris Sheppard not long ago on the floor of Congress gave expression to his views on the question in the following words:

"If this republic cannot live without the dirty dollars it obtains from the liquor traffic, dollars stained with the tears of women and children, it ought not to live. But there are legitimate sources of revenue yet untouched. There are few direct taxes on luxuries. The income tax has little more than scratched the surface of enormous wealth. There is no federal inheritance tax. Non-alcoholic beverages are untaxed. The national domain, with measureless mineral resources, water powers, forests, and the like, could be managed so as to produce a yearly usufruct of fifty or one hundred millions. The pension roll gives promise of rapid decline."

Looking at the matter from the business man's point of view the sooner the United States government adjusts itself to the abolition of the liquor traffic the better for it financially as well as morally. Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas sizes up the situation well when he says:

"The total revenue derived by the government from all liquors in 1913 was $179,000,000. This is scarcely one-tenth of the total drink bill of our people. Most of this expenditure represents a direct economic waste. The indirect waste, physical and moral, is greater still, but is not subject to calculation. If this be so, as many opponents of National prohibition themselves concede, it is self-evidently absurd to say that we must continue the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor for the sake of a revenue of $179,000,000. A sum twenty times as large would not equal the total economic waste. And yet many of our shrewdest business men do not see the absurdity of it. They tell us we cannot afford to cut off the internal revenue tax from liquors. Shall we ever reduce the functions of government to a business basis?"

MARRIAGE OF RUTH FRANCES DAVIS

Miss Ruth Frances Davis, for six years the World's W. C. T. U. representative in Japan, was married on Friday, March 26, at the home of her parents, to David Harrison Stevens, Ph. D., of Chicago University. The wedding was a charming home ceremony, Dr. Davis, the father of the bride, officiating. Miss Elizabeth Davis played the wedding march from Lohengrin and Richard Smith Davis sang the wedding hymn, "O Perfect Love." Miss Davis' comrades in the World's and National W. C. T. U. presented her with a handsome solid mahogany tea-cart. Numerous and beautiful gifts have come to her from her friends in Japan, where she is greatly beloved. Dr. and Mrs. Stevens will be at home after May 1, at 1154 East Fifty-fourth Place, Chicago. THE UNION SIGNAL extends to them heartiest congratulations and best wishes.

W. C. T. U. EXHIBIT AT PANAMA-CALIFORNIA EXPOSITION AT SAN DIEGO

The rest room provided by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Southern California at the Panama-California Exposition in San Diego is proving a favorite place with white ribboners, and many others who are not members of the organization have discovered the cosy little sitting room. The registers already show visitors from almost every state in the Union and from abroad. The room which is in the Commerce and Industries building is 26 by 56 feet and is attractively furnished. Interesting exhibits are on display and much literature is being distributed. Light lunches are also served. The workers regard it as an opportunity to advertise the organization and lay a foundation for the 1916 campaign for a dry California. The room was furnished at an expense of about $800, but the entire cost will probably be about $2,000.

GERMANY STRENGTHENS RESTRICTIONS REGARDING LIQUOR

According to Associated Press reports from Amsterdam, April 1, the German Federal Council has passed an order strengthening the regulations regarding the sale of liquor in Germany. The order permits the central authorities of each state at their discretion to limit or prohibit the sale of spirits. Any violation of such prohibitory edict is punishable by a fine of $2,500 or imprisonment for a year.

DISCUSSION OF LIQUOR QUESTION ENCOURAGED

A "Think it Over" campaign is in full swing in the city of Chicago and the two leading newspapers, The Tribune and The Herald, are helping to promote it by the prominence they give to the question. The Herald conducts in each Monday's issue an "open forum" on the liquor evil, giving a column of space to the advocates of a dry Chicago and a column to their opponents. The Tribune in one issue each week gives space to a department called, "What Booze Did To Me," soliciting contributions from all its readers. This in addition to generous publicity of prohibition news, occasional cartoons and editorials favorable to the cause is making newspaper readers of the windy city do some serious thinking on the subject.

How about the newspapers of your city? Why not suggest their taking up similar departments? An open forum in every newspaper in the land would accomplish wonders in throwing the searchlight of truth on the unspeakable evils of the liquor traffic. The scheme is a vote-maker and if you want to win the next election for prohibition in your city, county or state, it is worth while getting the editors of your local papers to give it a trial.

Two Momentous Questions Before the People

ANNIHILATION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND WORLD PEACE

Says HON. ARTHUR CAPPER, Governor of Kansas

In an address delivered on March 16, at Topeka, Kansas, before the Kansas Methodist Conference, Governor Capper declared it as his conviction that there are today two momentous questions before the people of this country—of far greater importance than tariff or finance or any other phase of the economic problem of our time—the annihilation of the liquor traffic and its attendant evils, and the complete disarmament of nations and world peace.

"I think that you, as Methodists and we, as citizens and as Kansans, all have reasons for thankfulness and congratulations upon the great defeat the revival of the saloon issue has met with recently at the hands of the people of this state," said Governor Capper. "I feel sure it forever settles the saloon question in Kansas, where prohibition has been for years a shining success. If the liquor issue were not dead before, now that Kansas women have full suffrage and have shown they will use it, it may be considered buried beyond hope of resurrection. When the women of America are granted the voting privileges of citizenship, as they should be, we will bury the liquor traffic from one end of this country to the other beneath an avalanche of votes, deeper than the foundations of the earth.

Champions National Prohibition

"I am firmly convinced that a tremendously important duty now calls Kansas—the duty of vigorously championing and aggressively advancing the cause of National Prohibition in the United States.

"Kansas men and women should lead this movement just as Kansas led the movement which abolished human slavery, for Kansas offers the strongest, the most convincing proof of the widespread and far-reaching benefits of a saloonless state.

"National Prohibition should no longer be delayed. It will not be long in coming if the Kansas people give the movement their active leadership, their vigorous championship, and let the world know the blessings that have come to them through prohibition, and I am here to pledge you that my first ambition shall be to aid in every possible way, to use all the influence I possess, as a citizen, as a newspaper man, as a public official, to the advancement of this great cause.

Will Suppress Public Vice.

"Every movement for purity in which we are interested—the suppression of public vice and the white slave traffic and all its attendant evils will be soon accomplished when national prohibition of the sale of intoxicants becomes a reality. The brothel and the saloon are inseparably linked. We can not suppress public vice and leave its chief feeder to flourish. I regret that I can not say to you that the liquor traffic and public vice are entirely banished from our own state—but where the isolated brothel exists in Kansas, we invariably find it the side partner, the adjunct of the bootlegger—the illicit seller of whisky. The two nuisances are allied. We must suppress them together."

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

Who seeks for heaven alone to save his soul
May keep the path, but will not reach the goal;
While he who walks in love may wander far,
Yet God will bring him where the blessed are.—Henry Van Dyke.

PERSONAL MENTION

Mrs. Elizabeth P. Hutchinson, treasurer of the National W. C. T. U., is spending a few weeks at Hot Lake, Ore., from which point she expects soon to go to Seattle for a conference with the officers of the West Washington W. C. T. U. concerning arrangements for the National convention.

For the past few weeks Miss Elizabeth P. Gordon has been the guest of her sister, Miss Anna A. Gordon, at Rest Cottage. She left for the East, March 31. Her stay in Evanston was all too short to satisfy her many friends at National Headquarters, who greatly enjoyed having her with them.

The many friends of Mrs. Antoinette A. Hawley, honorary president of the Colorado W. C. T. U., will be sorry to learn that last week she met with a serious accident, falling and fracturing her hip.

Mrs. Eliza B. Ingalls, National superintendent of the Anti-Narcotics department, wishes us to explain to her department workers that illness is preventing her from attending to her correspondence. She is, however, recovering.

WHITE RIBBONERS VICTIMS OF EARTHQUAKE IN ITALY

The sad news has been received that the recent earthquake in Italy claimed as its victims several white ribboners, among them, Signorina Satturnini, secretary of the W. C. T. U. organized last year in Rome. Providentially, Mme. Fredekind, one of the most active members of the union, was in Germany at the time of the catastrophe.

THE TAFT FAMILY AND PROHIBITION

Ex-President Taft has more reason to be proud of the opinions and convictions of his two sons, Robert W. and Charles P., on the prohibition question than he has of his own. Shortly after he vetoed the Kenyon-Webb bill as unconstitutional, Robert W. Taft, his eldest son, published in the Harvard Law Review an article showing that his learned father was wrong in his conclusions. Quite recently the ex-President has given public expression to his opposition to state-wide and nation-wide prohibition, but his son Charles P. Taft, a member of the Yale trio which met the Syracuse University team in a freshman debate on state and national prohibition, stoutly defended prohibition and took the stand that prohibition laws have been successful where they have been given a chance, citing especially Maine and Kansas. The sons and daughters are learning to do their own thinking on the question of the liquor evil and this thinking is crystallizing into convictions which are soon to result in the total abolition of the liquor traffic, root and branch.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. CONVENTION, SEATTLE, WASH., OCTOBER 9-14, 1915

MEDAL CONTESTS

MRS. A. E. CARMAN

Last year more L. T. L. contests were held than ever before in the history of the department, consequently there has been a great demand for a new L. T. L. Reciter. We are glad to inform you that it will be ready by the time you read this. Send to me for copies (price, ten cents), as it will take some days to supply state superintendents. You will find in this book a number of short selections for the little ones. It also contains several songs for children. In forming classes for these contests there should be at least ten or twelve contestants.

The Peace and Arbitration Reciter is being revised and new selections added; of this you will hear later. State L. T. L. secretaries will take notice that the National L. T. L. secretary, Miss Mary B. Ervin, has offered a prize of a gold medal to the state L. T. L. secretary whose state holds the largest number of L. T. L. contests.

Please note the change in my address: 5414 Broadway Ave., Chicago.

THE APRIL NUMBER OF THE TEMPERANCE EDUCATIONAL QUARTERLY

The April number of The Temperance Educational Quarterly is a special Lesson number and therefore of great value to the schools, as well as to the workers in the Loyal Temperance Legions. Each lesson is written by a specialist in Scientific Temperance Instruction and the one copy placed in the hands of a teacher will furnish material for at least a term's work in temperance. Sara Phillips Thomas, Christine I. Tinling, Lizzie O. Middleton, Etta M. G. Luce, Lottie Abbott Woodford, and M. Grace Hendricks, each furnish a lesson. That the Temperance Educational Quarterly is being used in the schools is shown by the fact that during the last quarter the subscription list has been doubled. Not only does it meet a need in the schools of the United States, but it goes to all our home missionaries, to every teacher in Alaska, to many of the provinces of Canada, and to all our foreign workers as well as to many of the foreign missionaries.

The union that does not make use of a temperance educational journal today is lacking in vision, for such a journal furnishes the truth directly to those who will be the voters of tomorrow.

WORK AMONG SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

MRS. ELLA H. THACHER

Many inquiries (but not so many as I had hoped) have come to me about sending periodicals, magazines and books to the soldiers. These must be well boxed or barreled, prepaid and sent to the depot quartermaster of the United States army in the following towns (you should send to the one nearest your place of residence):

U. S. Army Depot Quartermaster, Washington, D. C.; Boston, Mass.; Philadelphia, Pa.; New York, N. Y.; Chicago, Ill.; St. Paul, Minn.; Omaha, Nebraska; Jeffersonville, Ind.; Seattle, Wash.

U. S. A. Quartermaster, Kansas City, Mo.; San Francisco, Calif.; Portland, Ore.; New Orleans, La.

If you wish to send to Fort Bliss, Tex., address Chaplain J. T. Axton; to Texas City, Chaplain Price; to Galveston, Chaplain Ransden. Please keep a record and report all that are sent.

1627 Massachusetts Ave.,
Washington, D. C.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. E. A. PULESTON of Amite, La prominently identified with the W. C. T. U. and the Woman's Home Missionary Society. "Mrs. Puleston was never happier than when she had secured some convert to the cause of prohibition and she worked zealously for the banishment of the great curse of drink," writes one who knew her well.

MRS. AMANDA CRAMER, Johnstown, Pa., a member of the W. C. T. U. since its organization, and mother of Miss Cora Cramer, president of Cambria county union.

MRS. CATHERINE M. HUCKILL, Forksville, Pa., a temperance pioneer and charter member of the local union organized over thirty years ago. Her daughter, Mrs. Sara Huckill Corson, is the president of the white ribbon forces of Sullivan county.

MRS. IDA FLINNER, Conoquenessing, Pa., a faithful member of the local union.

MRS. JULIA E. STIVERS, Connington, Conn., the oldest member of the local union. Although almost totally blind she was brought to the meetings in a wheel chair and her cheery smile and words of assurance were a never failing source of strength to her comrades.

SIGNS OF PROHIBITION'S PROGRESS

The chamber of commerce of Bradford, England, is reported to have adopted a resolution in favor of total prohibition.

At a meeting recently held in Edinburgh, for the purpose of advancing the total abstinence movement, the principal speaker was Lord Kitchener's sister. A resolution was passed pledging all present to total abstinence for at least the period of the war.

By recent action of the government of the province of Saskatchewan, Canada, all bar and club licenses within the province will be abolished July 1. At that time the government will take over the wholesale liquor business, and dispensaries will replace the wholesale liquor shops which now exist, such dispensaries to be under the administration of a commission responsible to the legislative assembly.

The new Alabama law prohibiting publication of liquor advertisements in newspapers, printed or sold within the state, was upheld on March 26 by Chancellor W. R. Chapman. The decision was rendered in a test case brought by the state against the Montgomery Advertiser.

The Iowa legislature has passed a bill making bootlegging a felony on third conviction and providing for the confiscation of vehicles used for transporting intoxicating liquor from other states into Iowa. When third conviction means state prison, prohibition will prohibit, for those who might otherwise have no scruples in the matter will think twice before trying to evade the law.

Albion (Mich.) college students have organized to give their aid to the prohibition forces in the local option campaign, which is now being waged in Calhoun county.

Citizens of Polo, Ill., are preparing to celebrate the town's being without saloons for fifty years.

"My patriotism makes me ashamed to draw my salary," is the explanation of his resignation given by the marshal of Kingston, Mo., a dry community where the strict enforcement of prohibition law had gradually eliminated crime to such an extent that the marshal could find nothing to do.

First W. C. T. U. Interstate Campaign Conference

EXPERTS DISCUSS PLANS AND METHODS

Special Correspondence

That the first W. C. T. U. Interstate Campaign Conference amply proved the wisdom of its planning was the verdict of the workers present in Jacksonville, Florida, March 24-25. It was indeed a meeting of "experts" (quoting our beloved National president) when ten of the W. C. T. U. presidents of southern states gathered to confer concerning campaign plans and methods, for in the South especially it has been a prevailing fashion of late for states to go dry, and while some of these women were fresh from victorious battlefields others were buckling on the "whole armor of God" to enter the various fields.

How inspiring it was to hear Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost, Mrs. Minnie U. Rutherford and Mrs. Annie K. Weisel tell of campaigning in Virginia, West Virginia, Arkansas and Alabama. How informing and interesting was it to listen to Mrs. T. Adelaide Goodno and Mrs. S. E. Stanley as they revealed conditions in the prohibition states of North Carolina and Mississippi, and Georgia's recording secretary, Miss Griffin, who represented her state in the absence of the state president, Mrs. Patterson, who is recuperating her health during a rest period. Mrs. Joseph Sprott of South Carolina, Miss Minnie E. Neal of Florida, Mrs. Alice C. McKinney of Louisiana and Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp of Kentucky, who is known as one of the strongest speakers in our organization, all made it plain that through the plans and methods to bring about prohibition in their states, there was strong hope of freedom in the near future from the blight of the liquor traffic.

All through the conference rang the dominant note of National Constitutional Prohibition. The resolution was adopted at both the evening meetings and Mrs. Beauchamp in her afternoon talk on "The Relation of State to National Prohibition," impressed it upon the women that they must work strenuously for the former in order to secure the latter.

Various Plans and Methods Discussed

Every one of the thirteen southern states was officially represented with the exception of three—Texas, Tennessee and Georgia, the absence of whose respective presidents was greatly deplored.

Needless to say, Miss Neal was a charming hostess and endeared herself to many. Even in the short time of the conference in bright, beautiful Florida the mayor of the city himself found opportunity to conduct the visitors on a delightful automobile tour. His courtesy was highly appreciated. The visitors were hospitably entertained in private homes and some of them, wooed by the balmy breezes, planned to stay in Florida "a little longer."

Mrs. Hoge, National W. C. T. U. assistant recording secretary, and president of the Virginia W. C. T. U., in a dignified yet gracious way, performed well the duties of presiding officer, holding the conference firmly to its main business during two days of crowded program work and general discussion. The rulings, too, of Miss Neal, who relieved her one afternoon, showed the same happy combination of order and gentleness.

The conference had the distinction, now growing rare, of having its opening devotions conducted by a Crusader, Mrs. Mary A. Adkinson, president of one of the four Jacksonville unions, who manifested the spirit of humble dependence on God and triumphant faith in His leadership which ever characterizes a real Crusader.

Knowing the great value of space in The Union Signal the writer will not attempt comment on the program in detail but will only mention the features which stand out most vividly. Mrs. Beauchamp's talent, experience, clearness and strength, were shown not only in definite program work but also in clearing up points of difficulty and instructing along various lines all the way from the definition of law and parliamentary procedure to the cutting of a star for the Sunday school flag!

Mrs. Yost as a specialist on campaign ammunition demonstrated well how the literary "powder and shot" manufactured in that famous "bureau" in West Virginia dealt out death and destruction to the liquor traffic. Her plate matter, bulletin, and paid space plans have a business value so great that it will pay the workers in campaign states to investigate them.

Group of Conference Delegates: Mrs. Beauchamp of Kentucky, and Mrs. Yost and Mrs. Mohler of West Virginia

Mrs. Rutherford of Arkansas gave much valuable help and illustrated the point that various means must be used in various states and that the practical application of theories must be well considered.

Among the talks by local workers and others we would mention especially successful programs by Mrs. Mabel Dean Perkins, recording secretary of the Florida W. C. T. U.; "Fairs and Open Air Meetings," by Mrs. Stella H. Boggess, state Press superintendent for Florida; and "The New Voter," by Mrs. Mary Mitchell of Jacksonville. These were all exceptionally good and showed that Florida possesses fine campaign material in her workers of whom Miss Neal is doubtless proud.

Victorious Campaign Methods

The conference fairly scintillated with ideas in the line of plans and methods. We can only mention some of them; for explanation and direction the interested reader must apply to the state officers who used them.

In interesting and securing the country voter nothing succeeds better than the rural auto tours used in Virginia. Have two automobiles, the first bearing a brass band, the second carrying the speakers who in turn give half hour speeches at the various stops.

For advertising purposes they used in West Virginia tin letters of large size hung upon wires. These could be seen from the trains, etc., as far as seven miles, some people said. Prohibitionists willingly allowed their barns to be painted with dry mottoes, etc.

In Arkansas there was conducted a campaign song contest to determine who could write the best song (words and music) with a promise to print and use the "winner." Arkansas also did intensive personal work in following up the petitions gotten up by the liquor interests under the Going law and exposing their dishonest methods.

Both Kentucky and Arkansas emphasized the value of thorough district organization, that the president might, as it were, touch the button and thereby set her plans in motion throughout the state.

In West Virginia, when a liquor speaker was sent into a town, the temperance people would crowd the place and offer white ribbons to everybody entering the doors. Imagine the disconcerting effect when the speaker faced such an audience!

To increase the volume of literature distributed even beyond the limit of the campaign fund an excellent way is to get the business men to send out the leaflets in their pay envelopes.

Mrs. Goodno pleaded for the organization of the men in rural communities into prohibition or law-enforcement clubs.

The fact was stressed that prohibitionists, as well as the antis, need literature to arm themselves with reasons "for the faith that is in them."

Altogether the conference at Jacksonville was a great sentiment-maker and set forth practical plans and ideas of immense value to the earnest, wide-awake campaigner.

SOME HARD KNOCKS

Woman Gets Rid of "Coffee Habit"

The injurious action of coffee on the hearts of many persons is well known by physicians to be caused by caffeine. This is the drug found by chemists in coffee and tea.

A woman suffered a long time with severe heart trouble and finally her doctor told her she must give up coffee, as that was the principal cause of the trouble. She writes:

"My heart was so weak it could not do its work properly. My husband would sometimes have to carry me from the table, and it would seem that I would never breathe again.

"The doctor told me that coffee was causing the weakness of my heart. He said I must stop it, but it seemed I could not give it up until I was down in bed with nervous prostration.

"For eleven weeks I lay there and suffered. Finally husband brought home some Postum and I quit coffee and started new and right. Slowly I got well. Now I do not have any headaches, nor those spells with weak heart. We know it is Postum that helped me. The Dr. said the other day: 'I never thought you would be what you are.' I used to weigh 92 pounds and now I weigh 158.

"Postum has done much for me and I would not go back to coffee again, for I believe it would kill me if I kept at it. Postum must be prepared according to directions on pkg., then it has a rich flavour and with cream is fine."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum comes in two forms:

Regular Postum—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—is a soluble powder. A teaspoonful dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both kinds are equally delicious and cost per cup about the same.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

Y. P. B. NEWS FROM THE STATES

A most unique Y. P. B. is the one recently organized by Mrs. Hattie Doughty, state Y. P. B. secretary of California, in Los Angeles, her home city, and known as the Frances Willard Y. P. B. This Branch admits to membership only those who pledge themselves to prepare for field work. It now has ten members, and is truly a "Y" training school. The state Y. P. B. officers of Southern California, with the general secretary, on February 22 went to San Fernando and there assisted the young people in presenting "The Burden of the Flag," in which seventy-five took part.

Mrs. Hubbs, state secretary of Georgia, presented to the Branches of her state a novel and practical plan for the month of March, but which, if so desired, may be used for any other month. At the first meeting of the month, the Branches divide their membership under two captains (calling the two bands "Reds" and "Blues" and having them wear bits of ribbon of their respective color). From the first to the second meeting the bands contest for the largest number of paid subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, the losing band to furnish to some individual, class or organization one or more free subscriptions to THE SIGNAL.

The W. C. T. U. of Dingman's Ferry, Pa., reports splendid co-operative public and social meetings with the local Y. P. B., with the result that many, both young and old, became interested.

The Branch of Shamokin, Pa., in a letter of greeting states that it is "keeping things stirred up" in its corner of Pennsylvania. It reports that many thousands have witnessed its parades on several occasions, at which times much enthusiasm has been aroused.

Another Branch of Pennsylvania, the Millville "Y," reports as a most pleasing social feature the celebration of its twenty-fifth anniversary in the form of a banquet with Mrs. Addie Parsels as toastmistress. In the twenty-five years of its existence 255 have been members and these are scattered over many states. Two charter members were present at the banquet and reported having paid dues into the organization for twenty-five years.

Ohio's largest Y. P. B. at St. Clairville, organized in January, was recently tendered a banquet by the local W. C. T. U. at which covers were laid for 150, 140 being dues-paid members of the new Branch. The room was decorated in the Branch colors and the table in the flowers of the state "W" and "Y." After a delectable chicken dinner, Mr. Harry Christy, Y. P. B. president, introduced as toast-mistress Miss Cunningham, instructor of English in the high school, who helped to make the evening a delightful affair.

At the state W. C. T. U. and Y. P. B. mid-year meeting at Marion, Ohio, Mrs. Mary S. Powers, the state general secretary organized a most promising Y. P. B. and, on the last evening of the meeting, presented it to the city unions as a living bouquet.

Miss Rose Davison recently presented the playlet, "A Twentieth Century Crusade," in Fredericktown, O., and the entertainment proved to be most successful financially and otherwise, $40 being cleared.

Surely no Branch in the United States can boast of more thorough organization than the Y. P. B. of Tillar, Ark., where every young person of eligible age in the town is a member, save one girl, and she is now reported to be "thinking of joining."

Mrs. Eugenia Hinemon, state Y. P. B. secretary of Arkansas, has hit upon a plan which in many cases may prove a solution of the ever-present problem—lack of leaders. She has suggested that where a permanent leader cannot be found, each member of the W. C. T. U. assume responsibility for one meeting during the year, the meeting to be held at her home and followed by a social hour. In many places the plan has been adopted with success.

A Y. P. B. of ten young men and eight young women has been organized at Manuel City, North Dakota, by Mrs. Nancy A. Sheppard, with glowing prospects for the future.

Judging from the newspaper reports of the entertainments given by the enterprising Branch of Nyack, N. Y., it is succeeding in creating valuable temperance and prohibition sentiment.

The record of Miss Estelle B. Crane, state Y. P. B. secretary of Mississippi, on a recent field trip is most excellent. In every city or town visited a Branch was organized. Miss Crane in a recent letter to her state paper referred to the large number of young women who offered their services to the Red Cross Society when war with Mexico first threatened but were turned back by Miss Boardman of that society, who said: "We cannot use you, you have not been trained as nurses; you would hinder, not help in the great relief work. Go back to your homes." She applied the incident to our young people, as follows: "It may not be your destiny to join the Red Cross Band, but it can be your destiny to join the White Ribbon Band, and by your steadfast, pure example bring healing to the souls of many a soldier fallen in life's conflict, more to be pitied than a thousand dying heroes on the bloody battlefield. What the Almighty requires of us today is not to give our lives to fighting for our country but to save our lives to fight for our God."

Mrs. Martha J. W. Ridenour reports the organization of a Y. P. B. of fifteen young women and nine young men members at Ft. Wayne, Ind., each of whom promised to bring two new members to their first regular meeting. A splendid beginning!

Judging from the glowing reports received concerning the Sunshine "Y" of Tampa, Florida, it is undoubtedly living up to its name in every sense of the word. Not the least of its work was a box of literature packed and sent by the members to the convict camps.

The Lawrence Y. P. B. of Massachusetts is doing especially good and practical work by conducting a Syrian and also an Italian L. T. L. at which there is an average attendance of forty children. To conduct an L. T. L. is an ideal plan for any Branch. The Linn Barrett Y. P. B. of Massachusetts is offering prizes to the amount of $100 in a prohibition essay contest. Melrose Y. P. B., also of Massachusetts, and organized by the state secretary about a month ago, had 100 young people in attendance at its first meeting, with seventy-three pledged members.

The Y. P. B. of Jackson, Mo., organized February 2 by the National general secretary, with a charter membership of twenty-five, now has an enrollment of ninety-three, and is still growing.

Miss Anna Mac Zentmyer, state Y. P. B. secretary of Missouri, while attending the mid-year meeting at Fayette, Mo., addressed the students of Howard Payne and Central Colleges, securing the pledges of more than half the young women of the former institution and many of the students in the latter. While there she also organized a Branch.

Space will not permit mention of the reports which have come in from nearly every state of the splendid efforts being put forth by state secretaries and members alike in behalf of the Y. P. B. campaign and birthday months, but a little later the figures will speak for themselves. Let the good work go on!

NOTICE

All reports of April work (to be counted in the prize contest) must be in the hands of the general secretary not later than May 15. Reports of county secretaries with reference to the organization of Branches as well as all new members gained, unless sent in on the birthday post cards, should come through the state secretary.

Order the "I Won One" buttons in ample time. as the supply may be exhausted and it will be necessary to order more.

STUDY OF PEACE PRINCIPLES FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

Letter to the Young People sent by Mrs. Hannah J. Bailey, National superintendent of department of Peace and Arbitration to the General Y. P. B. secretary.

Is it not highly fitting in these times when a most cruel and inhuman war is being waged that the principles of peace should be promulgated among young people? Surely the world will be convinced by the European war that there must be a more humane method of settling international difficulties than by carnal warfare.

I wish you would consider the matter of advising your Young People's Branches to take up the study of international law as a substitute for international militarism, and to consider and have discussions at their meetings on arbitration and other bloodless methods of promoting world-harmony and world-peace.

I am sending you my last report given at the National Convention at Atlanta; also an up-to-date address by Dr. Thomas E. Green, which I have published recently for our Peace department work.

I shall be very glad if you will consider the matter I have suggested and if a way opens for you to arrange helpful work along the line of peace, I hope you will do so and report at our next National convention.

I feel deep sympathy and sorrow on account of the conditions of many of our dear comrades in the war zone. I earnestly pray for their protection from harm. May God hasten the time when the blessed Prince of Peace shall reign supreme and men shall "learn war no more."

A NEW EASTER DAY FOR MANDY

MRS. S. R. GRAHAM CLARK, South Portland, Maine

Old Glory was not floating from the flagstaff of the village school that Friday before Easter when Jerry Ragout drove slowly by on his way to town. It must be the Easter holidays had begun. He had heard Mandy talking about Easter and the school; her small nephew generally spent at the farm a few days of that holiday season. The man missed the gay bit of bunting, and more than that, the shrill voices of the children at play, for it was about the hour for the opening of the usual morning session. Jerry liked to see the boys and girls racing after each other; to listen to the babel of shouts and cries. He always passed the school-house on his way to and from town at a time when he could take in the inspiring sight of the youngsters at play. It reminded him of his own boyhood, the old home, and the old mother—young then—who had been sleeping in a country churchyard for many a year.

But his mother's teaching did not sleep, and, somehow, the empty flagstaff and the silent school-yard were more eloquent to-day than had been the ripple of the banner and the glad music of child voices on other occasions; more remindful of days long gone. Jerry's Puritan father had scorned holidays as partaking of papacy, but his mother, who had been a good Episcopalian, delighted in Christmas and Good Friday and Easter Sunday.

"Good Friday!" Why, Mandy had thrown these words at him as he was leaving home, his team heavily loaded with a couple of casks. "You're a living example of the Christian patriot, you are, Jerry Ragout!" she had cried. "Going to town on Good Friday to sell hard cider to make your feller citizens drunk! I thought your mother was a 'piscopal!"

He had not heeded her words at the time, scarcely heard them, in fact, for she had been at him all the morning to give up the trip; but they had fastened somewhere in his consciousness and started now to face him as the memory of his mother and her reverence for this day surged over him.

"Mandy has an aggervating way of saying things and I hate mortally to be nagged," he ruminated aggrievedly. "P'raps if I'd listened rightly and sensed it was really Good Friday I might have give in for mother's sake, but—" He admitted to himself—not without shame—that he had come to ignore a good many of his wife's suggestions. "And she's sich a good woman and thinking about lots of things jest as mother uster! That war one reason I took to her when she was a girl and me a bashful youth and she kind and encouragin' like?"

He sighed. "Wimmin and men air diffrunt anyway. Wimmen need r'ligion; it's becoming to them, specially when they're young; but—well—cider brings money and expenses have been hefty of late. If I didn't sell it somebuddy else would." Jerry clucked to his horse uneasily.

"You know cider makes men drunk," whispered conscience.

"Consarn it all! I'm not making them drink it!" answered Jerry aloud, applying the whip to Dobbin. "I never drink the stuff, old or new."

"But you give it to your neighbor. You're a good citizen of the United States!"

"I never noways offers cider to my neighbors," contradicted Jerry. "If you knew Mandy you'd talk better sense."

But just then conscience repeated what Mandy had said earlier in the day. "If you really loved your feller men or the country that raised you, you'd not sell hard cider. You're no patriot!"

That charge had hurt her husband more than anything Amanda had said that morning. "No patriot!" There was a sting in that. Hadn't his great grandfather fought in the Revolution? Hers was born across the sea, and she throwing that in his face! He tightened the reins in his hands and began to whistle. It was "The Star-Spangled Banner" that quavered on the air, but only for a moment or two. It stopped abruptly.

"It must a been missing the flag or thinkin' of what Mandy said about a Christian patriot that started me at that," he thought. "It ain't jest comfortable having a wife that says things that stick like burrs to a man's memory and keep him on aidge. My mother warn't that sort. She never made me oneasy." The man laughed. "Course she didn't. I was nothing but a boy then and never had tetched no evil in any form." But his mother and father had both hated cider, he remembered. More than once he had heard his father say that the meanest drunk on earth was a cider drunk, and Jerry had promised his mother never to touch it and had kept his word.

Up before him now came a scene of his boyhood. One of the neighbors had sold cider to a lot of half-grown youths and they had been arrested for bad behavior. Jerry's mother had been filled with indignation against the perpetrator of the deed. "I'd rather be a drunkard before the judgment-seat than the man who had taken the smallest part in making a drunkard," she had cried, and his father had applauded her words. What brought that old scene back to his memory at this time?

"Consarn it all!" he said and gave the mare such a cut of the lash that in astonishment she tore down the road and was only brought to a standstill in front of the little brown stone church with a cross on its spire. The church bell was ringing and quiet worshippers were entering its doors. Two well dressed boys, passing by, commented on it:

"Good Friday, you know," said one to the other, and again Jerry raised his whip viciously.

"Mebbe I'm the one that needs the whip," he pondered; a second thought that saved the beast. "There's no excuse for my kind of sinner, nohow, brought up on the Bible and at the sound of the church-bell and at a Christian mother's knee, with a Christian wife to boot,—if she does nag a leetle by spells. P'raps I need the nagging and wuss—I expect I do. But, Jerusha," with a groan, "what's a man to do in sich a case as this? Here I am half way to town with a load of hard cider and a Christian perfession to hold up, and a patriot's duty to take keer of, and money skurce!"

He rode on slowly turning the mare's head, with apparent unconsciousness, away from instead of toward the town..

"The heft of the livin' comes on Mandy, after all," he soliloquized. "She has to see to the vittles and sich-like. If she kin git on without the price of the cider—and she said she'd never tetch a cent of it or anything it bought—why I oughtn't to mind! But, it looks like sich waste! I wouldn't mind promising not to make cider ever again, but this is made and it's worth quite a sum, and money skurce."

He had entered the woods by this time and turned the mare's head up a bypath. "What's got to be's got to be, and a man's got to be a Christian and a patriot or what's he in the world for? Mandy'll be pleased, and p'raps mother'll know," a sudden light crossing the rugged face, "and of course"—with a touch of reverence—"He'll care, too. Wa-al, here goes."

The man worked away at the bungholes of the casks for a time and then sat down on a log to watch the fluid gurgle slowly forth. Once he groaned. "I'm wuss than I ever thought to be," he murmured. "I'm what you might call a poor, mean cuss. Why really it kinder hurts to see that stuff runnin' away. It seems like waste; and yet I know 'twould be wuss than waste for me—what you might call damnation—if it didn't run—damnation for me and some other fellers too. Jerry Ragout, you're squirming inside, you know you air, but you kin squirm, and the longer it takes that stuff to git out the better means of grace 'twill be to you. When the last drop's out—so nobody kin git a sup of it—I'll turn about and go to town and sell them aigs, all except the two dozen Mandy wanted to keep for Easter—and me grudging them to her. And I'll buy a bit of ham to go with them and some of them hot cross buns she see advertised in the paper and was wonnering about. She's a goin' to have an Easter to remember if I don't take a red cent home, do you hear that, ole skinflint? I'm bound to git the best o' you this time, and jest remember this, Jerry Ragout's done with making cider for anything but vinegar for the rest of his natral life, and he'll never sell a gill—new or old—to any mortal, never!"

WE'LL MAKE THE NATION DRY

(Tune—"Bringing in the Sheaves.")

Come, ye loyal workers, join the temperance army,
Shout for prohibition, now our battle cry.
Onward be our watchword in the mighty conflict,
Hear the shouts of VICTORY. We'll make the Nation Dry.

CHORUS

We'll make the Nation Dry, We'll make the Nation Dry.
Hear the shouts of VICTORY. We'll make the Nation Dry.
We'll make the Nation Dry, We'll make the Nation Dry.
Hear the shouts of VICTORY. We'll make the Nation Dry.

The liquor traffic's going from our land forever.
Hear the children singing, banners lifted high.
Joyous are their voices, happy are their faces.
Hear the shouts of VICTORY. We'll make the Nation Dry.

Rally all ye faithful, rally to the conquest,
Shout the glorious message, victory is nigh.
Prayers will soon be answered, God is leading onward.
Hear the shouts of VICTORY. We'll make the Nation Dry.

The Durham (N. C.) Sun has joined the rapidly growing list of newspapers—now practically unanimous in North Carolina, we believe—which refuse to take whisky advertising. Clean newspapers want no money that comes, directly or indirectly, from the liquor traffic. Neither do they want to put temptation in the way of their readers.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Mrs. Carrie L. Flatter, National W. C. T. U. organizer, and prominent in the work of the Ohio W. C. T. U. was a recent caller at National W. C. T. U. headquarters en route to Kansas. She spoke optimistically of the situation in her state, and said that out of over sixty cities which have recently held elections under the Beal law, approximately fifty voted to outlaw the saloons.

Mrs. Lulu L. Shepard, president of the Utah W. C. T. U., was recently the guest of honor at a luncheon given by the white ribboners of Lewistown, Montana. Following the luncheon Mrs. Shepard spoke to a large audience at Judith theater on "Moral Training in the Public Schools."

New members at nearly every meeting is the record of the Sevierville (Tenn.) union which was organized only last fall. The membership is now thirty-two, and great interest is being shown in the work of the organization. On a recent Sunday Mrs. Lem Gilreath, state lecturer for the Georgia W. C. T. U., under the auspices of this union conducted three services in Sevierville where her addresses were very well received.

Seven new unions have recently been organized in Arkansas through the efforts of Mrs. Lila Carlin Moore, National organizer and lecturer. Another Arkansas union, that at Fouke, was the outgrowth of medal contest work begun by a white ribboner who moved to the village and at once organized contest classes.

A telling effort in the campaign to make Maryland dry is the series of medal contests to be held in Baltimore under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. and the Just Government League of Maryland, the first of which was held at the League headquarters, March 26. During the month of March four other contests were held in the city, the first by the Richardson Y. P. B. on March 2 and others by the Mary R. Haslup and the Carlisle unions while a grand gold contest was a feature of the city quarterly meeting, March 23.

Two members were added to the enrollment of the Oneonta (N. Y.) union on the occasion of the Frances Willard memorial meeting at the home of the president, Mrs. Smith. A public meeting under the auspices of the county and local superintendent of Medical Temperance, Mrs. M. B. Shaffer, was well attended and much interest was displayed. Rev. Smily of the United Presbyterian church told how the department could help in gaining National Constitutional Prohibition. The new song, "Count on Me," was rendered with fine effect. All the newest scientific investigations were explained, patent medicines received their merited disapproval and an enthusiastic encore was given the recitation, "How Yawcob Became an Honorable Member." A number of fine papers and a talk by the superintendent completed the program. Several hundred pages of literature were distributed.

Jennie Smith and her sister, Mrs. Fannie Howell, have rooms and board at 317 and 319 E. St., N. E., Washington, D. C., near Union Station, within walking distance of the Capitol and buildings. On a quiet street, near all street car lines. Reasonable prices.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE LADY in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for concentrated flavoring in tubes. Permanent position. J. S. Ziegler Co., 7 G East Harrison, Chicago.

PENNSYLVANIA PEN POINTS

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE

The women of Pennsylvania are happy in having Madam Layyah Barakat restored to them. All winter she was laid aside as the result of an accident which occurred as she was returning from her summer residence at Old Orchard. In trying to reach her berth she fell and was badly bruised and shaken. For the first time in many years the Pennsylvania state convention did not have the benefit of her famous Bible readings. The white ribboners of Philadelphia county were invited to attend a temperance meeting on a recent Sunday evening at the Garrick theater under the auspices of the Lemon Hill association, Mrs. M. A. Stringer, president of the county, and Madam Barakat led the company of about seventy-five to their reserved seats, and the latter at the request of Rev. Jas. B. Ely made a thrilling address.

Mrs. Ella M. George, president of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., is continually in the field, addressing schools, churches and mass meetings. The girls of the high school in Freedom recently listened with intense interest to her address on eugenics. An address in Zelienople resulted in enlisting thirty-two members.

When the central committee met at Du Bois each member was given an opportunity for special service. Miss Margaret F. Irwin spoke one evening for a missionary society and the next at a great mass meeting. Mrs. Leah Cobb Marion, treasurer of the Pennsylvania W. C. T. U., talked finances as related to the state organization. Mrs. S. B. Norrish, corresponding secretary, told of "The Voice of Science," and its message concerning the nature of alcohol. Mrs. George reminded her hearers of the progress made through the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Miss Grace Hendricks has given a week to Beaver county. She is a very acceptable speaker, visits the schools and is helpful in institutes and successful in holding the attention of large audiences in public meetings.

At a meeting for trail hitters and workers of the "Sunday" revivals held recently in the Baptist Temple, Philadelphia, Bishop Berry of the Methodist Episcopal church, said, "Billy Sunday's resounding blows against the liquor business and his telling fight for local option in the recent campaign in Philadelphia have brought forward the fruition of that movement twenty years. The evangelist has created a working force of ten thousand men pledged to local option and this voting body has given an impetus which will bring victory this year possibly, but next year certainly."

NOT A TOTAL ABSTAINER AMONG THEM

The annual report of inmates and disposition of cases at the almshouse of Luzerne county, Pennsylvania, as given by the Wilkesbarre Record, furnishes the basis for a strong temperance sermon. It states that of the new cases handled during the past year by the superintendent there was not one total abstainer. Twenty-five per cent of the inmates were moderate drinkers and seventy-five per cent were rated as intemperate. There were 106 moderate drinkers and 318 intemperate persons, totalling 424 adult cases admitted during the year.

THE WATER-WAGON IN ALASKA

Special Correspondence

Alaska is making steady progress toward prohibition, as note the following encouraging news from "the land of snow and ice":

In the town of McCarthy the drys are in a fair way to run up the prohibition flagstaff the bonny white flag of entire freedom from the saloon. There is but one of these nefarious centers of evil-doing left in McCarthy, but that is enough to raise the temper of the temperance people to a point which may mean a termination of its existence. It is devoutly to be hoped so. There were two other saloons, but because of the circulation of a petition to make the town dry, which received the names of the majority of the residents, representatives of the federal court paid McCarthy a visit, with the result that two of the three saloons were proved not qualified for a renewal of their licenses. The third is on its good behavior until July, when its license will be open for renewal.

The Skagway W. C. T. U. has forwarded a numerously signed petition to the district court at Juneau, asking that the question of local prohibition be brought up at the coming town election, and that an order be made by the court whereby the matter shall be settled at the polls instead of by personal canvass of the voters by census enumerators, as was done several months ago.

The first territorial convention of the Alaska W. C. T. U. will convene in Skagway May 13-14. The meetings will be conducted by Mrs. Cornelia Templeton Hatcher, who is W. C. T. U. territorial president, and well-known as an accomplished and eloquent speaker. A number of delegates will be present, representing the temperance work in various towns in southeastern Alaska, and the convention promises to be of great interest. Skagway held a largely attended Frances E. Willard Memorial meeting, at which appreciation of the work the local W. C. T. U. has done and is doing manifested itself in a generous silver offering.

In Sitka, which last year went dry under local option, prohibition has been of benefit to the town in many practical ways as the best citizens bear testimony. The town has grown in popularity and all signs indicate that Sitka will never be wet again. The W. C. T. U., whose president is Mrs. Margaret Georgeson, wife of Professor Georgeson, who is in charge of all the United States experiment stations (agricultural) in Alaska, is alive to its opportunities. Just now it is maintaining a well posted bulletin board and conducting a public reading room which is meeting with great favor. Mrs. Hatcher will visit Sitka April 27-May 6 and the plans for her coming include a Sunday service, an evening lecture and an all-day institute.

A MIGHTY NOUGHT!

A certain railroad announces with pardonable pride that it carried last year on its 26,000 miles of track 188,411,876 passengers, and not one of these passengers was killed in a train accident. "That," says the Canton (Ohio) Daily News, "is one of the biggest zeros, one of the mightiest noughts, that the year has to boast of." Another paper, the Butler (Pa.) Citizen, writes: "There is no doubt whatever that this condition was rendered possible only by the company's insisting on strict sobriety on the part of its employees. With drunken engineers, drunken despatchers, and drunken conductors, accidents and deaths would have been common."

Drinking on the part of employees used to cost their employers a lot of money one way or another. But nowadays it only costs the railroad man his job, comments Collier's Weekly.

Miss Agnes E. Slack, honorary secretary of the World's W. C. T. U., in telling of the wonderful improvement in Russia since prohibition went into effect, calls attention to the great opportunity of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union in organizing the women and children of Russia and other European countries. She says: "We remember Moscow was a few months since the most drunken city in Europe and 'night life' with its terrible sadness has come to an end in Petrograd, another enormous proof that impurity is chiefly caused by drink. Russia is today a suddenly transformed, greatly redeemed country. After the war what a vast amount of active work must be undertaken by the World's W. C. T. U."

WHAT SOME PEOPLE ARE DOING AND SAYING

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that I have been a reader of the THE UNION SIGNAL for several years and that I consider it a valuable publication.

It gives information gleaned from all the publications of any great importance elsewhere. I am familiar with most of the publications of any great importance in this country and there is no other one which exactly takes the place of THE UNION SIGNAL. Every person interested in the temperance reform should be a subscriber and even if I were not in sympathy with the movement, I should still want to be a reader that I might keep up with its progress.

I can heartily recommend it as a safe journal to put into the hands of the young. The young person who reads THE UNION SIGNAL will scarcely fail to grow up a better citizen.

PAUL E. DORAN, Principal White County High School, Sparta, Tenn.

I enclose one dollar and want as many copies of a Campaign Edition as you can send me. I live in a little settlement of forty houses at the country edge of the town, about a mile from any street car line. I will give to each of my neighbors one copy and will find a place for the rest. "Nothing succeeds like success" and the campaign number is full of it and will surely open the eyes of the blind.

A PENNSYLVANIA SUBSCRIBER.

I enclose $1.00 for the Campaign Edition. We want them for our mass meeting in our no-license campaign.

A CONNECTICUT SUBSCRIBER.

THE UNION SIGNAL is fine. The numbers I have received already are worth the dollar I paid for the year's subscription.

A KENTUCKY SUBSCRIBER.

When the first numbers of the Crusader came the other day, I looked them over, and the thought came to me, "why not show them to some of the people near here before Aimee takes them to the school building." Acting on this "auto-suggestion" I went out, and shortly had the names that are herewith enclosed—all taken within sight of my own doors.

APPLETON, WISCONSIN.

At Needles, California, they have been conducting a most interesting Young Crusader contest. The contest closed Thursday, March 1, and at their regular meeting, March 19, a prize of $2.00 was presented to Leora Sechrest, a little girl of ten years, she having secured the most subscribers—15. The result of the contest was 51 new subscribers for The Young Crusader. Six of those taking part in the contest each secured four or more new subscribers and became members of the Scamp Club, and received the Scamp pin.

BRILLIANCY WITHOUT BOOZE AT POLITICAL BANQUET

Vice-President Thomas R. Marshall and Mrs. Marshall were recently the guests of the Democrats of San Francisco at a banquet where approximately 1,000 people of every political persuasion and complexion surrounded the tables. On this pleasing occasion one genuine California product was conspicuously absent from the menu, for no drink containing alcohol either of home manufacture or of foreign lineage was served for the refreshment of the banqueters. Among the distinguished guests were Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, Mayor Rolph of San Francisco, United States Senators James D. Phelan, and Henry F. Ashurst, and many another who is in the political lime-light, and there is no hint in the printed accounts of the affair that the occasion lacked brilliancy in any particular despite the fact that not many months since no one would have thought of assembling this political gathering without a plenteous supply of liquors of various kinds with which to drink the health of the Vice-President and properly honor the present administration.

"VOTES FOR WOMEN" NEWS

The Pennsylvania suffragists are planning to keep the "votes for women" movement before the public this summer by means of suffrage gardens, in which shall grow only plants bearing yellow blossoms. These plots will be made to spell "votes for women" across the state in yellow poppies, snapdragons, dahlias, buttercups, marigolds and other sunshine-hued posies.

MINERS CUT OUT LIQUOR—ACCIDENTS DECREASE

Total abstinence of many miners from liquor and hitting the trail by hundreds of others in the Billy Sunday revival at Scranton, Pa., a year ago, are cited as the reasons for a decrease in accidents in the annual report of Mine Inspector Jenkin T. Reese, of the fourth anthracite district of Pennsylvania, just made public.

The report shows that there was only one fatality to each 211,573 tons mined in the district, an increase in the tonnage of 7,000 over the previous year.

"For the showing in my district, I disclaim all credit," says the report. "The showing is so good because many of the miners have cut out booze, hundreds of others hit the trail in the revival a year ago; there is an increase in reading due to the war."

Alaska To Vote on Prohibition in 1916

Territorial Legislature Passes Measure Submitting Question to the People

Hon. Eugene N. Foss, Ex-Governor of Massachusetts, a Convert To National Prohibition

One of the latest and most notable converts to prohibition is ex-Governor Eugene N. Foss, who has been three times elected chief executive of the state of Massachusetts.

The announcement of his changed views was made by ex-Governor Foss at exercises at the Franklin Union, in Boston recently.

"I have been thinking that it's about time for me to stop voting for the licensed saloon," said Mr. Foss. "So long as I make it a rule to have my superintendents and foremen discharge men who are addicted to liquor, how inconsistent it is for me to support an open saloon near my manufacturing establishment, where the men have to go back and forth two or three times a day.

"This question of prohibition is a very large one. It may be the most important social, political and moral question of today. Certainly it is an economic question. From an economic viewpoint, why shouldn't we have National Prohibition?

"Abraham Lincoln said, 'You can't have a nation half slave and half free.' We can't have a nation half wet and half dry. It is impossible perfectly to enforce prohibition in a state surrounded by liquor states. Maine has been trying for years to be a prohibition state and liquor has been carried in from Massachusetts to Maine.

Prohibition Must Come

"I believe National Prohibition is in the interest of public health. In my three years as governor of Massachusetts I saw 20,000 or more people locked up in this state and $5,000,000 a year appropriated for their support. They were there on account of liquor, mainly. It is ridiculous to stand in the way of this movement. The large cities get a comparatively small fund from licenses. Aside from every other consideration, economically, we here in America must come to National Prohibition.

"Let us learn this lesson from the European war. Russia's efficiency has been improved thirty per cent as a result of the prohibition of vodka, according to a report of Winston Churchill. If we want to be as efficient as other nations we must have prohibition. I have come to this conclusion purely from an economic consideration."

Ex-Governor Foss followed his remarks on prohibition with an admonition to the students before him to remember that the one thing that would do more for them and their employers than anything else was total abstinence.

Secretary Bryan Advises Iowa To Select National Committeeman Who Is Opposed To Liquor Traffic

"It would be far better (in selecting a national committeeman) to take an obscure man who is right on the liquor question than a well-known man who is wrong on the liquor question," wrote Secretary of State William J. Bryan a few days ago to L. S. Kennington of Iowa, in a letter advising him in regard to the selection of a national Democratic committeeman from that state.

"The legislature of Iowa has voted statutory prohibition, and also has submitted to the people a prohibition amendment to the constitution," Mr. Bryan says in his letter. "It becomes necessary, therefore, for the voters of Iowa to act upon the liquor question.

"The brewer, the distiller, and the saloonkeeper are in conspiracy against all that is pure in society, against all that is sacred in the family, against all that is good in industry and desirable in government. I do not mean to say that every brewer, every distiller, or every saloonkeeper is consciously conspiring, but the business in which these men are engaged is the enemy of progress and civilization and they are not in position to oppose the influence that dominates it.

"Those who represent the liquor interests are conscienceless in their methods; they debauch the individuals through whom they act, and any party to which they dictate. The Democratic party can only hope for success when it gives expression to high ideals and makes itself the champion of the noblest principles and the best policies.

"Whenever a moral question is raised, therefore, there is but one side to it, unless the party is willing to sell its soul for a support which cannot be more than temporary and which cannot be accepted even temporarily without the forfeiture of public respect.

"It does not matter much what particular individual is chosen as national committeeman, but it matters a great deal whether he stands on the moral or immoral side of the line that separates the forces that are soon to engage in political battle in Iowa.

"It would be far better to take an obscure man who is right on the liquor question than a well-known man who is wrong on the liquor question, for an unknown man ceases to be unknown when he becomes the exponent of a righteous cause—he borrows strength from his cause, whereas individual strength and personal influence dwindle into nothingness under the blight of an unholy alliance with an immoral cause.

"If, therefore, anybody asks you my opinion you may say that in any contest between a wet and a dry candidate for national committeeman I am for the dry candidate, and that I shall be greatly disappointed if the Democratic party in Iowa does not throw the weight of its great influence against the liquor interests and all that they stand for or desire."

The W. C. T. U. at the Made-In-United States Exposition

MRS. ANNA PRITCHARD GEORGE

The Made-in-United States exposition held in the Grand Central Palace, New York City, March 6-13, was a great success.

Among the many and varied exhibits were those displaying hardware, furniture, blankets, leather goods and pianos. The Boy Scouts had an interesting booth showing tent and camp life, and the Bible Society was there, as were the suffrage women, with their voting machine, and the anti-suffragists. The brewers had planned to have an exceptionally large exhibit, but at the last minute withdrew.

Best of all were the exhibits of the temperance societies: The Prohibition Party, the Good Templars, the National Temperance Society, the Church Temperance Society of the Episcopal church, the Anti-Saloon League and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Each one had a splendid exhibit. The large coffee van in the booth of the Church Temperance Society, where good appetizing lunches were served, was quite an attraction. This van was one of a number in use throughout the city.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union booth, with its globe of the world encircled by a broad white ribbon, and hanging in a conspicuous place, was exceedingly impressive, and thousands of pages of literature were distributed to the passing crowds. Hundreds, stopping to inspect our posters and charts, asked pointed questions which Mrs. Andruss and the other W. C. T U. women assisting her, were able to answer satisfactorily.

On Temperance Day, March 12, the temperance people made the most of their opportunity. All over the place were white posters lettered in red announcing "Temperance Day." At 4 p. m., the temperance crowd, decorated with placards, gathered in front of the temperance booths and marched around the main floor in splendid array, then up the stairway to the balcony floor where rousing prohibition meetings were held both afternoon and evening. The audiences were the largest of any during the entire exhibition. Mr. John W. Cummings of the National Temperance Society, presided in the afternoon. About one hundred boys were present and Mrs. Ella A. Boole, vice-president-at-large of the National W. C. T. U., addressed her talk chiefly to them. As she drove home strong temperance truths, she held them spellbound, even though the music and general clatter, which is so alluring to young boys, kept calling to them from below. Later in the afternoon when Mr. Patterson passed pledge cards through the audience, a great many boys and young men gave their signatures and thus started to ride on the water wagon. "Catch-My-Pal" Patterson was eloquent and convincing. Mrs. Boole presided in the evening and the large gathering was again delighted when Mr. Patterson and Mr. Newman H. Raymond, a prominent prohibitionist, gave stirring prohibition addresses.

Temperance Day at the exposition will long be remembered and great good was accomplished for the cause of total abstinence in our land.

ALASKA TO VOTE ON PROHIBITION IN 1916

TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE PASSES MEASURE SUBMITTING QUESTION TO THE PEOPLE

A bill submitting the question of territorial prohibition to the voters of Alaska at the general election in November, 1916, on April 6 passed the lower house of the Alaska legislature, by a vote of 14 to 2. On April 9, the measure was acted upon favorably by the senate. Should prohibition be adopted by the voters of the territory, the law would become effective on January 1, 1918.

Saloons Outlawed in Many Cities of Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Nebraska at April Elections

The victories in Michigan on April 5, reported in last week's paper, were followed on April 6 by similar triumphs in the states of Illinois, Wisconsin and Nebraska. The cleaning up of three Illinois counties is reported in another article.

According to the latest reports received, nineteen Wisconsin towns and cities swung into the prohibition column, and forty-one communities which were without saloons voted to continue the dry policy. It is a cause for regret that Madison and Beloit, college towns, were not among those which voted out the liquor shops.

It is reported that as a result of the town elections held in Nebraska, the prohibition forces gained a victory of about 19 to 3. Twenty-nine towns (ten of them county seats) are newly dry, nearly all by good majorities.

As stated last week, fourteen out of the sixteen counties voting in Michigan, including many popular summer resorts, outlawed the saloons on April 5.

ILLINOIS GAINS NEW PROHIBITION TERRITORY

OVER ONE HUNDRED SALOONS VOTED OUT AT APRIL ELECTIONS

HELEN L. HOOD, President State W. C. T. U.

The April 6 election has added to the state three new dry counties, making fifty-five in all. More than one-half of the counties are now dry. This election was one in which many townships—some dry and others wet—were voting. Centralia, which has had saloons for forty years, and Pontiac—both important cities—went dry. Over one hundred saloons were put out of business. Another election on April 20 may add more dry areas.

The Illinois W. C. T. U. has before the legislature an important bill known as the five mile limit zone, which, if passed, will protect 2,400 young men, who are at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, situated in the northern part of the state. Secretary Daniels of Washington and Commander Moffatt of the station are co-operating with us to secure the adoption of this measure, which will put out over seventy-five saloons, and make another county nearly dry. The present legislature finds the liquor men fighting most bitterly against this bill, and we are working very hard to secure the needed votes.

The liquor interests killed the resolution calling for a constitutional convention, as they feared its passage meant the granting of full franchise to women and prohibitory measures to be introduced. The age of consent, birth registration, abatement and injunction, child labor, residence district, full franchise, and anti-shipping bills now before the legislature, have the co-operation of our organization with that of others which are trying to secure their adoption.

The women in Chicago, at the April 6 mayoralty election, turned out in full force, 243,797 being the vote polled, which was eighty-six per cent of the total registration. The Republican candidate for mayor was elected by this vote.

TENNESSEE LEGISLATURE ENACTS IMPORTANT LAW-ENFORCEMENT MEASURES

MRS. M. P. BANG

The temperance men and women of Tennessee are rejoicing over the splendid victories won recently in the halls of the state capitol. Law enforcement measures, second in importance only to the statewide law of 1909, were enacted, and we are confident now that we will have prohibition that really prohibits.

The mid-year executive meeting of the state W. C. T. U. was in session in Nashville just at that time, and the general officers and the L. T. L. secretary, led by the president of the Tennessee W. C. T. U., Mrs. Silena M. Holman, were present during the fierce oratorical battle which resulted in an overwhelming defeat in the house of the liquor forces.

One of the measures passed was the locker or club bill, which prohibits the sale, storage or dispensing of liquor by fraternal or social clubs. The other was a bill restricting the sale of alcohol by druggists. Under the terms of this bill any prescription for liquor given by a physician must be bona fide and the person to whom it is given must be really sick. It is a drastic bill and will dispose of doctors and druggists who are making money by violating the law.

We of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union rejoice all the more as we have done our part toward securing the passage of these laws. In response to the urgent plea of our state president, Mrs. Holman, our women have been sending in letters in behalf of these bills by the hundreds to our representatives and have secured the endorsement of influential men.

Another victory was the recent defeat by a good majority of a bill which had for its object the weakening of the anti-cigaret law.

Some weeks ago the ouster law, which provides for the removal of city officials who refuse to enforce the law, was enacted.

We already had the nuisance law, under which hundreds of lawless saloonkeepers have been indicted and many of them sent to the rock pile and the jail, so that now the Old Volunteer state is a "truly" prohibition state, and we are looking forward to a reign of peace and prosperity such as we have many times dreamed of.

CHICAGO'S DRY CAMPAIGN

The prophecy that Chicago may go dry on April 3, 1916, is being heard on every hand in the windy city by the lake. Mr. G. F. Rinehart, a newspaper man who led the statewide prohibition campaign in Arizona, and to whom is given the credit for its success, is leading in a campaign for a dry Chicago, and the various temperance forces have united under his leadership. The city is to be thoroughly organized and speakers of national reputation will help make sentiment and votes for the cause. An effort is being made at the present time to secure 125,000 signatures before the election is called.

SUFFICIENT SENTIMENT TO ABOLISH SALOONS DECLARES SENATOR CUMMINS

In an address recently delivered before a Chicago labor union United States Senator Cummins repeated his declaration for National Constitutional Prohibition. "I was gratified to read in the Washington papers some time ago," said the Senator, "of the action this local carpenters' union took in condemning the liquor traffic. Thirty years ago I would have said prohibition was impractical. Under the conditions that existed then, it would have meant putting in the field two unregulated saloons to the one regulated saloon that had been there before.

"But the world has marched along in these thirty years until now there is sentiment enough in the United States to abolish the saloon. The United States ought to abolish it, and it will abolish it.

"There is no good in the saloon. There is nothing but evil in it; nothing but evil ever came of it. There may be some to whom liquor may afford moments of irresponsibility and alleviation of grief; some may be able to rise above their normal selves under its influence. But in the end even these must pay a double price for it.

"The saloon impoverishes our homes and blasts the lives of our people. It destroys the strength of our young manhood. The time has come now for the nation to wipe it out."

STIRRING DAYS IN NEBRASKA

PLANNING FOR THE 1916 CAMPAIGN

MRS. M. M. CLAFLIN, State W.C.T.U. President

These are stirring days in Nebraska, where the prohibition campaign is the greatest issue in the minds of the people and election day nineteen months away. The fact that January, 1916, will find us nearly surrounded by dry territory startles even the most complacent to a sense of danger. We must protect ourselves or be made a dumping ground for the undesirable of these newly dry states.

The W. C. T. U. is in fine fettle. A sense of optimism seems to pervade all things, but better than that—for we have learned of the deadly toxin of over-confidence—is the spirit of work. "What shall I do?" or "Command me and I will respond" are two significant sentences often found in both correspondence and conversation. The mid-year meeting of the executive committee was held recently in Central City, the home of Mrs. Emma L. Starrett, National superintendent of the department of Christian Citizenship. While there was not a large attendance it was representative and the two days were full of plans crystallizing and formulating. We expect to operate every plan that has been tried elsewhere and to add many more heretofore unknown.

In the beginning of the year, before the National W. C. T. U. had set a "stent" for us, we had set our membership mark at a twenty-five per cent gain in the old unions with all accessions through new ones to be over and above that, so when Miss Gordon and the other General Officers indicated the number for which they hoped we would strive, we were able to say, "Yes, we will meet that and more." The progress up to the present time is exceedingly gratifying. We are also making a feature of the "after revival" work, enlisting those who are spiritually quickened in this fertile field of applied Christianity. We are expecting an abundant harvest from the "Billy" Sunday campaign in Omaha, which will cover the month of September. The Omaha women will not be faithless in making the most of this opportunity.

Of necessity, the state convention, which was set for Omaha, has been moved to another place, but the Omaha unions graciously invite white ribboners to share their hospitality for a similar period of time while they enjoy the Sunday meetings.

While no great effort was made in the legislature this winter for reform legislation, a specious cigaret bill has been killed, almost surprisingly, since it was sponsored in considerable strength. Thus ends the second attempt to repeal our far-reaching law. Other vicious bills were killed and while the result lacks much of what we desire, we thank God and take courage.

OHIO'S "CALL TO COLORS"

BUCKEYE STATE'S PLAN FOR INCREASE IN MEMBERSHIP

Special Correspondence

One of the first things Ohio did in initiating its plans for increase in membership was to get out a card known as the "Call to Colors" card, believing that this kind of plea would appeal to every patriotic, home-loving woman. On this card is a picture of the American flag, together with the following words:

"A Call To The Colors For A Stainless Flag. To Every Good Woman, Greeting From the Ohio Woman's Christian Temperance Union: The time has come when the already enlisted 38,000 Ohio white ribboners need your help to make Ohio dry. Do not wait to be drafted into service, but come as a volunteer. By signing the pledge, paying annual dues (sixty cents), and wearing the white ribbon, the emblem of temperance and purity, you will count one in this great Home-Protection army. No one can be neutral. 'CHOOSE YE THIS DAY WHOM YE WILL SERVE.' 'The battle is on—God calleth for you.'"

Then follows the pledge and a place for name and address. The card was put out in the form of a post-card so that it could be left in the home and any one desiring to become a member could place a stamp on it and mail it to the person presenting it. A letter was written to each county president apportioning a certain per cent of the gain according to the membership of each county. She was asked to plan immediately for a systematic house-to-house visitation which should leave not one home unvisited and should include an invitation to join the W. C. T. U. and the distribution of prohibition literature. This method creates sentiment for prohibition and is an aid in securing new members. Already from many of the counties comes the word that in the cities each union is divided into wards and districts and that the union has pledged itself to take a certain territory and visit every home therein. Many have reported that they have already secured their apportionment. In like manner the country unions are looking after the country districts. It is believed that Ohio will reach the goal she is so anxious to attain.

AUSTRALIA AGAINST THE CANTEEN

After the recent Parliament elections for the Australian Parliament, the new government came into power, and Senator Pearce was made Minister of Defence. He promptly announced that from the departure of the first Expeditionary Force the liquor canteens in the military camps would be closed—and this has been done. His course was challenged in the senate, which, however, supported his decision. The Minister, in replying, in the senate chamber, said: "I have had a fair amount of experience in military matters, and have always made a point of visiting camps when an opportunity offered. On occasions I have stayed several days. I was for many years an advocate of the wet canteen, considering that, if properly regulated, it would help to prevent the men drinking in bad company; but, as a result of my experience, I have been entirely changed from this point of view. The wet canteen is a danger and an evil. I have known drink to be taken by youths who, prior to going into camp, had not touched it. Since the wet canteen has been abolished at the Broadmeadows camp I have had practically a cessation of complaints in connection with drunken soldiers."

Liquor Question Under Consideration by British Cabinet

ENGLISH, SCOTTISH AND IRISH CITIES AND TOWNS ACTIVE IN MOVEMENT FOR TOTAL ABSTINENCE DURING WAR

The question of the restriction or total prohibition of the consumption of alcohol continues to be the leading question in England. Interest in the subject is spreading throughout the United Kingdom. At Newcastle, a King's League is proposed with a view to encouraging abstinence. At Northampton and many other towns efforts are being made to discourage drinking during the war.

King George's example and appeal is said to have had a most remarkable effect at Glasgow. The shipyards of that city comprise probably the hardest drinking community in Great Britain, but after word was received of the King's action by concerted agreement the laborers are reported to have shunned the bar-rooms.

At Belfast resolutions were adopted at the meeting of the Belfast Presbytery of the Irish Presbyterian church urging the government to take immediate steps to enact throughout Great Britain universal prohibition of the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic drinks during the period of the war and at least six months thereafter.

Government leaders have stated that they are considering the question not from a moral, but from an economic standpoint. They believe the country will gain financially by any movement suppressing the sale of liquor. A manufacturer, who is a student of the drink problem, says: "If the public saw the time-sheets of industrial concerns engaged in manufacturing munitions of war, showing the contrast between the work done by teetotalers and drinkers, it would be appalled. The days lost by drinkers reduce their working time on an average to three full days a week. Britain's drink bill is twice as much per capita as America's, four times as much as Canada's and far the highest of any country in the world."

KING GEORGE OF ENGLAND

"By the King's Command, no wines or spirits will be consumed in any of His Majesty's houses after April 6."

While the advocates of total prohibition are hopeful that the government may decide to abolish the sale and manufacture of alcohol in toto, they realize that many difficulties, legal and social, stand in the way of such action. Many of the nobility of the land are interested so largely in the brewing and distilling trades that the problem of doing away with them will be a difficult one.

It is said that several more cabinet meetings may be required before the government is able to decide upon the method of dealing with the problem.

BRITISH EMBASSY FOLLOWS EXAMPLE OF KING GEORGE

Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, has inaugurated a prohibition rule in his embassy, according to reports from Washington. Since an ambassador is the personal representative of his sovereign, Sir Cecil has deemed it his duty to follow the example of total abstinence set by King George and no British guest at the embassy will be offered any alcoholic beverages.

LIQUOR DRINKING FORBIDDEN IN THE VOSGES DISTRICT

The general in command of the army of the Vosges is reported to have forbidden the purchase or sale of all spirituous liquors in the territory occupied by his army, according to news received from Paris.

LEADING MEN AND WOMEN OF NATION'S CAPITAL BECOME MEMBERS OF DISTRICT W. C. T. U.

MRS. EMMA S. SHELTON, President of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U.

The work of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. is in a most prosperous condition. Not only am I speaking almost continually in Washington, but I am sometimes called to aid the work outside the District. This week the District officers and others of our workers are going, at the request of the Rockville (Md.) W. C. T. U., to organize a Young People's Branch at that place.

A recent letter from one of our W. C. T. U. women told a strange story. She sent me an advertisement of a powder which, mixed with brewer's yeast, according to the directions attached, could be made at home into any kind of whisky or beer. This same white ribboner had a short time before assisted a man to get employment, and his wife reported that he was at home drunk from the product of which this advertisement told. This matter has been referred to the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue for his decision. I am afraid there is no law to cover the case.

In my busy life and ofttimes hurried writing I hope I may be excused if I sometimes leave out items of interest in my letters. In my last, in speaking of the Frances Willard Memorial service held in the Capitol Building, I neglected to speak of the interesting sketch of the life of Frances Willard given by Mrs. Louise Harding Earll, superintendent of the department of Red Letter Days, and also neglected to state that the flowers for the statue were contributed through the kind effort of Miss Claire Lusby, president of the Mt. Pleasant Y. P. B.

The District of Columbia is sending, through its treasurer, Mrs. James A. Allison, $100 to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund. Mrs. Don P. Blaine, National lecturer and organizer, has spoken from the pulpits of a number of our churches at both morning and evening services and numerous missionary meetings and at this writing has secured about one hundred and fifty members.

Women Prominent in Washington Society Join Woman's Christian Temperance Union

The local unions are entering enthusiastically into a membership campaign, which they are pushing vigorously. They are reporting large gains, one union receiving thirty members at its last meeting, so that we hope to report at the next National Convention, if not a doubled membership, at least large gains.

Among the new members gained in the last three weeks are the wives of three Congressmen, two from Missouri and one from Oklahoma, the wife of the United States Commissioner of Internal Revenue and her mother, the president of the Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Association, president of the Sunshine and Community society, a member of the Board of the Young Women's Christian Association, and also Mr. William Knowles Cooper, secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, and Mrs. Cooper. Among other prominent men and women who have come into our organization are Mr. Andrew Wilson, president of the Anti-Saloon League, and his wife; Mr. Albert E. Shoemaker, attorney for the League, and wife; the wife of a brigadier-general of the United States Army, the wife of the auditor of the United States Treasury, who is also a director in the National Federation of Women's Clubs, the wife of the chief clerk of the Patent office, the wife of the chief clerk of the Treasury, the wife of the chief clerk of the Weather Bureau, the president of the Federation of Women's Clubs of the District of Columbia, the president of the Interdenominational Missionary Union; Mrs. Ellen Spencer Muzzy, honorary dean of Washington Law College, and founder and dean until within a year when her health broke down, and many others. These members have not come to us through public meetings, but have been "hand picked" with a great deal of care.

Some time ago, at the close of a meeting at which our work had been exploited, a woman, a social leader in this city, came to me and crushing a bill into my hand said, "If I am eligible, I wish to become a member of your organization."

But as always in life our joys are tempered with sorrow, so in the midst of rejoicing over the victories being won in every part of the land, our hearts are heavy with sympathy for sisters beloved. In the United States Capitol we had in one of the officials of the senate, Mr. Benjamin Platt, a friend tried and true. A personal friend of my own, when there was any W. C. T. U. work to be done at the Capitol I could rely on him to clear the way and render every assistance possible. On the day of the Memorial service for Miss Willard, held in Statuary Hall, I went to his office to invite him to attend, and was shocked to be told that early that morning he too had entered into the beautiful life of the great beyond. His wife is one of our faithful W. C. T. U. women. Mr. James H. Tibbits, whose wife is corresponding secretary of one of our unions, is another of our promoted brothers who passed to his reward February 21. On March 7 F. Marion Bradley passed from the sorrows of earth to the triumphs of heaven. For more than fifty years Mr. Bradley had been a warm advocate of total abstinence by example and by precept, having lectured all over the country. In him the District W. C. T. U. has lost a true brother, for he was always helpfully interested in the W. C. T. U. work of his wife, Mrs. Nellie H. Bradley, who is one of the charter members of the District and was in temperance work before there was a W. C. T. U. No woman in the District has been more devoted, more self-sacrificing to our beloved cause. Time, work, voice and pen have all been enlisted, and she has worked as she never could had it not been for the help and sympathy of her loving partner. As we sorrow for those who were so truly ours, our deepest sympathy goes out to our sisters who grieve, yet not without hope, for they know their dear ones have only passed within the veil.

Young People Working for Civic Righteousness

On March 14 there was a great meeting in Washington under the auspices of the committee of Good Citizenship, made up of representatives from the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor, Epworth Leagues, Young People's Baptist Unions, our own Young People's Branches and other young people's societies in the churches. The meeting was addressed by Dr. Patterson of Dublin, Ireland, of "Catch-My-Pal" fame. To Mrs. T. A. Williams, secretary of the Y. P. B., and myself, was accorded the honor of seats on the platform. No one who has heard this ardent Irish worker can doubt the impression he made, and at the close of the meeting Mr. Worley, the chairman, called for a conference of the young people to consider the advisability of a permanent organization of all the young people's societies of the churches to work for prohibition and civic righteousness. You may be sure I feel proud to be asked to "mother" the plan which I doubt not will result in a strong organization of the young life of the churches, a real Christian union for hastening the day for which we pray.

On March 19 the Anti-Saloon League held a large public meeting to which Mrs. Blaine, assisted by Mrs. Edna Proctor, secretary of the Loyal Temperance Legion, contributed a beautiful, original temperance exercise by the L. T. L.'s and other children, the writer representing the District W. C. T. U. in a brief talk. Although we plan that our meetings shall not conflict with those of the Anti-Saloon League on this occasion by some mixing of dates, Mrs. Louise H. Earll had arranged for a Neal Dow meeting for her department of Red Letter days with the Rev. Dr. Dinwiddie as the principal speaker. The fact that both meetings were well attended shows the increased temperance and prohibition sentiment in the District of Columbia.

Senator Sheppard has already announced his intention to introduce a bill for prohibition for the District of Columbia at the next session of Congress, and if Billy Sunday invades our District we believe we will have a dry capital in 1916.

Let us thank God that prohibition sentiment is growing in such force, especially in the ranks of our young people who, with the enthusiasm of youth and the divine impatience of youth with sin, are rallying in their might, and in the name of good citizenship will cast out the greatest sin of the age.

ALCOHOL

The drink evil is a leper spot on the surface of the nation, a moral canker eating into the vitality of our people, and producing effects which do not die with the year, or the life, or even with the generation, but which will be reproduced from year to year, from generation to generation in a terrible portentous legacy of poverty, misery and crime.

FACTS ABOUT PROHIBITION KANSAS

FRANK U. RUSSELL, County Attorney of Rush County, Kan., in Topeka Capital

The anti-saloon movement is progressing so rapidly toward nation-wide prohibition that the defenders of the liquor traffic are alarmed. Their forces are organized and making a most desperate fight.

Because Kansas, by actual trial and demonstration, has proved the vast benefits of prohibition to a state, the liquor men find it necessary to resort to misapplied and distorted facts and to falsehoods to try to destroy the good influence which Kansas would otherwise exert upon her sister states.

The writer has before him a copy of the Niles Sun, a newspaper published in Niles, Mich., in which is found a two-column article proclaiming that prohibition does not prohibit in Kansas. This article is signed by the Anti-Local Option association. It is typical of the sort of arguments being used by similar organizations in every part of the nation at this time. Its arguments are briefly these:

False Arguments.

"That prohibition does not prohibit in Kansas, for there were 681 arrests in Topeka, Kan., in 1914, for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

"And for further evidence they say that Topeka has a higher death rate than certain other capital cities, not named, where liquor is legally sold.

"That the registration cities of Kansas generally, show a higher death rate than the registration cities of certain other states, not named, where liquor is legally sold.

"That the suicide and homicide rates in Kansas are higher than they are in certain other states, not named, where liquor is legally sold.

"That there are in Kansas more divorces, fewer church members, and more delinquent children than in certain other states, not named, where liquor is legally sold.

"That there are more lunatics, more prisoners and more paupers in Kansas than in certain other states, not named, where liquor is legally sold.

"That Kansas spends nearly one million dollars annually to benefit and make comfortable her insane, imbeciles, epileptics and erring children.

"That fewer Kansans have accounts in savings banks than in other states, not named, where liquor is legally sold; and that these accounts average only half the average of savings accounts in the rest of the country." Therefore, they say prohibition does not prohibit in Kansas.

Nothing Proved.

Now, in answer, is it not true that if all these statements were correct, they would constitute no evidence to warrant the conclusion that prohibition does not prohibit? They would only serve to show that it has not set aside the laws of disease and death, or caused every man to change his business methods, to become perfect in morals, and to join himself to a church. However, it is unfair not to name the states, if the statements are true.

The proof that it does not prohibit could be easily stated if it existed. If more liquor were consumed in Kansas than in states where it is legally sold, then in truth, prohibition would not prohibit. This is the one essential fact, and no one pretends that such a fact exists. The liquor interests dare not publish the one magnificent fact beside which all their cleverly compiled statistics are as nothing. Here is the truth:

The Truth Of It.

The average consumption of liquor in Kansas, per capita, is 3.69 gallons. No liquor state has a record to compare with this. We have a total population of 1,750,000, and they consume 6,257,492 gallons of liquor per year. Figure this for yourself. The average consumption of liquor in all the states of the Union together is 23 gallons per capita, or more than six times what we consume. Our records are perhaps more complete and accurate than those of any other state, because the common carriers are compelled to file in the county clerk's office of every county a record of every shipment, and its amount, delivered by them in the county, each month of the year.

As for Topeka, 681 drunks in a year constitute one drunk per day in each 26,732 of its population. This fact really proves that prohibition does prohibit in Topeka. National prohibition, preventing the shipment of liquor from other states into ours, would make the 681 sober also.

> The truth is the liquor forces are singing their swan song. The saloons of the country are being abolished at the rate of 20,000 per year, and this glorious work is going forward in increasing ratio. The message Kansas brings to other states is this: That prohibition is the grandest fact of our existence since the time when human freedom was written into our history with letters of blood and fire.

About the death rate, the suicides, homicides, imbeciles, inebriates, paupers, divorces, and about the church membership being larger in some unnamed states, is it not true that liquor drinking is but one among many elements in human life that affect these matters?

Low Death Rate

However, as a matter of fact, the death rate in Kansas has fallen from 17 per thousand to 7 per thousand under prohibition. What think you of this, is prohibition a failure then?

The statements made about suicide and homicide are misleading. It is a crime in Kansas to bury a body until after a certificate has been made and filed showing the cause of death. So, naturally, our records reveal absolutely all our suicides and homicides, and so may easily show them more than in states where the record is more carelessly kept.

The statements made about divorces are absolutely incorrect in so far as they claim to present conditions in Kansas now. Under the divorce proctor law, enacted in 1913, the divorce evil is rapidly diminishing, and Kansas will compare favorably with any state.

Church Situation Better.

Now the churches of Kansas, with the exception of two or three denominations only, no longer tolerate the use of liquor at all by their membership, and if there be some states where a more liberal policy is pursued—some liquor states—it is no evidence that prohibition does not prohibit in Kansas.

We have in every county a truancy officer, a juvenile court and an attorney, each sworn to diligently care for all delinquent children, and if more of them are found and cared for than in some liquor selling states, it is no evidence that more delinquency exists here than where liquor selling is a legitimate business.

Kansas makes room and carefully cares for all her insane, and the fact that certain records are said to show that sixteen states, twelve of which as a matter of fact are in the south, have a lower insanity rate than ours, proves nothing Climate has much to do with insanity. Extremes of heat and cold are frequent causes. Physicians tell us the exciting causes are many and varied. However, the hig fact is that eighty-one counties out of 104 in the state have no insane at all.

Few Imbeciles In Kansas.

Fifty-four counties of Kansas have no imbeciles, and ninety-six have no inebriates. Prohibition does prohibit.

Thirty-eight counties of Kansas have no inmates in their poor houses and only 600 out of the 1,750,000 people in the state, or about one in every 3,000 are paupers. Sixty-five counties have no prisoners. Only 2 per cent of the people are illiterate.

We have practically no savings banks except the postal savings banks. In these we had $655,532 on deposit on June 30, 1914. Nebraska, the state that corresponds most fully with Kansas as to all conditions, except in relation to liquor, had at that time savings deposits amounting to $358,760, ours being 30 per cent per capita more than theirs. But the farmers and laboring men own most of the $200,000,000 now on deposit in our national and state banks. There is on deposit in these banks $575 for every family of five within the borders of the state. Estimated on the comparative use of liquor in our state and in the nation, prohibition saves our people $30,000,000 yearly, or $17 for each man, woman and child within the borders of the state.

People Fight For Prohibition.

The best evidence that prohibition is a benefit is found in the fact that, after a trial of thirty-five years, the people of the state, nine out of every ten of them, are ready to fight for it. Last year the three great parties, Republican, Democratic and Progressive, declared for prohibition. Billard, anti-prohibition candidate for governor, took up the challenge, making his campaign upon the issue that prohibition is a failure. He was indorsed in his stand by approximately 10 per cent of all the electors of the state, who cast their votes for him. His issue is dead forever in Kansas.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF WOMEN TO MEET AT THE HAGUE APRIL 28-30

In response to a call from the women of Europe, the Woman's Peace Party is sending a delegation to attend the International Congress of Women at The Hague, Holland, April 28-30, and is urging women from different parts of the United States representing the important women's movements to attend. Miss Jane Addams of Chicago is the chairman of the Peace Party.

The Congress expects to present a plea for a definition of terms of peace, as follows:

"Considering that the people in each of the countries now at war believe themselves to be fighting not as aggressors, but in self-defence and for their national existence, the Congress urges the governments of the belligerent countries publicly to define the terms on which they are willing to make peace, and for this purpose immediately to call a truce."

LET US HELP FULFILL THE PROPHECY

In a recent interview, United States Senator Morris Sheppard is reported to have said that he confidently expected the Sixty-fourth Congress to pass the Sheppard-Hobson Resolution providing for National Constitutional Prohibition. "It would be impossible to overestimate the influence which the attitude of Russia and England will have upon the prohibition cause in the United States," said Senator Sheppard. "The foreign help is coming at a very opportune time and because of it I predict that during the two years of the Sixty-fourth Congress we shall pass the joint resolution looking toward a prohibition amendment and also that we shall vote liquor out of the capital of the nation."

The senator's hopes and expectations are shared by temperance workers generally, and the way to insure the fulfillment of the prophecy is to keep constantly before the people National Constitutional Prohibition as the only remedy for the great national evil. In the "Plans for May," given on the opposite page, certain methods of doing this are suggested. Institutes and county conventions offer the best possible opportunity to set in motion these plans. Through the medium of your local papers arguments in favor of nationwide prohibition can be brought to the attention of citizens of your community, and the matter of selecting candidates for Congressmen from your district who shall favor the Amendment can be agitated. Keep an envelope of clippings from the SIGNAL and other papers relating to the subject of National Prohibition, and secure the co-operation of your editors in getting the arguments presented therein to the people.

THEY WILL EDUCATE THE WOMEN!

"The women, ever since they were girls, have heard of the saloons from their mothers, the pulpits and church literature," remarked Robert J. Halle, secretary of the National Liquor League of America, recently, in an effort to explain certain victories for prohibition. "What is the result? Why, they vote the dry ticket. That is why we intend to present our side of the question to them and to plan an educational campaign. We think they will vote differently after they have studied our cause."

One cannot but feel that Mr. Halle himself is a fit subject for an educational campaign on the history of the temperance movement "After they have studied our cause the women will vote differently!" Does not Mr. Halle know that the women, yes, the same blessed mothers of whom he speaks so slightingly, for the last forty years have been studying, as have perhaps no other class of individuals, what he pleases to term his "cause." Is he ignorant of the fact that in the seventies, before "big business" or the scientists or even the churches had begun to take much interest in the abolition of the liquor evil, the Christian women of the nation entered upon some first-hand investigation and original research work—going into the places where alcoholic poison was sold and kneeling down on the dirty saw-dust floors to plead with the keepers of the places to abandon their traffic. Does he need to be reminded that the closest and most tireless students of his "cause" in the laboratory of heartbreaking personal experience have been the women—the mothers, wives and daughters of the patrons of the saloon.

"After they have studied our cause the women will vote differently!" Has it never been brought to the attention of the National Liquor League that the scientific temperance instruction laws in virtually every state have been secured through the efforts of the women of this country, and that this instruction has been given in large part by the women teachers in the public schools? Does he not realize that the men who are today so nobly championing the prohibition cause in Congress, in our state legislatures and in business are in large part the sons of mothers who upon their knees, with the open Bible before them, have studied the ungodly "cause" of the liquor interests, and have endeavored to instil in the minds of their sons and daughters a hatred of the blighting evil.

Yes, Mr. Halle is correct in his analysis of the women vote against the saloon—the mothers and the church are largely responsible for it. But we venture to predict that the National Liquor League will wait a long, long time, and every state in the Union will be white on the prohibition map before the women of today will forsake this teaching for that of the liquorites.

There was a time in the not far distant past when the instruction of the mothers and of the church on the liquor question was not treated by the press and by the public with as great respect as was due it, but today scientists of worldwide fame agree with it, financiers proclaim it as economically wise, honored officials of state and nation and even the crowned heads of Europe, by their example and their words, give it their sanction and approval.

"NO STRIKE WAS EVER WON OVER A SALOON BAR"

A strike is on among the members of the building trades in Chicago, and this is the advice that is being sent out to the different trades: "Stick to the water wagon until the present differences between the strikers and bosses are settled." "We must be extremely careful of our conduct," remarked the head of one section of the strikers. "Every form of violence may be resorted to by hot-headed and ill-advised men. At all events the public has been prepared to regard the union workers as highbinders and pirates and we want to show them that we are orderly, temperate and reasonable. No strike was ever won over a saloon bar."

And yet the liquor men insist that the saloon is the workingman's best friend and beer and liquor an indispensable requisite to his health, happiness and prosperity. Why doesn't the leader of the strikers urge the men to keep away from the grocery stores, the soda fountains, the milk depots, the restaurants and bakeries? Why attempt to hamper his "personal liberty" in respect to the one health-food—alcoholic liquor?

"A MERCILESS DISPLAY OF FACTS"

A recent temperance address by a man of national prominence was described by a local paper as "a merciless display of facts" relating to the drink evil. Logical and eloquent the discourse undoubtedly was, but that which carried conviction to those who listened to the speaker was the incontrovertible evidence presented against the liquor traffic.

The liquor interests fear nothing so much as publicity of the actual facts relating to their business. If every man and woman who wields a ballot could know the truth concerning the traffic the battle would be speedily won. In such a campaign of education every one may have a part. Though we be not endowed by nature with such oratorical power that we can sway the multitudes, and though we may be lacking in fluency of speech, we may by intelligent and tactful use of facts arouse the dormant citizen, stimulate the sluggish patriot, and start in the mind of the careless a new train of thought.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION PLANS FOR MAY

1. At the institutes and county conventions that will be held during the month of May, plan for an address and a symposium or discussion on the subject of National Constitutional Prohibition.

2. Get your local papers to publish brief arguments in favor of nationwide prohibition by Senators, Members of Congress, Governors and other prominent people.

3. Bring to the attention of the citizens in your community the necessity of electing to Congress and to your state legislature men who are outspoken for National Constitutional Prohibition.

Send to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., for the new Prohibition Map (price 15 cents each; two for 25 cents) to display at all public meetings as proof of the progress toward nationwide prohibition.

Envelopes for subscriptions to the Lillian Stevens Campaign fund have been prepared by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. These envelopes are to be furnished to the states at cost, to be sent by them free to every local union agreeing to place them in the hands of all members and as many others as possible, with the suggestion and hope that every local union will send a contribution to this Fund, averaging ten cents per member. This money should be sent through the regular W. C. T. U. channels.

Pledges should be paid to W. C. T. U. treasurer within thirty days. Contributors of one dollar or more will receive for one year the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL, the price of the paper (25 cents) being deducted before funds are divided between the State and National W. C. T. U.

The revised leaflet descriptive of the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund can be secured at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters and should be widely distributed.

NOTE. Send to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House for National Constitutional Prohibition Quiz for use in symposiums and discussions. Material for publication in local papers can be secured from back numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL.

IRON AND STEEL MILLS STRIKE BLOW AT PERSONAL LIBERTY

Iron and steel mills, which include Worth Brothers Company and Lukens Iron and Steel Company of Coatesville, Pa., have issued an edict to all their employees who live in the firms' houses that on and after the date of the order, April 2, tenants will be prohibited from having whisky or beer or any other intoxicating drink delivered to their homes. The Lukens firm is said to have been insisting on such an order for a number of years. When an employee leases a house from the firm he agrees not to receive any "wet" goods. It is a matter entirely with the tenants whether they desire to remain in the companies' houses, and by violating the lease they must seek other quarters. Keeping strong drink away from the houses in which the employees reside is regarded as "safety first."

AMONG THE STATES

Montana

Under a new law which went into effect April 1, all saloons must close at midnight and are not permitted to open until eight o'clock in the morning. All race-betting rooms are closed and betting on horse races is no longer allowed in the state.

Pennsylvania

Over one hundred of the leading physicians and surgeons of the city of Philadelphia have signed a petition to the members of the Pennsylvania legislature, asking that they vote for the county option bill, "in the interest of health, morals and protection of the present and future citizens of the commonwealth."

Michigan

The Morford bill to prohibit the use of cigarets by minors in Michigan has been signed by Governor Ferris. The finding of cigarets upon the person of any minor makes him subject to penalty, as are any dealers who sell to him.

A POCKETBOOK CONVERSION

In expressing his approval to a representative of the Philadelphia North American of Hon. Lloyd George's recent statements concerning drink and efficiency, Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, told the following incident:

"That reminds me of a recent experience. When I went down to North Carolina to attend the Democratic state convention I ran across a friend who informed me he intended to offer a prohibition platform plank in the convention.

"'Why, you were leading the fight against such a plank two years ago,' I protested.

"'Yes, I know it,' he replied; 'but since then I have purchased four cotton mills.'

"This man told me that drinking by employes of his cotton mills cost him from one to two days' labor per week per man. He was converted when his pocket nerve was touched."

HOTEL BUSINESS IS GOOD IN DRY TOWN

That the hotel business of Des Moines has not suffered as a result of the city barring the sale of intoxicants was the universal verdict of men engaged in this line of business, according to inquiries made by a reporter for one of the papers of the city after a six weeks' trial of the new law. Said one proprietor, "The hotel business is not demoralized," and he ventured the prophecy that the business will aggregate as much in Des Moines at the end of this year as it has any past year.

"I have not noticed any falling away of the class of commercial travelers who lay over Saturday and Sunday in the city," said another. "I'd hate to think that the traveling men who come to my hotel, all of whom are my personal friends, come to Des Moines just for booze."

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

MEDITATION CORNER

Pray! for earth has many a need.
Pray! for prayer is vital deed.
Pray! for God in heaven hears.
Pray! for prayer will move the spheres.
Pray! for praying leads to peace.
Pray! for praying gives release.
Pray! for prayer is never lost.
Pray! for prayer well pays its cost.
Pray! for prayer is always power.
Pray! for every prayer's a flower.
Pray! for prayer the Saviour finds.
Pray! for prayer creation binds.
Pray! for every prayer is gold.
Pray! for prayer is joy untold.
Pray! for praying frees from care.
Pray! for Jesus joins your prayer.

"The Psalm of Life" for each temperance worker should find its keynote in the love of God. Not until God's love attunes a poor human heart can the harmonies of heaven play upon its sensitive strings. Not until then can its music comfort the sad, cheer the toiler, and encourage the weak and the despairing. Not until then will the hosts of God's children rally to its clarion call for a victorious campaign to annihilate the liquor traffic.

The Christian rule for us all in our daily occupation is to do every piece of work not merely so that it will look well done, but so that it will be well done. For we are God's servants, and God sees things, not as they seem to be, but as they are.—William R. Richards.

Christ's work is not for the finger-tips. It is not a pastime. It is a warfare that demands the grit and grip of all our strength.—Samuel Chadwick.

My field may be stony or swampy, my plough may be poor, my strength small, the weather bad; but if "heartily, as to the Lord," I do the best I can and look not back, but keep right on, I am no failure.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

The Christian doctrine of immortality is not, properly speaking, an expectation of another life after death; it is a conviction of the deathlessness of life.—Rockwell H. Potter.

DELAWARE'S PROHIBITION OUTLOOK

"To prove prohibition has made things better in Sussex county, Dela., one has only to look at the county jail at Georgetown. This jail is without a prisoner, and Sheriff Jacob West is idle, the turnkey is on his vacation, chickens are roosting in the cells and the jail yard will probably be planted in early corn, unless another applicant appears. The lone prisoner, Elwood Armstrong, who was afraid to stay by himself, was paroled for two years to C. S. Richards, of Georgetown, after having confessed to stealing five dozen eggs." This testimony to the effect of prohibition appears in one of the newspapers of Sussex county.

In this connection it is interesting to note that statewide prohibition is becoming more and more an issue of importance in the minds of Delaware voters, and although the legislature this year failed to pass the statewide bill, a correspondent reports that "Delaware is aroused as never before and sees the folly of sending men to the legislature who are not tested, proved or pledged to good works. Victory is in the air and it is coming to Delaware." On the occasion of the hearing on the prohibition bill in the legislature Mrs. Boole, vice-president-at-large of the National W. C. T. U. and president of the New York state W. C. T. U., Mrs. Lena Messick, president of the Delaware union, temperance forces in large numbers and representative men from town, county and state and business and professional men were present. Delaware white ribboners are not discouraged. They have new state songs and they are singing them to good purpose. Mrs. Mary Harris Armor delivered an address in Dover on March 23 to a large and appreciative audience, a large part of which were men.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. HANNAH BARNES, Swartwood, N. Y., a charter member of the local union. Although eighty-five years of age at the time of death, she was treasurer of the union and superintendent of the Evangelistic department.

MRS. ANGIE ENNIS, sister of Mrs. Hannah Barnes, and also a member of the Swartwood union, one year ago having transferred her membership from Ithaca, N. Y. Although seventy-nine years of age, she was a faithful and active member of the W. C. T. U. The home-going of Mrs. Ennis occurred not long after her sister, Mrs. Barnes, had passed to the better land.

DR. IRVING D. VAN VALKENBURG, husband of Mrs. Ida Van Valkenburg, New York state lecturer, and pastor of the Methodist church of Johnstown. The church of which he was pastor was in the midst of a great revival, and as Dr. Van Valkenburg stepped to the platform to make some announcements he sank to the floor unconscious, and died three days later.

MRS. POLLY SHAW, Taberg, N. Y., a beloved and faithful member of the local union.

MRS. H. S. KIDDER, formerly of Evanston, Ill., during recent years of Ocean Grove, N. J. Mrs. Kidder, who at the time of her promotion was in her ninety-ninth year, was one of the pioneer white ribboners of Evanston, for many years holding the office of president of the Evanston W. C. T. U. Her hospitable home, always open to white ribboners, is referred to by Frances Willard in "A Classic Town," in these words: "It was of incalculable benefit to us, whose opinions were then forming, that the Kidder home, with its large library lined with well-filled bookcases, its roomy parlors and its broad piazza on which we delighted to promenade when summer nights were fair and sweet, brought to our young hearts the conception of Christ and Christians as a social force. From some of our hearts, at least, the heavenly vision has never faded, and no 'society' after the stratified regulation pattern has ever had one charm for us since then."

To the last of her earthly life Mrs. Kidder was deeply interested in everything relating to the W. C. T. U. and her birthday was always remembered with some greeting of affection from her white ribbon comrades.

To Miss Margaret J. Bilz, National W. C. T. U. organizer and lecturer, has come a sad loss in the home-going of her mother, Mrs. Aloys Bilz, on March 25. Mrs. Bilz is greatly mourned by a large circle of friends and as a mark of respect to her who for fifty of her seventy-six years had been a foremost citizen of Spring Lake, Mich., the flag on the city hall was at half mast and the business houses of the city were closed during the time of the last ceremonies. The sympathy of white ribboners is extended to Miss Bilz.

THE WAY OUT

Change of Food Brought Success and Happiness

An ambitious but delicate girl, after failing to go through school on account of nervousness and hysteria, found in Grape-Nuts the only thing that seemed to build her up and furnish her the peace of health.

"From infancy," she says, "I have not been strong. Being ambitious to learn at any cost I finally got to the High School, but soon had to abandon my studies on account of nervous prostration and hysteria.

"My food did not agree with me, and I grew thin and despondent. I could not enjoy the simplest social affair for I suffered constantly from nervousness in spite of all sorts of medicines.

"This wretched condition continued until I became interested in the letters of those who had cases like mine and who were being helped by eating Grape-Nuts.

"I had little faith, but procured a pkg. and after the first dish I experienced a peculiar satisfied feeling that I had never gained from any ordinary food. I slept and rested better that night and in a few days began to grow stronger.

"I had a new feeling of peace and restfulness. In a few weeks, to my great joy, the headaches and nervousness left me and life became bright and hopeful. I resumed my studies and later taught ten months with ease—using Grape-Nuts every day. I am now the mistress of a happy home, and the old weakness has never returned."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

WAITING FOR FATHER

FROM THE NOTE-BOOK OF A PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHER

MRS. F. M. HOWARD, Clinton, Ia.

Miss Baker, a teacher in the public schools, drew her fur collar closer as she passed along the dingy street. It was a raw, sleety day, with a wind blowing which carried the chill to one's very marrow. The children had been dull and inattentive, and life itself seemed a stormy, discouraging thing scarcely worth the living.

To teach in this poor neighborhood was a new experience to Miss Baker, for her work hitherto had been among the children of the well-to-do, but circumstances quite beyond her control had placed her here. It was quite pitiful to see how the children clung about her with childish devotion. Every curl of her hair, her pretty necklaces, the tidy gowns she wore all seemed to them so far above the usual that they could only bow in adoration before her superior shrine, and the dirtiest began insensibly to desire cleanliness, to come with clean hands and faces into the presence of "teacher," who was always so immaculately clean.

"Teacher, she comes by der washing all der time," explained one little boy to his mother, as he came to her with a little wad of washrag in his grimy hand for assistance. "She don't like us to come by school dirty alretty."

It was encouraging to note these mute evidences of influence, but there were times when the sordid lives, the unwholesome locality grated upon Miss Baker's nerves like a rasping saw, and she hurried along in the growing dusk with a sense of distaste akin to fear as saloon doors opened, and men came out with red, brutal faces and went on their uncertain ways.

Before the last saloon on her route a little lad, one of her own flock, stood shivering, his bare hands tucked into the shallow pockets of his thin, shabby coat, his little toes showing through a hole in both shoes and stockings, as he danced from one foot to the other in a vain attempt to keep warm.

"Why, Max dear, why are you standing here?" demanded the teacher. "Run right along home and get warm, child—you will freeze."

"Please, ma'am, I'm waiting for father. We're going down town to get me some new shoes, and when he went in here he told me to wait and he'd be out in a minute."

Evidently the minute was long past, for the child's teeth were chattering and he seemed on the verge of a serious chill. The teacher forgot her own discomfort in her disgust. Just then a big man came out wiping his lips. "There he is, teacher. There's father!" cried the little boy joyfully.

"Aren't you ashamed of yourself leaving a child as thinly clad as this, to wait while you drink in a saloon?" sprang from Miss Baker's lips almost before she realized it. She was bristling up at the big man like an indignant sparrow.

"Guess it's my own young one," grumbled the man crossly. He had imbibed just enough to be surly.

"That's just the very reason you should take care of him instead of drinking up your money in saloons," retorted Miss Baker. "I hope you haven't drank up his shoes."

"Well, I haven't, then, if it's any of your business. Come along, Max."

The incident made Miss Baker so righteously warm that the rest of the way she did not mind in the least the sleet or the cold. Max was one of her adorers who hung on her words, and by a touching anxiety to be good, tried to show "teacher" by his perfect obedience the love which filled his little heart almost to bursting. Every red apple he could get hold of he carried to her instead of eating it himself, and the sticky bits of candy which came out of his dirty pockets were more touching than tempting.

"Great teacher, that is, sassing me like that," glowered the man, stalking along at such a pace that the little boy had to run to keep up.

"Teacher's good. She don't tell nothin' but what's true," shrilled the child loyally.

"What do you know about it? You'd better shut up or you won't get no shoes." It looked as if Max might not get the new covering for his feet, in any case, as the man looked in thirstily at every saloon they passed, the little boy meanwhile hanging to his hand and dragging him along toward the shoe shop as well as his slight strength would allow.

The rush of clean, sweet-smelling air in the store was most refreshing and in its warmth the father passed on to a drowsy, but more reasonable phase of drunkenness. "I say, Franz, it's a bitter night for a little chap to be out in shoes like that. Why his feet are nearly frozen," said the humane dealer as he took off Max's wet stockings and chafed the cold purple feet with his warm hands. The rubbing caused the child such exquisite pain that the tears began to ooze slowly from his eyes, and the father, for the first time, seemed to come to an awakening sense of his suffering. "Don't cry, Max. The new shoes will feel good right away soon."

"It hurts so." The little boy bravely swallowed a sob.

"No wonder it hurts," said the dealer. "Franz, you should have carried the child if those were all the shoes he had."

"Father stayed in the sa—," Max began, but a threatening look from his father nipped the unlucky confidence in the bud, though not before the quick-eared dealer had heard and understood.

"You'd better keep on and get the boy a warm suit of clothes. His stockings are in rags, and his coat is threadbare. Brace up, man. You earn good wages, and if you would keep your money in your own pocket instead of—you know where—you would keep your family in comfort. There is no need of this bright little fellow suffering like this."

"My teacher said she'd get me some shoes if father couldn't." The pain was easing now and Max's face took on an adoring smile, at the thought of "teacher" and her kindness to him.

"Well, I guess not yet!" exclaimed the father; "I reckon they don't no charity folks buy clothes for my young ones."

"Then you'd better attend to it yourself. You know how."

Sure enough, the father did know how. In the time he had been in the one saloon he had spent the price of new, warm stockings, and if he had not suddenly remembered Max standing outside, the price of the shoes would have followed. Some of the keen injustice of it all filtered down into his brain before the shoes were fitted and paid for, and as he and Max went out his head was held higher than usual, and an expression had stolen into his face which quite transformed it.

"See, teacher, father got me all new clothes," beamed Max the next morning, standing proudly before her, the new shoes sticking out with an aggressive bid for notice.

"Well, isn't that fine?" admired Miss Baker with a happy heart. The thought of the patient little boy "waiting for father" had lain on her heart all night. "Such a lovely new suit should hold the very best little boy in school today; shouldn't it?"

"Yes, teacher, I'll be gooder as ever I was before. Father he said you was all right after we got home last night, and mother was so glad."

The artless confidence cheered the teacher's heart, for she had been afraid she had been unwise. Not being a trained worker she had little experience in soul ministry, and she feared her zeal might have been all wrong, doing harm instead of good. She had made some few attempts at visiting in the homes of her children, but her modesty would not permit her to think they had been very successful.

In a large number of homes she knew drink to be the prime cause of poverty and trouble. She saw the children going in and out of saloons with tin pails, and realized that more beer was to be found in many families than food or clothing. From one of these homes came a lovely, sweet-faced child whose garments barely hung on her by precarious pins or in gaping untidiness. Too small to care for herself, she came to school day after day, an offense to the eyes of the neater children, while the mother kept herself in a half drunken stupor. One of "teacher's" visits had been to this home, and she never knew upon what string of influence she had chanced to play, but certain it was that the little girl had been coming to school lately with hooks and eyes, buttons and buttonholes on her clothes, and for a whole term the pretty hair was as neatly curled and cared for as one could ask.

Who can guess what subtle chord may be struck in a soul's harmony by a chance word of praise, sympathy, or even sometimes of blame. The little lad's father needed just the sharp words he had heard to rouse him from his selfish indulgence, and he had done more thinking since than he had done in years before.

"I've been thinkin', Hulda, that we should come by a little place of our own soon," he said one night when he came home from the works earlier than usual. "The foreman he raise my wages today, since I stopped the drink alretty. He says a steady hand vas wort so much the more to him."

"O Franz, I am so glad. Now we can keep Max in good clothes all der time. Teacher vas here today, and she sayed Max vas one of the very best and brightest she had. She sayed some day we would be so proud of him as never vas. There is going to be some speakin's at the last day, and she vants you and me should come and hear Max say his piece."

Franz shook his head. "Teacher's got a mad on me I reckon," he said soberly. "She won't want a big, ugly feller like me to come to her doin's, and I don't blame her none. She seen me comin' out of a saloon onct."

"But she knows you don't go no more, for she told me so, and how happy and glad it made her to know that Max has a father alretty he can be proud of."

When the last day came Max was dressed in a beautiful new suit, with buttons which made him the envy of the school, and in the little audience sat the parents, beaming with joy and pride.

LADDIE

MRS. J. P. NYE, Shenandoah, Ia.

The dogs of war are loose,
O, soul! What have I done?
They're crushing out his life,
Their prey—it is my son!

O, soul! my soul! before the bar,
Answer the charge to-day—
A man was brought into the world
For men to slay!

How tenderly I smoothed the way
For Laddie's feet—
How could I know the path led on
This hell to meet!

Laddie, when you were ill, I would not let you go;
I bathed your fevered brow with tears of love, your
Chilling limbs I rubbed with hands that would not tire,
I ate not, slept not, yielded not one inch to that grim
Reaper who would take my flower of life and love and beauty.
Part of me, I would not let you go! How could I know
The path led on this hell to meet?
O, soul! I fought so hard his life to save!
Upon my knees I gripped the throne of God,
That He would leave my darling, cool the fevered brow,
Bid him to look once more at me and smile! How could I know
The path led on this ghastly thing to meet?

How proud I was! My boy—a man! So noble, perfect, good!
I thought some fair young girl would claim him from my hand—
My rival! (Heart of mine, how cold you were, when thought Compelled and you must greet!) O, soul, how could I know
The path led on this hell to meet?

Laddie, I hear you call, not as you used to call, when hurt,
And mother was not near, but writhing, groaning, dying,
On the wind it comes, the call to save, to help, to yield
My life again, that he might live and love, and leave
A splendid heritage of manly virtue to those sons who Proud would be to call him father. I hear you call!
The roar of cannon, burst of shell, the thunder of the hour,
Drowns not the voice I love, the faint, far voice
That's calling me, entreating me to help! The voice of one
Whose soul is shocked and mocked in death by war's alarms!
O, soul! had I but known the path led on to this,
I would have laid us down, my lad and me, and sung us both
To sleep, that we might cross together where 'tis endless day,
And war can never be!

I'll give no more, high heaven record the vow! No part of me
Shall ever live again to meet the scourge of war, the shot,
The shell, the curse of life, the wreck complete,
That Laddie's meeting now! O, soul! my soul! Fly fast and Far, meet his! Together we must go that I may plead, entreat,—
I did not know the path led on this hell to meet!

Laddie, I'm on my knees!
My soul has gone astray!
I'm calling down the wrath of heaven,
On men to-day.

HOW A DOG WON THE DAY

DAISY MAY TWORT, Haverhill, Mass.

For months the temperance forces of Trafton had been bending their energies to carry the town for no-license. In this work the Loyal Temperance Legion, of which Joey Braeburn and Gladys Dayton were leading members, had borne an active part. It was because of this that Mr. Braeburn, realizing the interest the children felt in the outcome of the struggle, remarked, as he arose from the breakfast table on the morning of election day, "We may not win this time, but there are other chances coming, so we must not be discouraged, if we do lose. I all but persuaded Jack Herrick to cast his vote on our side. If we could get him, he would be a powerful ally."

"Better say a big help," suggested Neal, Joey's elder brother. "Joey might understand you more easily."

"Why would Mr. Herrick be a powerful ally, father?" asked Joey. He thought "ally" sounded much grander than help. Besides, he wished to show that he could use the word quite as well as Neal could.

"Mr. Herrick employs a large number of men in his mill," explained Mr. Braeburn. "Many of these he could influence to vote on our side. I fear, however, we can't get him this time; but we shall have one new ally." Joey knew his father was thinking of Neal who would vote for the first time this year.

"Yes, you may count on me when you get Herrick's support," Neal made answer. "What do you say, Towser?" This last to the great, black dog that sat up as close to Joey's chair as was possible.

"Oh! Towser is a temperance dog," declared Mr. Braeburn as he shook himself into his coat. Then he hastened away to work. He had been gone but a short time when a ring at the bell sent Joey scurrying into the front hall.

"It was Mr. Dayton," he announced when he came back. "What do you think, mother? Gladys has the measles, and wishes me to find some one to wear her badge." Joey's heart was very heavy. How could they expect to win with Gladys ill? It had been her faith which had kept them from growing discouraged long ago. "We'll have to find a grown-up, for the children all have badges. We are going to wear them today," explained Joey as he displayed a bit of white ribbon bearing the message, "Vote No."

"Perhaps Mr. Peel would wear it," suggested Mrs. Braeburn. "You will have time to go over there before school. Better take Towser along for a run."

Acting upon his mother's advice, Joey set off hopefully with his dog close at his heels. Mr. Peel, however, was not sure that he should vote "no" this year. "It doesn't amount to much," he declared while Breton just across the river goes "yes" every time.

"Our minister says we are responsible for keeping our own town clean, if Breton does vote the other way," Joey replied. But Mr. Peel would not take the badge, nor would his son, Dake, so Joey turned towards Miss Brown who kept the bakery on the corner. Miss Brown was very kind but told Joey frankly that wearing the badge might hurt her trade. From the bakery, Joey went to the post-office, but the good-natured clerk at the stamp window had no use for the temperance badge, while the policeman whose beat ended at the brick house where Mr. Herrick, the mill owner lived, frowned upon Joey and bade him be done with "such nonsense."

"What shall we do, Towser?" cried the disappointed boy. "I don't know any one else to ask, and it must be almost school time."

"Bow-wow, Bow-wow!" barked Towser, and to Joey it sounded as if the dog would say: "Try me! Try me!" He looked down thoughtfully at his pet. "I wonder if it would show on you. Anyhow, we could try it." Just as Joey had finished tying the badge around the dog's soft, black neck, Mr. Herrick came out of the brick house, and, seeing the two, stopped to speak to them.

"Bow-wow," barked Towser as if he would say, "Please look at my badge." "So you are a temperance dog," the mill owner said laughingly.

"That is Gladys Dayton's badge," explained Joey. "She is sick with the measles, so I had to find some one to wear it for her. I asked Mr. Peel and Dake, and Miss Brown at the bakery, and Mr. Deane at the post-office and Mr. Mears, the policeman, and none of them would wear it, so Towser had to. You see it does show on him."

Mr. Herrick did not laugh again but patted Towser kindly. "So it is left to you, old dog, to defend the right." The busy man hurried on across the street which led to his mill. He had gone but a few steps, however, when he turned and called to Joey: "If Towser doesn't mind I think I will take that badge. I do not like to be outdone by a dog."

"O Mr. Herrick! And will you vote on our side?" cried Joey in happy surprise.

"I could hardly do otherwise while wearing this ribbon," the mill owner replied as he pinned the badge upon his coat.

The two Young Campaigners pictured above sang at ten different rallies and conventions held during the campaign in Ohio last fall. They are Pauline and Treva Marita Powell, children of Mrs. Myrta Stier Powell, associate superintendent of the department of Mothers' Meetings for Ohio. Marita, aged four, accompanied a flying squad over the county the day before election carrying a banner which read. "My papa will vote dry for my sake. Will your papa vote dry for your sake?"

WAITING FOR FATHER

tons Max did himself credit, for wasn't father there, bursting with pride, and mother and "teacher" expecting him to do his very best?

Miss Baker, weary but happy, went home with a satisfied feeling in her heart. True, her work would only appear as statistics before the public—so many "tardies," "truants none"—for the children would have come to their beloved school Saturdays and Sundays if they had been permitted—"regular attendance," "classes promoted"—all a very ordinary little record of the routine of primer grade work which would create no especial ripple of interest in the minds of those who read it, if indeed any did, but under it all ran a tide of living meaning which would flow on into eternity.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Mrs. Maria C. Weed, National lecturer, was the leader of the Jo Daviess county (Ill.) institute held at Warren, March 26. A discussion of local conditions, a praise service by Rev. Milo Moore, an address by Rev. Clarence Miller on "The Effect of the European War on Prohibition," an excellent paper on the drug habit by Dr. Downing, and a lecture in the evening by Mrs. Weed were some of the good things the program provided.

The pioneer union of Oklahoma, that of East Guthrie, organized by Mrs. Emma Miller in 1889, selected for its April meeting the topic "Our Badge, The White Ribbon." The emphasis was placed on the faithful wearing of the white ribbon, and the program was taken from various numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL. The meeting proved a most enthusiastic one.

Mrs. Elizabeth M. Haughton, National evangelist, who has been a resident of California for ten months, serving for seven months in active campaign work and three months as hostess at the exhibit of the Southern California W. C. T. U. at the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego, removed the latter part of March to Barstow, Texas, where she will remain for some time visiting her children and grandchildren.

In just one year's time the W. C. T. U. of Crookston, Minn., known as one of the "baby unions" because of its short existence as an organization, has gained a membership of 115. It is now conducting ten departments of work with enthusiasm and thoroughness and has organized an L. T. L. of ninety members and a Y. P. B. It has held six evangelistic meetings and other gatherings of a social nature. This union, of which Mrs. Thea Lacer is president, aims to reach the 200 mark by October 1. From the time it came into the W. C. T. U. world this "baby union" has given evidence of healthy growth and activity.

On April 15, the Taberg (N. Y.) union will celebrate with appropriate exercises its nineteenth birthday. A dime social in connection with the Willard Memorial Fund Day meeting of this union was an interesting occasion and netted a considerable amount.

14-91 SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD N. J.

The thirty-eighth annual convention of the Sixth district (Mich.) W. C. T. U. (Mrs. Jennie E. Carley, president,) was held in Fenton recently, seventy-six voting delegates and many visitors being in attendance at the two-day session. Two state officers, Mrs. E. L. Calkins, president, and Mrs. Myrta Lockwood, recording secretary, and Mrs. M. E. Butler, state superintendent of Medal Contests, were present and contributed much to the success of the meetings. The Sixth is the banner district of the state and includes sixty unions, with a membership of 2,216. The former officers were re-elected. This meeting was held just prior to the April local option election, at which Genesee county signified its desire for a continuation of its successful dry policy.

The Eckington union of Washington, D. C., has inaugurated a series of silver medal contests in the public schools of its vicinity, the second union in the District to undertake this work with the sanction of the Parent-Teacher Association. This union also held a double silver contest March 26, at which Miss Elizabeth Faunce ably recited "A Protracted Meeting," and Lyle Ohlander was awarded a special medal in a piano contest. On March 31 the Brookland union held a double silver contest, at which Mrs. G. L. Clayton won the matron's medal and six-year-old Lucretia Hanson was awarded the medal for her delivery of the poem, "Ma Can't Vote."

Greens in profusion, shamrock, Irish flags and emblems of the patron saint of old Ireland were the decorations used for a St. Patrick's tea by the white ribboners of Skagway in faraway Alaska. Even the globe encircled with white ribbon, which occupied a place of prominence, bore a tiny knot of green. The occasion was a most interesting one and temperance workers met with enthusiasm for a discussion of the tasks to be accomplished during the coming months. A silver offering amounting to over thirty dollars received at this time will be used toward the expenses of the first territorial W. C. T. U. convention, which will be held in Skagway in May.

The interesting temperance meeting in Loram Hall, Ellenburg Depot, N. Y., on Sunday evening, March 29, received favorable comment from all attendants. The song, "Our Slogan," the New York state song, and the handkerchief drill by the children were enthusiastically applauded.

Ling, state superintendent of the department for Pennsylvania, all communications intended for Mrs. Ling should be sent direct to Mrs. Black.

TEXAS TO THE FRONT

Special Correspondence

There is great rejoicing over our new compulsory education law and the way in which it was secured. Mrs. Woods, the wife of the speaker of the house, is directly responsible for its enactment. Many years ago as a teacher she saw the need for such a law and began securing data and making sentiment. The pen with which our "anti" governor signed the bill has been made into a brooch and presented to Mrs. Woods.

Captain Richmond Hobson spoke recently in Fort Worth, Texas, to crowded houses. His speeches were declared by some the finest ever heard. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, the well known suffragist, spoke later in the city, under the auspices of the Suffrage association, of which many of our W. C. T. U. women are members. Mrs. Shaw has spoken in several cities in Texas.

Fort Worth (Central) W. C. T. U. in connection with a "dues social," held a Neal Dow memorial service in St. Paul's Methodist church, Mrs. W. P. Lane presiding. A fine program was rendered. The principal feature was a splendid lecture by Rev. Atticus Webb, who gave startling facts and figures regarding the injurious effects of alcohol upon the body.

Dallas W. C. T. U. sent out little silk bags containing an invitation in verse to "one's own birthday party." Everybody brought as many pennies as he or she was years old.

Austin W. C. T. U. recently held a bazaar which netted enough to pay the expenses of its delegates to the state convention. The unions are electing delegates and preparing for the best state meeting in our history.

A W. C. T. U. woman, Mrs. George Niess, who was for three years a missionary in India, conducted the regular meeting for the old ladies at "Cumberland Rest," Fort Worth. Her hearers were delighted with the story of her experiences.

The Fourth district, of which Mrs. Goff has been for years president, held a meeting in Greenville which was pronounced "the best ever." Mrs. J. M. Massay is the new president. Some fine papers were read and discussed. Among the resolutions was one against extravagance and immodesty in dress.

DO WE NEED A WAR TO TEACH US A LESSON?

The crisis in Great Britain destroys another argument for rum. Driven from every other vantage ground, its advocates intrench themselves behind the fact that the traffic yields vast money returns to the government. Abolish liquor, they warn us, and you will be deprived of revenues without which the conduct of public affairs would put a crushing burden upon the people.

As to this, let the peril of England answer. Let the supporters of the liquor interests count up the taxes they have paid for the last hundred years, and weigh them against a deadened patriotism and a productive capacity destroyed—against defeat chargeable to industrial inefficiency and booze.

Does the United States need a war to teach it a lesson?—North American of Philadelphia.

HOW A DOG WON THE DAY

"O Towser, you dear old dog, you are the smartest of us all, for you have won the 'powerful ally'; and Neal, too, will vote right now. Come, let's go and tell mother."

Joey added gravely as they turned homeward: "It wouldn't be half so hard to make things go as they should, if every one was as glad to help as you are, Towser." The great, black dog held up his head and barked proudly.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE LADY in each town to distribute free circulars and take orders for concentrated flavoring in tubes. Permanent position. J. S. Ziegler Co., 7 G East Harrison, Chicago.

ALCOHOL!

Many Leading Physicians Do Not Prescribe Alcoholic Liquors

Alcohol poisons the blood, arrests the development of the corpuscles, and hastens their decay.—Prof. Virchow, M. D.

I have found no case of disease and no emergency arising from accidents that I could not treat more successfully without any form of fermented or distilled liquors, than with such.—Dr. Nathan S. Davis, M. D.

I feel that we are employing a dangerous remedy when we use alcohol.—J. H. Musser, M. D., Philadelphia, Pa.

Other things being equal, the less alcoholic liquors are resorted to, the better the chances for the patient's recovery. Alcohol does not nourish, but pulls down; does not stimulate, but depresses; does not strengthen, but excites and exhausts.—Dr. Norman Kerr, England, President of the Society for the Study of Inebriety.

Alcohol is a narcotic poison of which the pernicious effects are to be seen on every hand.—G. Sims Woodhead, M. D., F. R. S. E., Professor of Pathology, University of Cambridge, England.

Alcohol cannot be included among food substances. It is impossible to determine how small a quantity of alcohol will not have injurious effects.

Alcohol undermines the powers of resistance to sickness, so that the apparently quite temperate drinker succumbs to a lung inflammation, or an infectious disease which the sound, normal body easily overcomes.

Alcohol has only one effect on the brain and that a paralyzing one.—Commission appointed by the Russian Society for the Protection of Public Health.

British Cabinet Will Leave the Liquor Question to Parliament

According to reports received from London, Premier Asquith has announced that the British cabinet will take no action to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors. After several conferences the ministry has decided to leave the question to the people, through their representatives in Parliament.

It is said to be the general expectation in London that the outcome of the parliamentary debate will be either total prohibition for two years or a milder regulation permitting traffic in light beers.

While awaiting the decision of the government on the drink question, efforts are being made throughout the country to encourage total abstinence. Rev. F. B. Meyer, the noted divine and writer, is asking each of the 10,000 Free Church ministers to invite the members of their congregation to sign the King's pledge, thus following the example of the King, Lord Kitchener and other crown ministers in abstaining from drinking alcohol at least until the close of the war.
